Proceedings of the Inaugural Ceremony of the Bengal Legislative Council on the 1st February, 1921.

THE Council was assembled at the Town Hall, Calcutta, at 11 A.M. on the 1st February, 1921, all the members being present except six.

At 10-45 A.M. His Excellency the Governor of Bengal entered the Council Chamber in State accompanied by the Hon'ble the President and took his seat on the dais.

At 10-55 A.M. Field-Marshal His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught entered the Council Chamber in State

Field-Marshal HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS the DUKE of CONNAUGHT took his seat on the throne

His Excellency the Governor's address.

HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR of BENGAL (the Earl of Ronaldshay): YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS, We deeply appreciate and are profoundly grateful for your presence here to-day for the purpose of inaugurating the new constitution conferred by Parliament upon the people of this Presidency. And we see in this gracious act yet one more signal proof—if proof, indeed, were needed, of the close and unceasing personal interest taken by His Gracious Majesty the King-Emperor and his Royal House in all that appertains to the welfare and progress of the people of his Indian Empire. The occasion is an historic one and will for all time stand out as an arresting finger-post upon the road leading to that goal towards which India is eagerly travelling. Sir, when in this connection we speak in the language of metaphor of a goal towards which we are travelling, the picture which forms itself upon the screen of our consciousness is that of some splendid edifice rising through the haze of distance upon the horizon and shaping itself in ever clearer outline to our gaze as we travel towards it along a broad highway. We are, perhaps, apt to overlook the difference which exists between distance in time and distance in space. In the evolution of a nation, though the goal may be pictured, the gulf to be bridged before we reach it is one of time and not one of space, and every inch of the road thither has still, therefore, to be made. The survey may have been carried out and the direction posts set up, but the actual road must be builded day by day by the nation itself as it moves forward on its onward course, and upon those who lead the nation rests the responsibility for its safe construction. The responsibility is one not to be lightly assumed, for upon the wise discharge of it hangs the fate of countless numbers of their fellowmen. It is comparable to that of the Generals of an Army who, though provided by their expert advisers with a safe survey of the ground to be traversed, are yet tempted to adopt a line of advance, apparently more direct but fraught with dangers to which they wilfully close their eyes. Wisdom and experience urge one course, impetuosity, ill-directed enthusiasm, possibly other motives as well, urge the other. The test of their fitness to be entrusted with responsibility lies in their choice. Would the Army which puts its trust in them, or would posterity forgive them if choosing latefully and rashly, they were to lead it into an engulfing quicksand of tribulation and disaster?

Sir, those who are at once the representatives and the leaders of the people who are assembled here to-day have made their choice. They have accepted the alignment marked out for them along solid ground. And the task which now lies before them is the actual construction of the road. No easy one but a great and worthy one, and one moreover in which the rapidity with which it is completed, will be commensurate with the nature of the workmanship put in. All the greater is the care required on account of the novelty of some of the tools now being placed for the first time in the hands of those to whom the work has been committed.

It is easy to give concrete illustration of this latter statement. For the vast majority of those who now exercise it, the franchise is a hitherto untried implement. Prior to this the members of the Legislature have been nominated thereto or elected by strictly circumscribed electorates. Generally speaking the vote has been the prerogative of a limited number of persons enjoyed by reasons of the special position which they occupied, such as membership of a Municipal or District Board or of a special Association, such as a Chamber of Commerce or the University Senate, or of a special community, such as the great landholders of the Presidency. With such elections the mass of the people have had no concern. And the total number of electors of all classes who have had any share in returning members to the Legislative Council of the past has not exceeded 12,000. As compared with this, the persons entitled to return members to the Legislative Council which meets for the first time to-day, number approximately one million twenty thousand—a sufficiently dramatic indication of the extent to which power has been conferred upon the people. Equally significant is the revolution wrought in the composition and character of the Council itself. The former Council consisted of 53 members; the present Council of 139. Of the former body 28 members only, or a bare majority were elected, of the total of the present body 113 or 81 per cent. Of the former body a little over one-third were officials; of the present body 13 per cent. only. Such figures speak for themselves. But the immensity of the stride which has been taken towards the goal of responsible self-government cannot be fully appreciated without a reference to the complete change which has simultaneously been effected in the Executive Government. In place of an Executive consisting, apart from the Governor, of two European officials and one Indian non-official gentleman, there has now been established an Executive of two European officials and five Indian non-official gentlemen; in other words, the Indian element in the Executive Government of the country has been converted from a permanent minority to a permanent and overwhelming majority. Further, of the five Indian Members of the Government, three are elected Members of this Council, and in respect of the subjects which they administer including such vitally important matters as Local Self-Government, Public Health, Medical Administration, Education, Agriculture, the development of Industries, the Administration of Excise and of Public Works, stand vis-a-vis the Council in a position which, if not wholly identical with, is at least analogous to, that of Members of the Cabinet to the Parliament of Great Britain. These are momentous changes the mere enumeration of which is, perhaps, sufficient to justify the emphasis which I have laid upon the necessity for the exercise of extreme care in the building of every successive foot of the road which is the task which now awaits us. My personal experience of the high devotion to duty and the broad and sympathetic vision of the officials with whom I am proud to have been associated in the Government of Bengal during the past four years; of the intellectual ability, the courtesy and the warm-hearted generosity of spirit of the people of Bengal, and of the disinterested advice and the assistance which I have invariably received from the non-official members of my own community, encourage me to regard the future with high hope. The fact that this Council meets to-day in the second city in the whole vast Empire over which His Majesty holds sway, bears striking testimony to the nature of the contribution which the representatives of the European community can make to the common stock of our available resources. And, indeed, it would be difficult to conceive of a more effective combination of qualities than those of the two great communities now ranged side by side—the shrewd business acumen of the one and the inspired idealism of the other. One thing only is necessary to render operative in this unique combination its tremendous potentialities—the will to succeed. It is given to every man to contribute something towards this, the supreme necessity of the day, the creating of a will to co-operate—a will to succeed. And for myself I joyfully dedicate the remainder of my term of service in Bengal to the furtherance of a steadily growing partnership between the Bengali and British races, and offer the hand of help and friendship to all who, inspired by a common purpose—the orderly progress of this land towards its appointed destiny—are prepared to work wholeheartedly for the effacement of all obstacles standing in the way of cordial co-operation in the supreme interests of the common weal.

Field-Marshal His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught's address.

Field-Marshal HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS the DUKE of CONNAUGHT: YOUR EXCELLENCY AND GENTLEMEN OF THE BENGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL, To-day it is my pleasing task to open the second of that series of new Legislatures which, by command of His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor, I have come to India to inaugurate. The King-Emperor has commissioned me to bring you His cordial good wishes on an occasion which Your Excellency justly terms historic. You all know His Imperial Majesty's regard for this proud city of Calcutta, and for the people of Bengal; and I can assure you of the deep interest with which he watches the far-reaching changes beginning with the ceremony of to-day.

Upon the pleasure which it gives me personally to perform this duty, I need not dwell; nor upon my gratification at the warmth of your welcome. Though more directly acquainted, during my past sojourn in India, with a presidency with which you maintain a healthy and generous rivalry, I should be the last to deny the eminence of Bengal among the provinces of the Indian Empire, or the unique connexion of Calcutta with the administrative developments which have marked the long and momentous association between the United Kingdom and this country.

It is that eminence and this connexion which will direct upon the deliberations of your Council the anxious gaze of all who, like myself, cherish great expectations of the era which is dawning upon the Indian Empire. Anxious, I say, because the task imposed on you and the sister Legislatures which are coming simultaneously into being, is a task of no ordinary complexion. You have to take at once a heavy and responsible share in providing the laws and finance for a skilled and highly technical administration. In one area, by no means small or unimportant, of the administrative field, your responsibility will be closer. For within it, the policy and conduct of the actual executive will repose on the shoulders of Ministers drawn from your ranks; and it will be for you to advise, support, and, where necessary, criticise and control them in their course. But, while thus engaged on the one hand, on the other you will ever have to bear in mind the people in whose name you act, and to remember that the progress of the country must remain imperfect so long as the great majority of them, so long indeed as any substantial section of them, are unable to follow your work with intelligence. The training and expansion of the electorate will be just as much your duty as the conduct and direction of the administration. All these varied parts you will have to play with a sobriety of language, a sanity of judgment, an impartiality of decision, a freedom from passion and prejudice, which will not only satisfy critics of the new constitution, but will justify a jury of the British Parliament ten years hence in enlarging the scope of your administrative activities.

In this labyrinth of cares and labours, what clue can I suggest for your guidance? To my mind, as I am sure to yours, there is only one, that your sole thought should always be the betterment of your countrymen, and not of any class or section, but of all. The test by which political assemblies are judged, all the world over, is not ingenuity of dialectic or mere political craftsmanship, but the good Government of the people and the progress of the Country. In that respect your programme is heavy indeed. There are at least three vast problems with which you will at once come to grips; they are within the sphere of Ministries, and are of special prominence in Bengal. One is the intense popular demand for education, and the provision, in response thereto, of a type of education which will fit the rising generation to be good citizens. The second, in reality complementary to the first, is the creation of industrial opportunities and an industrial spirit, to relieve the tremendous pressure on the land and the economic evils which must result. The third is a higher standard of health and vitality, particularly among the inhabitants of your wide malarial tracts. In the field of material progress there could be few problems of more surpassing difficulty than these three. There could also be few more costly; and this consideration is a special anxiety to you in Bengal where, I understand, the public revenues are encumbered and somewhat inelastic. The solution of these questions and then finance will call for equally heroic treatment.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, you will not expect me to attempt a survey of your future labours. They will range from such matters as I have mentioned to those infinitely delicate questions of social emancipation in which India will look to Bengal, as so often in the past, to take the lead. Believe me, the magnitude of your task is realised, and its difficulties are appreciated by those of us who will be watching you, with friendly and sympathetic eyes, during the years which lie ahead. We hope for your success; we are cheered by auguries of it to-day. There could be no finer augury than the striking address which has just been delivered by His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay your sympathetic and stout-hearted Governor. For to him it is certain that you will always be able to turn for help and advice; and, I am sure, to the officers who serve under him, and to his and their successors. But the happiest augury of all is in yourselves. In the political progress of India the Bengali race has ever been in the van, its leaders, endowed with oratory and brilliance of intellect, have inspired the cause of reform; in the sphere of literature, philosophy, science and art its gifts have been strikingly displayed; in the realms of jurisprudence and public life its sons have been conspicuous figures.

Associated in Council with the leaders of Bengal will be the European fellow-citizens, official and non-official, to whose peculiar genius the India of to-day owes both its system of orderly administration and its great commercial and industrial connexions with the world at large. In this combination I see grounds for the highest expectations. Working side by side, mindful of each other's interests and ideals, ever bending their minds to cordial co-operation, the leaders of the Bengali and the British communities will, I earnestly pray, so serve this great province that it will ere long attain a position of fresh lustre, happiness and prosperity in the confederation of the British Empire.

I now formally declare the Legislative Council of Bengal, as constituted under the Government of India Act, 1919, to be duly open (Applause).

President's reply.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): MAY IT PLEASE YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS,—On behalf of the Members of this Council, it is my privilege respectfully to acknowledge the gracious message of His Majesty the King-Emperor which your Royal Highness has just delivered. In the discharge of the duties that lie before us, this message will always continue to inspire and stimulate us. We pray that your Royal Highness may be pleased to convey to His Majesty the assurance of the loyalty and devotion of the people of Bengal to His Majesty's throne and person. (Applause)

His Royal Highness, His Excellency the Governor, and the Hon'ble the President then left the Chamber in procession.

THE BENGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VOLUME I—No. 2.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

The Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Monday, the 7th February, 1921, at 11 A.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 122 nominated and elected members.

Oaths.

The following members made an oath or affirmation of their allegiance to the Crown:—

MR. D. P. MCKENZIE
MR. W. L. TRAVERS, O.B.E.
RAJA NARENDRA LAL KHAN

President's Speech.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda):

It is my first duty to communicate to you that on the 1st instant, His Excellency the Governor requested the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State to communicate the following message to His Majesty the King-Emperor:

“ I have the honour to inform Your Majesty that the new constitution in Bengal was successfully inaugurated by Field-Marshal His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught to-day. The new Legislative Council expresses through the mouth of its President its devotion to Your Majesty's throne and person, and desires respectfully to tender to Your Majesty its loyal homage.”

The following reply has been received from the Secretary of State for India:

“ Your telegram of the 1st instant. I have laid your message before the King and he commands me to express to you and the Bengal Legislative Council his gratification at the successful opening of the Council, and his appreciation of the Council's message of loyalty."

The Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State has sent a message on his own behalf which runs as follows:—

"May I send to you my warmest good wishes for the future of your Legislative Council inaugurated to-day."

Gentlemen, before commencing the business on to-day's list, I ask your permission to say a few words welcoming you most heartily to this Council. I would also wish in doing so to add a few words regarding our duties and responsibilities as members of this Council. I know that in this Council there are a number of official and non-official members who have much greater experience of the work of the Council than I possess. At the same time there are those who are new to the work of the Council, and my remarks will be especially addressed to them. In order to be able successfully to discharge our duties it is necessary that we should clearly realise our responsibilities, and that is only possible if we have a clear conception of what our powers are, power and responsibility go together. As regards the powers of this Council, I need only refer to the new Act, the Government of India Act of 1919. There has been, no doubt, an attempt in some quarters to minimise the effect of that Act. For my part I am convinced that the Act gives us very large powers in comparison with the powers that we have had before. The effect of the new measure is an expansion of the powers of the Legislature in two distinct ways. In the first place, in all the Councils you have a majority of elected or non-official members. In the second place, the new Councils possess very much larger powers of control over the budget than the Council had before. There are now two Councils which will deal with Imperial matters, the Council of State and the Legislative Assembly. In the Council of State the total number of members fixed by the Act is 60, of whom not more than 20 are to be officials. In the Legislative Assembly the total number is fixed at 140 and the number of nominated or non-elected members is only 40, and the elected members are 100. The number can be changed by the rules, but in any case, at least five-sevenths of the members must be elected. In the local Legislative Councils the minimum number under the Act is 125, of whom not more than 20 per cent are to be official members, which is a very large percentage of non-official members compared with the constitution of the previous Council. At least 70 per cent are to be elected members, but the rules under the Act have increased the number to 139, excluding the President; the number is distributed as follows:

Members of the Executive Council	.	..	4
Elected members	113

The subjects are divided into central and provincial subjects. The representatives that you send to the Legislative Assembly would, I am sure, be able to protect the interests of the province in that Assembly. So far as this Council is concerned, its powers, as I have said, have been considerably increased in the directions I have mentioned. In entering into the execution of our duties we do so with no light heart. The responsibilities before us are very great and our future would depend on the way we try to discharge those responsibilities. The first thing we have to do is to raise the dignity of the Council by a strict observance of the rules which have been laid down for the conduct of the members. It is only when we have done this, and we have exercised our powers in such a way as to establish confidence in our capacity to discharge the duties that are entrusted to us, that we can succeed in getting further powers.

As I have said, we are given very large powers ourselves. The provincial subjects have been divided into reserved and transferred subjects. We have a great voice in both, but as regards the transferred subjects our voice is much stronger, and these subjects include the very important departments of Government such as Education, Agriculture, Excise, Public Works, etc., and these subjects are to be administered by Ministers who are chosen from among the representatives of the people returned to this Council. You will therefore see that our powers are very considerable. But, as I have said, we are now on the road to great political progress. I am convinced of the sincerity of the desire on the part of the English people to be fair to India and to give to us what is our birthright when we have qualified ourselves to manage our own affairs. We are on the road to progress, we are on probation for 10 years, and if within the 10 years we show that we are capable of taking care of ourselves, I feel no doubt that our full rights will be given to us. There is a danger in impatience, impatience may be patriotic, but still there is danger in it. We want above all a safe road by which to travel, the journey may be a distant one, but let us fix our eyes on the future and try to be true to ourselves and to our country.

No doubt I must admit that the powers and privileges that have been given to this Council are circumscribed in several respects, but I am confident that in the course of time this will disappear. That has been considered essential, I believe, because we are serving a term of probation. My experience is that special powers given like these, given to the executive, are seldom exercised so long as those exercising the powers had good reason, and I feel no doubt that in the discharge of the duties entrusted to you, you will try to be reasonable in every way.

To my mind there can be no doubt that the angle of vision in England has changed. The first indication of it is to be found in the new

Act, and I may also refer to another indication, and it is the appointment of an Indian to the highest administrative post in a neighbouring province, and Bengal may well be proud of having supplied the first Indian Governor of a province. In the discharge of our duties, as I have said, we must always bear in mind the dignity of the Council. That can best be maintained by conforming to the rules and regulations that have been laid down for our guidance. Some of these rules may be somewhat irritating, for instance, the rules imposing a time-limit on speeches, but I feel that there should be no difficulty in conforming to this rule. We must always remember that this Council is a place for conducting business, and that every day we must go through a certain amount of work, and if the time of the Council is unnecessarily occupied by speeches we lessen the opportunities that the members have for performing the responsible duties that are entrusted to them. If members remember this, they will be able so to condense their speeches as not to feel any difficulty in conforming to the time-limit. I would also remind you that I am your friend. The first President of the Council is appointed for four years, after the four years many will grow up who will be better fitted to lead the Council than any outsider that Government may appoint. Well, there is one thing that I may tell you, and it is this, that I am not a Government official. It is my duty to hold the balance even between the Government members and the non-official members. It is not my duty to favour any side, and I hope in the discharge of my duties I shall never forget this principle. No doubt I shall at times make mistakes, and I hope to these mistakes you will always be kind and indulgent.

There is another matter to which I think I may usefully refer. There have been several complaints about the arrangement of seats. This hall, as you know, was not built for a meeting of the Legislative Council, and will not lend itself to an arrangement which will be most conducive to the convenience of the members, but at the same time the arrangement may be susceptible of improvement, and I propose at the end of this session of the Council to appoint a small committee to suggest measures as regards the arrangement of seats that will be more convenient to the members than the seats now arranged are, and I hope before another session begins I shall be able to do all that is possible for the convenience of the members of this Council.

There has been a certain amount of dissatisfaction expressed because the Legislative Department has refused to accept notices of motions or resolutions, or to admit questions, in the vernacular language. I had in these matters to consult the rules. Section II of the rules says that the business of the Council shall be conducted in English, but any member who is not fluent in English may address the Council in any recognised vernacular of the province, provided that the President may call on any member to speak in any language in which he is known to be proficient. So you will see that the rule does not authorise me to have the business of the Council transacted in the vernacular, except in the matter of speeches during debate. So that I think the Legislative Department was quite in order in ruling that all notices of questions, resolutions and motions must be in the English language, which is expressly laid down to be the language of the Council.

As a new Council established under new conditions, our difficulties in the beginning may be considerable, but I hope in the future a tradition will grow up around this body and that then our task will become less difficult. In the discharge of my duties I expect all your assistance and support, and I for my part can assure you that in the discharge of these duties I shall never try to be harsh, and shall always consult your feelings compatible with my duty to keep order in this Council.

Starred Questions

(to which oral answers were given).

Proportion of work transferred and reserved.

*I. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state what proportion, approximately, of administrative work has been transferred to the Ministers and what proportion has been retained as Reserved subjects?

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): The list of provincial subjects and the list of transferred subjects are given in schedules I and II of the Devolution Rules, which were published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 22nd December, 1920. The amount of administrative work in connection with any particular subject necessarily varies at different times and under varying circumstances and it is not, therefore, possible to give an estimate of the proportion of administrative work involved in transferred and reserved departments respectively.

Annual outbreak of cholera in Patuakhaji.

*II. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that cholera breaks out every year in the municipal town of Patuakhaji?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister considering the desirability of deputing a sanitary officer to find out the cause of the epidemic with a view to devise means to stamp it out?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): The records for five years do not show that there has been an annual epidemic of cholera in Patuakhali, the annual number of deaths from that cause ranging from 17 to 34 only. In these circumstances Government do not consider it necessary to depute an officer to hold a special inquiry. It is proposed to assist the municipality in carrying out a water-supply scheme next year.

Minister for Education and his relation to Education Department.

III. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether he will have to deal with Primary Education only?

(b) If the Minister for Education is to be in charge of Primary Education only, in what relation will the Education Department as a whole stand to the Minister for Education?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) The question does not arise.

Creation of a new Subordinate Engineering Service and pay and prospects of Lower Subordinates.

IV. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state what steps are being taken with regard to the creation of a new Subordinate Engineering Service as announced in Government of India Public Works Department resolution No. 192 E.A. of 1st April, 1920?

(b) What will be its cadre and scale of pay?

(c) When is it proposed to give effect to the said resolution as intimated in reply to my starred question No. 1 on the 1st July, 1920?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether it is known to Government that the Lower Subordinates of the Public Works Department are very poorly paid and have been put to great hardship owing to the high prices of the ordinary necessaries of life?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether any memorial has been received from the Lower Subordinates of the Public Works Department for a revision of their pay?

(f) If so, what steps have been taken with regard to the said memorial?

(g) Is a revision of their pay and prospects under the immediate consideration of Government?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur):

(a) The Government of Bengal have recently passed orders creating a Subordinate Engineering Service. A resolution on the subject will be issued shortly.

(b) The cadre is still under consideration and has not been finally determined. The scale of pay will be announced in the resolution.

(c) The date will be announced in the resolution.

(d) Yes.

(e) Yes.

(f) and (g) Orders have recently been passed prescribing a revised time-scale of pay for those lower subordinates who are not promoted to the Subordinate Engineering Service. A resolution on the subject will be issued shortly.

Special treatment of Bengal as regards finance.

V. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state what special treatment, if any, has been made, or is proposed to be made, to Bengal by the Government of India in the matter of finance in accordance with the recommendations of the Joint Select Committee of Parliament on the Government of India Act?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): No definite action has yet been taken nor have the Government of Bengal any information as to what action, if any, the Government of India propose taking in regard to the recommendations referred to.

Customs Preventive Service.

VI. Mr. H. BARTON: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state whether the recommendation of the Public Services Commission, providing for 50 per cent. of the vacancies in the Superior Branch of the Customs Preventive Service being filled by statutory natives of India, is being given effect to, and, if so, how many such vacancies have been so filled since January, 1914?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the fact that Preventive Officers are required to forfeit, to charitable institutions, 60 per cent. of their earnings for work performed on Sundays and whether Government are considering the desirability of directing that all such earnings be retained by Preventive Officers employed on such duties?

(c) Is the Hon'ble Member aware of the unhealthy conditions under which Customs Preventive Officers are compelled to work at the Salt Golas?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of appointing a committee consisting of medical officers and members of the Customs Preventive Officers' Service to investigate and report on the working conditions at the Salt Golas and to submit such recommendations as they consider necessary for their improvement, if any?

(e) Has the Hon'ble the Member any knowledge of the new conditions of recruitment for the Customs Preventive Service by which appointments are made carrying no pay or fees of any kind nor any power under the Sea Customs Act; persons so appointed being only eligible for rewards as informers and having no claim to the appointment of Preventive Officer, though performing the duties of a Preventive Officer?

(f) Is it the intention of Government to set aside the orders contained in the recent reorganization of the Service, abolishing the temporary establishment of Preventive Officers?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) The Public Services Commission made no recommendations regarding the Customs Preventive Service, then inquiries were confined to the Imperial Customs Service which is under the administration of the Government of India.

(b) The position is not correctly stated in the question. Of the fees levied by Government for ships working on Sundays, 40 per cent is allocated to Preventive Officers for the additional work imposed upon them, 40 per cent is given to a Service Fund for helping junior Preventive Officers and their families in case of sickness and the remaining 50 per cent is distributed among various charitable institutions for the benefit of seamen. Government do not propose to alter these arrangements which have been in force for many years.

(c) Government are aware that work at the Salt Golas is unpleasant at certain seasons of the year, but there is no evidence that the conditions at the golas are the cause of ill-health among the members of the service.

(d) As at present advised, Government do not consider that any advantage would be gained by the appointment of the committee suggested.

(e) No conditions of recruitment of this nature have been imposed. The Collector of Customs, however, reports that candidates for appointment are occasionally attached to the Department as unpaid apprentices, pending the occurrence of vacancies, and that they may in this capacity become eligible for rewards.

(f) The answer is in the negative.

Anglo-Indians and the Bengal Provincial Service.

 VII. Mr. H. BARTON: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to say whether it is a fact that Anglo-Indians are debarred from appointments in the Bengal Provincial Service, and, if so, on what grounds?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: It is not a fact that Anglo-Indians are debarred from appointments in the Bengal Civil Service, to which the Member presumably refers.

The Agricultural Department.

* VIII. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state from what year the Agricultural Department has been in existence in Bengal?

(b) What is the present annual expenditure of the Department?

(c) What practical work of note has the Department done up to date for the improvement of agriculture, especially of paddy crops in Bengal?

(d) Has any research been made with a view to devise means to combat the destructive agencies, viz., worms and insects, etc., of the staple food crops of Bengal?

(e) If so, with what result?

(f) If not, is the Hon'ble the Minister considering the desirability of taking steps to see that a research is carried out in this connection?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): (a) 1884

(b) Rupees 9½ lakhs approximately

(c), (d) and (e) Annual reports of the Department, Government resolutions thereon, and the Departmental leaflets published from time to time furnish the information asked for. Copies* of the reports for the last two years, together with the Government resolutions thereon, are placed on the library table.

(f) The question does not arise.

Unstarred Questions

(answers to which were laid on the table).

Delay in the construction of the Kidderpore Bridge.

1. Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation been drawn to the delay in the construction of the Kidderpore Bridge over Tolly's Nala in Calcutta?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to ascertain and state when the construction of the said bridge is likely to be completed?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): (a) Yes

(b) The date of completion, as previously anticipated, was June, 1921; owing, however, to an unfortunate strike of labourers in the workshops of Messrs. Burn & Co., who have been entrusted with the work, and also unforeseen delay in obtaining material from England, owing to labour troubles there, the completion of the work will be delayed. Under these circumstances no exact date can at present be given for the completion of the work.

* Not printed in these Proceedings.

Canalisation of Tolly's Nala.

2. Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware that the southern portion of Tolly's Nala is at present in a deplorable condition and that it has practically silted up?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to ascertain and state what steps are being taken for the canalisation or other improvement of the said nala?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) The Hon'ble Member is aware that the southern portion of Tolly's Nala is silted up to the detriment of navigation.

(b) The works undertaken for the improvement of the nala are as follows. The construction of a sluice at Samukpota for the purpose of excluding the tides of the Burdwan from the nala and at the same time of providing an exit for the tidal waters of the Hooghly. The sluice in question is approaching completion and the Nala will be closed at Samukpota at an early date. It is expected that these works will be in operation during the coming monsoon, when observations will be taken of the results achieved.

Rise in the prices of coke and coal.

3. Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce been drawn to the high prices of soft coke, steam coal and coal dust? Are the Government aware that these high prices have seriously affected (1) the poor people of Calcutta, in the matter of the cost of living, (2) the rice industry of the suburbs of Calcutta, and (3) the brick industry of the adjoining districts of Calcutta, respectively?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to ascertain and state what steps are being taken with a view to reduce the prices of soft coke, steam coal and coal dust in the province?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) Yes.

(b) The high prices are due to an actual shortage of coal, owing partly to poor raisings in the coal-fields and partly to railway transport difficulties in respect of Bengal coal. A copy of a press communiqué, dated the 8th January, 1921, showing the action taken by the Government of India to remedy matters, is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No 3.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Department of Commerce.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE

Delhi, the 8th January, 1921

In the Press Communiqué issued from this Department on the 9th July 1920, the Government of India announced their decision to restrict exports of coal from India, except under license, from the 24th July 1920, and to refuse preference for bunker coal for Indian ports on the railways from the 1st September, 1920. The object of this latter measure was to economise wagons by diverting bunker coal from the all-rail route to the route which it followed before the war, viz. by rail to the Kidderpore Docks and thence by coasting steamers. The prohibition of exports, except under license, was made partly to prevent Indian coal from being drained away in excessive quantities from India and partly to ensure that Indian ports should obtain supplies of bunker coal by sea. The capacity of the Kidderpore Docks being very limited. A rationing scheme was drawn up and, on the principle that supplies of Indian coal should be allowed only to important bunkering ports, in the vicinity of India, the following exports were allowed:—

	Tons per mensem
Railway coal
Ceylon Government Railway	10,000
Bunker coal:—
Colombo	50,000
Aden	10,000
Sabang	5,000
Singapore	15,000

The experience of the past five months has shown that, although these measures have improved the general wagon supply of the country, and have also succeeded to some extent in driving bunker coal for Indian ports from the all-rail route back to the part-rail and part-sea route, the general coal situation in India has deteriorated. Stocks of railway coal in India are dangerously low at present, and complaints have been received from many parts of the country of the difficulties experienced by indigenous industries in obtaining coal. There is at present an actual shortage of coal, owing partly to poor raisings in the coal-fields and partly to railway transport difficulties in respect of Bengal coal. The available supplies of Bengal coal now fall short of Indian requirements, and there is no possibility of effecting immediate improvement in railway facilities.

The Government of India have given their careful consideration to the question and in consultation with the commercial public, they have decided further to curtail the demands for Bengal coal by stopping exports to Sabang and Singapore immediately and to Aden after the end of this month. In order to give Colombo, which is more dependent than the other ports on India for bunker coal, time to make other arrangements for the purchase of bunker coal, they have decided to allow 50,000 tons to be exported to this port in January, 10,000 tons in February and 25,000 tons in March. After the end of March, Colombo will have to make her own arrangements for supplies of bunker coal, but the Government of India are arranging to continue reduced supplies for the Ceylon Government railways.

The Government of India have also decided to restrict bunkers at Indian ports. At present steamers leaving Indian ports are permitted bunkers right up to the port of final destination and, owing to the comparative cheapness of Indian coal, all steamers make full use of this privilege, and the consumption of bunker coal is consequently heavy. The Government of India propose in future to license bunkers for steamers proceeding westwards only as far as Port Said and three days further, and to restrict bunkers for steamers proceeding eastwards on similar lines. These orders will come into effect at once.

C. A. INNES,

Secretary to the Government of India

Scarcity of cow's milk.

4. Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government been drawn to the high price and scarcity of cow's milk in Bengal?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the above causes are chiefly responsible for the heavy rate of infant mortality in the province?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to ascertain and state what steps are being taken for—

(i) the provision of pasture grounds,

(ii) the provision of stud bulls for breeding purposes,

(iii) the establishment and maintenance of charitable veterinary dispensaries,

(iv) the prohibition of the slaughtering of cows, and

(v) especially the prevention of the practice of phuka on milch cows?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) Government are aware that scarcity of good cow's milk is one of the causes of high infantile mortality.

(c) (i) The Member is referred to the relevant portions of Sir John Cunningham's speech in connection with a resolution moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, M.L.C., at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council held on the 21st January, 1919, regarding the appointment of a committee to inquire into the deterioration of cattle in Bengal.

(ii) A full account is given in Part III of the Annual Report of the Civil Veterinary Department, Bengal, for the year 1919-20, a copy* of which is placed on the library table.

(iii) It is the policy of Government to have a veterinary dispensary established in every district and subdivisional headquarters, mostly through the agency and at the cost of local bodies. Most of the district headquarters and some of the subdivisional headquarters are now provided with veterinary dispensaries. Information concerning the working of these dispensaries will be found in the annual report of the department and in table V annexed thereto. These dispensaries are not strictly speaking charitable institutions, as fees are levied according to a prescribed scale, except where bona fide cultivators and others, whose income is below Rs. 50 a month, are concerned.

(iv) In Calcutta the by-laws under section 559 (3A) of the Calcutta Municipal Act regulating the use of slaughter-houses have been amended, so as to give effect to the following resolutions passed by the Corporation on the 7th April, 1920:—

(i) “That the slaughter of calves other than those vaccinated at the Government and Municipal Vaccine Depôts be prohibited.”

(ii) “That as the calves from the depôts are from 6 to 12 months old, i.e., old enough to be fed, they should be kept in the stockyard for 24 hours before slaughter.”

In mutassal municipalities the slaughter of cows may be regulated either under section 261, read with section 273 (2) and (3) of the Bengal Municipal Act, or under by-laws framed under section 2 of the Bengal Municipal (Slaughter-houses and Meat Markets) Act, 1865, but the initiative rests with the local authorities concerned.

(c) The operation called phuka is an offence punishable under section 4 of Act XI of 1890 and section 5A of Bengal Act I of 1869. Under section 6 of the Bengal Cruelty to Animals Act, 1920 (I of 1920), higher penalties are provided for practising phuka, and the owner of the cow has also been made liable to punishment.

Agricultural, industrial and commercial education.

5. Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to make a full statement as to what steps have been taken or are being taken for the encouragement of agricultural, industrial and commercial education in Bengal?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: As regards agricultural education, an agricultural vernacular school was opened in Dacca in January, 1920. A copy* of the prospectus is placed on the library table. An agricultural vernacular school has also been constructed at Chinsura and is likely to be opened during the current month. An agricultural institute for the training of agricultural specialists has received administrative sanction; the site has already been acquired and its construction will shortly commence.

With regard to industrial education, the most important question that Government are now dealing with is the improvement of the training of engineering apprentices in railway and other workshops. A committee was appointed by Government to consider the matter in relation to railway workshops, and another committee was subsequently appointed to deal with the special question of a technical school for Calcutta, to provide adequate instruction for the large number of apprentices engaged in the many engineering works in its neighbourhood. Government are now taking action on the reports submitted by these committees. Land is being acquired for the Calcutta Technical School, and administrative approval has been given to the construction, at a cost of about 2½ lakhs, of the ground floor of a building which is designed eventually to accommodate about 1,000 apprentices. For improvements in regard to the training of apprentices at the Kanchrapara Workshops on the Eastern Bengal Railway, Government have already sanctioned over a lakh of rupees for buildings, including a hostel for Indian apprentices and a building for a technical school.⁹ The instruction of artisan boys in various handicrafts and in elementary class subjects has been encouraged by giving substantial grants to several efficient industrial schools. There are also successful industrial classes at the Bengal Engineering College, Sibpur, at the Dacca School of Engineering, and elsewhere.

With regard to mining education, Government have sanctioned an important scheme for the improvement and development of the classes in mining, which are held in the coal-fields. A highly qualified whole-time lecturer will be appointed, and suitable buildings will be erected.

To provide improved instruction in weaving, the higher course at the Serampore Weaving Institute has been extended to three years and the curriculum has been enlarged. A scheme for the removal and extension of the Institute is under preparation and is now almost completed. In order to give instruction to weavers in the outlying parts of the Presidency, six peripatetic instructors have been appointed to supplement the work of the local weaving schools. A proposal for a weaving school at Dacca, with a special curriculum to suit the requirements of the district, is now under consideration.

In order to strengthen the staff of the Government Commercial Institute, the sanction of the Secretary of State has been obtained to the creation of a new post to provide for the appointment of a Principal, with special qualifications, and it is hoped that a suitable officer will soon be recruited to fill this post. The staff of the Institute has also been increased by the appointment of additional lecturers.

Preventive measures in connection with the Damodar floods.

6. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state what progress has been made in the preventive and remedial works which are being carried out in connection with the Damodar floods?

(b) What sums have been allotted for these works?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether there are any other schemes before the Government in regard to the Damodar and besides those which have already been undertaken, and what benefits are expected from them?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of URDWAN: (a) The preventive and remedial works carried out in connection with the Damodar floods, since the extraordinary floods of 1913, are—

- (i) the remodelling of the left embankment of the Damodar to a height of 3 feet above high flood level and construction of retired second defence lines of embankment in weak places;
- (ii) excavation of the Ghesapati Khal and the retirement of the Baxi Khal embankment and improving Baxi Khal;
- (iii) extension of the Ghesapati Khal outfall channel;
- (iv) excavation of the Hoorhoora Khal;
- (v) Uchmala cut;
- (vi) construction of refuge mounds.

In schemes (ii) and (iv) further works will be done when dredgers are available.

(b) The following statement shows the allotment of funds for the present year, and the expenditure on these works for the last three years, together with the expenditure during the current year to end of December, 1920. The work of remodelling the left embankment was carried out from funds for repairs to these embankments and no separate account for this work is available and the expenditure on this account is not therefore shown in this statement:—

Works	Amount of Estimate	Allotment for 1920-21	EXPENDITURE
			1920-21 to end of December 1920	1919-20	1918-19	1917-18
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
Excavation of Ghesapati Khal, retirement of the Baxi embankment, and excavation of the Baxi Khal	3,96,362	2,200	6,156	3,883	47,410	1,77,431
New extension of Ghesapati outfall channel	33,196	33,000	13,424	1,108
Excavation of the Hoorhoora Khal	10,96,910	70,000	53,969	1,45,190	1,21,270	...
Uchmala cut	29,096	4,000	2,556	19,597	5,199	...
Refuge mounds	29,628	7,000	6,125	1,523

(c) Besides the above schemes, which have already been undertaken, the following schemes in connection with Damodar flood mitigation are under investigation or consideration:—

- (i) a scheme for construction of flood-controlling reservoirs in the upper reaches of the river Damodar proper and its tributary, the river Barakar;
- (ii) a scheme for making a cut from Muchilana on the Damodar river to the entrance of the Begua Channel;
- (iii) a scheme for making a drainage cut from the low-lying lands north-west of Lakia to the Begua Channel in place of the silted-up Bachinda Khal;
- (iv) a scheme for excavating a drainage cut from Narendrapur to Kamarkhola onwards to Baxi Khal to provide a quicker outlet of the spill water from the area east of Hootthoora Khal;
- (v) a scheme for extending the Ghesapati Cut northwards by about two miles to tap a larger spill area;
- (vi) proposals for drainage cuts from Behala chak and Talabans lying north of the Arambagh-Champadanga road into the Mondessan Nadi;
- (vii) a scheme for improving the Aroia Khal, south-west of Khanakul.

Scheme (i) is intended to reduce the intensity of the floods in the Damodar river. All the other schemes are intended to accelerate the discharge of the spill water of the Damodar floods from the local areas concerned.

Anti-malarial irrigation and drainage scheme.

7. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state—

- (i) what progress has been made in the work of the anti-malarial irrigation and drainage scheme in the Burdwan Division;
- (ii) what amount was originally sanctioned for the Banka anti-malarial flushing scheme in the Burdwan district;
- (iii) how much has been spent up to this time in that scheme;
- (iv) what benefit has been obtained from it; and
- (v) what other schemes in addition to those being worked are in their hands in this connection?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (i) The progress of anti-malarial works in the Burdwan Division, which are either completed or under construction, is as below:—

- (1) The Banka anti-malarial project.—Completed.
- (2) Saraswati project.—Completed.

(3) Amfa project.—Excavation for sluice foundations is about to be started. Arrangements have been made for brick manufacture.

(4) Pichaboni project.—Nearly completed.

(5) Amrabad project.—Earthwork partly done, borings are being made to decide the location of the sluice.

(ii) The sanctioned estimate for the Banga anti-malarial scheme amounted to Rs. 73,217 for works only, i.e., excluding Establishment and Tools and Plant charges.

(iii) The work was completed during 1918-19, the expenditure incurred was Rs. 72,532 on works only.

(iv) The report for 1918-19 indicates that the above work enabled the crops in the low lands to be entirely saved; water levels had to be kept low for the purpose and the submergence of the whole basin was not possible.

(v) In addition to the schemes mentioned in (i) above, the following schemes are under survey, investigation or consideration:—

- (1) Sabong-Parsua drainage scheme
- (2) Dhumra scheme
- (3) Soadighi-Gangakhali scheme
- (4) Tumlook-Mahisadal drainage scheme
- (5) Rankin Dohi drainage scheme
- (6) Ghea project.
- (7) Muza scheme
- (8) Russulpur project

Malarial fever.

8. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Sanitation be pleased to say whether the Government are considering the desirability of asking the District Boards, Local Boards and Municipalities to report on the prevalence and incidence of malarial fever within their respective areas, and on the means that may be adopted to remove the causes, and the probable cost, both capital and recurring, of the measures necessary to be taken in that behalf?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC HEALTH (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): The model rules prescribing the duties of District Health Officers lay down that in order to facilitate the adoption of measures for reducing the prevalence of malarial fever, the District Health Officer shall have a careful survey made of the distribution of malaria in the district and that when, as a result of this survey, he has obtained an accurate knowledge of the distribution and relative intensity of the malaria existing in different parts of the district, he shall prepare a detailed scheme of anti-malarial sanitation designed to meet the existing conditions, and shall submit it to the Chairman of the District Board for the approval and sanction of the Board. District Health Officers have only recently been appointed, and it is thought advisable to wait till action has been taken in accordance with the model rules. The Sanitary Commissioner proposes to issue departmental instructions for their guidance regarding the carrying out of detailed malaria surveys. He also proposes to address Government with the suggestion that those municipalities which have health officers and to which Parts VI to X of the Bengal Municipal Act have been extended, should be asked to carry out malaria surveys with a view to drawing up schemes for anti-malarial work.

Local taxation for primary education and sanitation.

9. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Departments of Sanitation and Education be pleased to say whether the Government are considering the desirability of obtaining from all the District Boards and Local Boards their views as to the resolutions passed at the last District Board Conference held at Government House, Calcutta, and what proposals, if any, for local taxation, they are prepared to approve and adopt to obtain funds for primary education and sanitation?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The subject discussed at the District Board Conference were considered by the District Boards in meeting before their delegates attended the Conference. Copies of their proceedings have been received by Government and it is not at present considered necessary to refer the resolutions passed by the Conference to them, and also to Local Boards, for their opinion.

The Conference concluded on 14th January, 1921, and it is not proposed to take any action on its resolutions till they have been carefully considered and examined by Government, together with the resolutions already passed by the District Boards.

Bhairab river reclamation scheme and the Harihara scheme.

10. Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Sanitation aware that the scheme for the reclamation of the Bhairab under the Sanitary Drainage Act has been pending for some time?

(b) Is there any likelihood of the scheme being taken up for execution in the course of this year?

(c) If not, when is it going to be executed?

(d) Is it a fact that the death-rate in the district of Jessore is higher than the birth-rate?

(e) If so, what remedial steps are the Government taking in the matter?

(f) Is it a fact that the Harihara scheme in the district of Jessore is ready for execution?

(g) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the reason for the delay in its execution?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) and (c) Preliminary work is in progress. Surveys and levels of three different alignments have been made, and borings are being taken, this being necessary before the final location of the subsoil masonry work is decided upon. When the borings are completed, complete estimates will be worked out. It is anticipated that the work will be started during the next cold weather.

(d) The death-rate exceeded the birth-rate in the years 1915, 1916, 1918 and 1919. The birth-rate was in excess in 1917. The returns for 1920 are not yet available.

(e) The Member is referred to the speech made at Jessore by His Excellency the Governor in reply to a joint address presented by the Municipal Commissioners and the District Board on the 29th November, 1920, in which His Excellency pointed out that Government have already given the District Board considerable financial assistance to enable it to undertake large anti-malaria schemes, some of which are in course of execution while others are in course of preparation.

(f) No. The plans and estimates of the Harihara main and six branches have been completed. The survey of the Mukteswar portion has also been completed. Numerous borings have yet to be taken to decide the location of the subsoil masonry works, after which the complete estimates will be prepared.

(g) As indicated in the reply to (f), preliminary work in preparation of the scheme is in progress. The work can only be taken up after the complete estimates are ready and duly considered.

Temporary ministerial officers and their non-participation in the benefit of temporary allowances.

11. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state whether it is a fact that in granting payments of temporary allowances to the ministerial officers under Government resolution No 13631 F., dated the 1st September, 1920, men holding purely temporary appointments, sanctioned since 1st April, 1915, have been excluded?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing—

(i) the number of such appointments; and

(ii) the present pay of each and the pays prior to 1st April, 1915?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that these officers are in great difficulty owing to the prevailing high prices?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of granting these officers the concessions referred to in paragraph 2 of the above-mentioned resolution?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) Yes, except in the cases provided for in clause (b) of the Finance Department letter No. 1115 T—F, dated the 23rd October, 1920, a copy* of which is placed on the library table for the Member's information.

(b) (i) and (ii) It is understood that the Member requires a statement showing the purely temporary appointments sanctioned since the 1st of April, 1915. Lists of such temporary appointments are not maintained and it would not be possible to prepare them without a disproportionate amount of trouble.

(c) and (d) The economic stress owing to the prevailing high prices is felt by all officers, but Government do not recognise that the difficulty of purely temporary officers requires special alleviation. The pay of purely temporary appointments is fixed with reference to the market conditions prevailing at the time of creating the appointments and the rates are frequently higher than the rates of pay fixed for corresponding permanent appointments. Consequently Government are not considering the desirability of extending the sanctioned temporary allowances to the holders of temporary appointments, except in certain special cases provided for in clause (b) of the Government letter referred to in the answer to part (a) of the question.

Silting up of Bhagirathi river and the insanitary condition of Murshidabad.

12. Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation been drawn to the silting up of the Bhagirathi and to the apprehension that there may be scarcity of water in all the villages on the bank of the river in the near future?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the stagnant water of the river is one of the chief causes of the diseases that visit Murshidabad every year and carry away thousands of its inhabitants?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what steps have been or are being taken or are contemplated to insure a continuous flow of the river throughout the year?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) The Government are watching very carefully the changes in the Bhagirathi entrance channel and do not apprehend at the present stage that there will be any scarcity of water in the river, as a sufficient supply from percolation is available during the dry season.

* Not printed in these Proceedings.

(b) The minimum discharge at Berhampore during 1918-19 was 119 cubic feet per second. The question of stagnation of the water in the river bed therefore does not arise.

(c) Bandalling and scraping are done every year during falling river levels after the monsoons to improve the Faracca channel and the Bhagnathi entrance. During the three years 1914-15, 1915-16 and 1916-17 dredging operations were carried out at the entrance. The question of dredging the entrance will be taken up again when dredgers are found available for this work.

Admission into the Calcutta Medical College.

13. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MAITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Medical Department be pleased to lay on the Table a tabular statement showing the number of students who applied for admission into the Calcutta Medical College in 1918, 1919 and 1920?

(b) What were their academical qualifications and their number under each of the following heads:—

(1) M.Sc., (2) M.A., (3) B.Sc. (Honours), (4) B.Sc. (Pass), (5) B.A., (6) I.Sc. (First Division), (7) I.Sc. (Second Division), (8) I.Sc. (Third Division), (9) F.A., and (10) Matriculates.

(c) What was the number of students actually admitted into the Calcutta Medical College in the years 1918, 1919 and 1920 and their number and qualifications under heads as detailed in clause (b) of the question?

MINISTER in charge of MEDICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): (a) and (b) A statement (I) is laid on the table.

(c) A statement (II) is laid on the table.

STATEMENT I.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred Question Nos. 13 (a) and 13 (b), showing the number of candidates for admission into the Calcutta Medical College during the year 1918, 1919 and 1920.

Labour conditions and machinery to conciliate labour disputes.

14. Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state what arrangements have been made, or are being made, for the collection and publication of intelligence and statistics relating to labour conditions, such as wages in different trades and industries, prices, the cost of living, trade unions and their membership, strikes, labour disputes, etc. ?

(b) Have the Government under consideration the setting up of any machinery for the conciliation of labour disputes on the lines of the United Kingdom Act of 1896 or on any other lines ?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) A record of strikes occurring within the province has been maintained in the office of the Director of Industries since the 1st July, 1920, and the study of labour conditions, industrial wages and the growth of labour associations is being taken up in that office. These inquiries are being conducted with a view to the eventual publication of the results but are not yet sufficiently advanced for publication.

(b) The matter is under the consideration of the Government of India.

Increase of pay to village chaukidars.

15. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department aware that at a recent conference it was decided to increase the pay of village chaukidars from Rs. 5 to Rs. 8 per mensem ?

(b) Is it a fact that the work of a chaukidar does not interfere with the performance of his ordinary affairs in addition ?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the chaukidars do not go out on rounds in the villages in the night ?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member also aware that the chaukidars do not present themselves at the thana or the panchayat office regularly ?

(e) Do the Government propose to hold a conference with expert members of union boards on the subject ?

(f) Has the recommendation to increase the pay of the chaukidars been submitted to the Government for sanction ?

(a) In case the sanction is granted, is it the intention of Government to contribute towards the increased expenditure ?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the present chaukidari tax falls hard on the people and that in many cases they have to sell their personal belongings to meet the expenditure ?

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) Government have received a copy of the report of the proceedings of a conference of presidents of panchayats, union boards and chairmen of union committees of the Dacca district held at Dacca on the 19th July, 1920. The conference passed a resolution that the pay of chaukidars should be increased to about Rs. 8 to Rs. 10.

(b) Chaukidars are not whole-time public servants.

(c) and (d) Government are aware that chaukidars sometimes neglect their duties in these respects and are punished for such neglect.

(e) This step is not at present thought to be necessary.

(f) and (g) The recommendation to increase the pay of chaukidars has not been submitted to Government for sanction. In the report of the proceedings of the conference it is stated: "The question as to how the increased cost is to be met was left with every union board."

(h) The assessment is made by the panchayat or union board, and it is provided that any person who is too poor to pay half an anna a month shall be altogether exempted from payment of the tax. General allegations of hardship are made from time to time in the press and elsewhere.

Anglo-Indian nurses and appointments of Senior Nursing Sisters.

16. Mr. H. BARTON: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Medical Department be pleased to say whether it is a fact that the appointments of senior nursing sisters in the Presidency General Hospital and the Medical College Hospital are reserved for Nursing Sisters recruited from England to the entire exclusion of competent Anglo-Indian nurses trained in India, and if so, on what grounds?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The supervision and training of the nursing staff at the Presidency General Hospital is undertaken by the sisters of the Community of St. John the Baptist of Clewer, England, who receive only a bare subsistence allowance from the Lady Canning Memorial Fund. At the Medical College Hospital the nursing staff has, since November, 1910, been trained and supervised by a lady superintendent, who is assisted by five senior nursing sisters, all trained in England. These arrangements are made by the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institution and not by Government but they appear suitable, because they make not only for economy but also for efficiency as a competent up-to-date training staff is not at present available locally.

New district of Jamalpur and improvement of its headquarters town.

17. Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state what changes and improvements are contemplated in the town of Jamalpur owing to it being made the headquarters of the new district?

(b) From what date is the new district going to be created?

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) The scheme for the construction of a new district headquarters at Jamalpur does not include changes and improvements in the existing town of Jamalpur. These will doubtless follow in due course when the new district comes into being to the extent that the finances available will permit. The site selected for the new district headquarters adjoins the existing town on the north-west.

(b) The date from which the new district will be created cannot be stated at present, as work has only recently been begun. The preliminary work of raising the sites and burning bricks is in progress, and designs and estimates for buildings are being prepared.

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state if any amount was sanctioned by the Government towards the creation of the new district of Jamalpur?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Money has been provided for it, and the work is in progress.

Revision of salaries of ministerial and menial establishments.

18. Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: (a) With reference to the inquiry into the revision of salaries of ministerial and menial establishments, will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to say what is meant by the words "revision in accordance with modern economic conditions" for the purpose of "readjustment of salaries?"

(b) Was it intended that the committee appointed should consider "what ought to be the proper salaries of posts after an exhaustive inquiry into the conditions of service of ministerial and other officers," which His Excellency the Governor promised to hold in his reply to the deputation of ministerial officers in October last?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) and (b) The exact words used by His Excellency the Governor were: "You have my assurance that it is the intention of Government to hold an exhaustive inquiry into the conditions of service of the ministerial officers." His Excellency further stated that he was not in a position to state the exact nature of the inquiry which would be held, but he made it clear that the main object was to substitute a permanent revision of pay for the temporary allowances which were granted in 1920 to meet the hardships caused by the increase in the cost of living produced by the war. The reference to the committee was purposely framed in general terms and Government do not propose to hamper them by the issue of further instructions.

Insanitary condition of Dolye Khal.

19. Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation been drawn to the condition, in the dry season, of that portion of the Dolye Khal, which passes through the town of Dacca?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that part of the Dolye Khal, during the dry season, becomes an elongated cesspool and a standing menace to public health?

(c) What steps are being taken for the canalization or improvement of the khal?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) The condition of the Dolye Khal, which passes through Dacca, is known to the Government.

(b) That part of the khal passing through the town and within the limits of the Dacca Municipality is in an insanitary condition during the dry season.

(c) A scheme for canalization has been drawn up by Rai Shalendra Nath Banerjee Bahadur, Executive Engineer, who was deputed to investigate this project. This scheme is now under consideration of the Government, but owing to lack of funds, as also of officers in the Irrigation Department, it is not likely that the scheme will mature at an early date.

Hardship on members of joint families to vote at municipal elections.

20. Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the Government Municipal Circular No. 2445 M., dated Calcutta, the 25th September, 1916, disentitling members of a joint family to vote at municipal elections, operates as a hardship in the Dacca Municipality?

(b) Are the Government considering the desirability, in view of the coming municipal elections, of modifying this circular with a view to enable members of a joint family paying the minimum municipal rate for qualification of a voter, to vote at a municipal election?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) The Member is referred to the proceedings of the meeting of the Legislative Council held on the 19th December, 1917, in which a resolution was moved that the circular in question should be either withdrawn or modified. It was then explained by Lord Sinha of Raipur that the circular was simply a communication of an opinion expressed by the Advocate-General. Government are not in a position to modify his opinion, and, as pointed out by Lord Sinha—“ It is open to anybody, who thinks that it is wrong, to go to the nearest Munsif's Court and say that the opinion of the Advocate-General is not worth the paper it is written upon, and the Court will thereupon decide as to whether the Advocate-General was right or whether he was wrong.”

Government realise the difficulty caused by joint families not voting and it is therefore proposed to make provision for the exercise of the franchise by joint families in a Bill amending the Bengal Municipal Act, which will be introduced later on.

Dacca Sewerage Scheme.

21. Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Sanitation been drawn to the slow progress of the Dacca Sewerage Scheme and the inconvenience it is causing to the people?

(b) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister been drawn to the fact that the Municipal Commissioners of Dacca at a meeting held on 21st December, 1920, considered this question and placed on record their dissatisfaction at the unsatisfactory manner in which the work is being done by the sewerage contractor, that they specially refer to the facts—

- (i) that by not employing a sufficiently large number of men the operations are being delayed beyond reasonable time,
- (ii) that this delay is causing great inconvenience to pedestrians and wheel traffic,
- (iii) that by rendering the passage of scavenging carts impossible during the time of operations it is causing accumulation of filth and that this is a danger to public health?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Minister considering the desirability of bringing the aforesaid matters to the notice of the Sanitary Engineer with request that the contractors be directed to expedite the work?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEE: (a), (b) and (c) The reply is in the negative. Inquiry will be made.

Cost of establishments of Divisional Commissioners and Board of Revenue.

22. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the cost of the establishment of each Commissioner of a Division, including the Commissioner's own salary and allowance, if any?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be also pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the cost of the establishment of the Board of Revenue in Bengal, including the salary and allowance, if any, of the Member or Members?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): (a) and (b) A statement is laid on the table showing (i) the cost of establishment of each Commissioner of a Division, including his salary and allowances, and (ii) that of the Board of Revenue, including the salary of its Member and of his Secretary.

Statements referred to in the reply to unstated question No. 22.

Copies of records from Comilla Settlement Office.

23. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue aware that it is difficult to procure copies of records from the Comilla Settlement Office?

(b) Is it a fact that when fees and court-fees for obtaining copies are filed, receipts with the date of filing are not granted to the applicants?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that delays of over two months occur in supplying these records?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that these delays cause inconvenience to the public?

(e) What steps are the Government taking to remedy the grievance complained of?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) It is not a fact that it is difficult to procure copies of records from the Comilla Settlement Office.

(b) No. So far as can be gathered from the papers in the Collector's office receipts are always granted and no complaint on this score has been received either by the Collector or by the Assistant Settlement Officer in charge.

(c) (d) and (e) Before the Pura holidays there were 19 officers dealing with cases under section 105 in different camps, there was a copyist at every such camp. When the 19 camps were broken up and the records were transferred to Sadar, there was some inevitable delay in dealing with applications for copies whilst the records were being sorted and arranged. There has been no case of delay since the records were set in order, the longest pending application on January 31st last was dated the 18th January.

Deaths and injuries in coal mines due to accidents.

24. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state the number of deaths and employees injured by accidents in Bengal coal mines in 1918-1919, 1919-1920?

(b) What steps have been taken by the Government to prevent such accidents in future?

(c) What compensation has been paid by mine owners to families of miners killed by such accidents and to miners injured by such accidents?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) The number of deaths and of employees injured by accidents in the Bengal coal mines during 1918 and 1919 are—

			Number of deaths.	Employees injured.
In 1919	73	60

The figures for 1920 are not yet available.

(b) The rules framed under section 20 of the Indian Mines Act, 1901, to provide for the safety of persons employed in coal mines are contained in the Government of India's notification No. 864-68-20, dated the 10th March, 1901, and the Bengal Government notification

No. 3970 Com., dated the 28th August, 1918, copies* of which are laid on the library table. No special action was taken after the mining accidents of 1918 and 1919 as these did not reveal any defect in the rules.

(c) The information is not immediately available, but will be laid on the table when received from the District Officers.

Women's Provincial Educational Service.

25. Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that the Women's Provincial Educational Service is separated from the Men's?

(b) If so, why?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to explain why the maximum salary for the Women's Provincial Educational Service is proposed to be fixed at Rs. 500 a month, whereas the maximum salary for the Men's Provincial Educational Service has been fixed at Rs. 800 a month?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether Indian public opinion was consulted before the fixing of the pay and prospects of the Women's Educational Service?

(e) Have any concessions been made to them on the ground that the duties of the women Inspectorate are arduous and attended with hardship and danger?

The DEPUTY SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (Mr. W. W. Hornell): (a) The Minister is aware that the Secretary of State has issued orders that there are to be separate services for women.

(b) The orders are in accordance with the recommendations of the Indian Public Services Commission.

(c) The scale suggested was considered to be adequate.

(d) The Indian Public Services Commission took evidence from the public.

(e) The whole question of the Women's Educational Services is under the consideration of the Education Department.

Water-hyacinth in Eastern Bengal.

26. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware of the fact that water-hyacinth has been choking up the natural arteries of trade, impeding agricultural operations and menacing the health of the people in many parts of Eastern Bengal?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether Government are taking any action for eradicating the same and preventing its spread?

(c) If the answer to clause (b) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether Government propose to impose a tax upon non-agricultural income for meeting the costs of the same?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) Yes.

(b) The navigation channels in charge of the Irrigation Department which are declared under the Bengal Canals Act, 1864 (Bengal Act V of 1864), and which form the main arteries of navigation are cleared of water-hyacinth annually, where necessary. The question of what further action should be taken to eradicate, or prevent the spread of the plant is now under the consideration of Government.

(c) No such proposal is at present before Government.

Tax on non-agricultural income in rural areas.

27. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that a resolution has been passed in the last Conference of the representatives of District Boards in Bengal held in Government House, Calcutta, to the effect that the question of levying a tax on small non-agricultural income ranging from Rs. 240 to Rs. 2,000 per annum in the rural areas should be left to the discretion of District Boards?

(b) If so, are the Government taking any action to give effect to the resolution?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Two resolutions were passed on the subject at the last Conference of the representatives of District Boards, viz :—

(1) That the non-agricultural classes should be taxed, and

(2) that the fixing of rates of taxes of non-agricultural classes be left to the discretion of each District Board.

(b) The Member is referred to the reply given to unstated question No. 9 asked by Babu Fanindralal De.

High prices of Bengal rice and its export from Bengal.

28. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state whether the Government are considering the desirability of giving effect to the recommendations of the non-official Prices Enquiry Committee for restricting the export of rice from Bengal at least as a temporary measure for keeping down prices?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The recommendations of the Prices Enquiry Committee are under the consideration of this Government. The restriction of the export of rice from Bengal is a matter for the Government of India to decide. The position will be explained in the debate on a resolution on this question which is to be moved at the present meeting of the Council.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state if it is a fact that the prevailing prices of balam and dakshin rice are universally higher than what they were at season time in the last 12 years?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: As regards this question I think it is a fact but there will be a debate on this question at a later stage during the present session of the Council, and I would ask the Member to wait till then.

Scavenging arrangements in Circular Road.

29. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self Government been drawn to the fact that the practice of carrying away the refuse of Calcutta in open scavenging carts and emptying the same into open waggons from several platforms in Circular Road, is a source of annoyance to the citizens and danger to public health in Calcutta?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what steps, if any, are contemplated to remove the evil?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) Steps are being taken by the Corporation for the introduction of a system of motor traction for the removal of refuse. Orders have been placed for 16 lorries, of which 8 have been received and are being used. The remainder are expected very soon. The system at present is in an experimental stage. The Corporation have also a scheme in hand for the construction of a combined refuse platform and stone metal depôt at Chungubhatta, which will do away with the existing refuse platforms.

Cost of administration in Bengal owing to the passing of the Government of India Act, 1919.

30. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state whether the cost of administration in Bengal has increased in consequence of the passing of the Government of India Act of 1919 and, if so, to what extent?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The increased expenditure on account of the enlargement of the Executive Council, the appointment of Ministers and the increase of the Secretariat establishment under the Reform Scheme is roughly estimated at Rs. 3,82,000, but the figures are provisional only, as they are dependent on various factors which have not yet been finally decided. In the case of the Secretariat establishment, part of the increase of pay must be attributed to normal expansion of work and to increase of pay granted to meet the economic conditions arising out of the war. There will also be some increase of expenditure on the Legislative Department on account of the enlargement of the Legislative Council, but no precise figures can be given at present. The passing of the Government of India Act has led to a complete change in the allocation of revenue and expenditure between the Government of India and the local Government, which has further complicated the situation. The effect on the provincial income and expenditure will be apparent when the budget statement for 1921-22 is presented.

Chaukidari tax.

31. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to place on the table a detailed statement showing the total amounts of receipts, district by district, on account of chaukidari tax in the last two official years?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Figures of actual receipts on account of chaukidari tax are not available without a reference to district officers, but figures of the total cost of chaukidars and dafadars are contained in statement II of the annual report on the police administration in the Bengal Presidency. These figures correspond closely to those of receipts. A statement showing the total cost, district by district, for the years 1918 and 1919, is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstamped Question No. 31, showing the total cost of chaukidars and dafadars, district by district, for the years 1918 and 1919.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state what was the total expenditure on these heads and whether any and, if so, what balance was left?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: As explained in the answer to the question, we have given such figures as we have got as to total cost. To give further figures would require a reference to every district.

Recommendations of the Calcutta Communications Committee.

32. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: (1) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works been drawn to the recommendations contained in the report of the Calcutta Communications Committee?

(2) If so, what action, if any, are the Government taking to carry out the same?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (1) A copy of the Committee's report has been received by the Government of Bengal in the Public Works Department, and the recommendations of the Committee, in so far as the Department is concerned, are under examination.

(2) The Government of Bengal have come to no decision at present.

Sugarcane and cotton cultivation.

33. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state what practical steps, if any, have been taken or are proposed to be taken for the spread of sugarcane and cotton cultivation in Bengal as recommended by the Board of the Agricultural Department, at its first meeting held in March, 1920?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: With regard to the spread of sugarcane cultivation, it has been deemed advisable to await the report of the Sugar Commission before a definite programme for extending sugarcane cultivation on a large scale was formulated. In the meantime the question was thoroughly discussed at a Conference of Senior Agricultural Officers held at Dacca on December 6th and 7th, 1920. It was then decided that immediate steps could be taken in the following direction: The cane known as yellow tanna has been proved, as a result of several years' experimental work, to be the best all-round cane for Bengal, having in view its yield of sugar per acre and its resistance to disease.

The demand for seed of this variety is far greater than the supply and a policy of cane seed farms at selected centres was decided upon. The attention of the Department is being concentrated on the supply of sufficient seed of this excellent variety, so that if it is eventually decided to adopt a system of central factories, seed of a suitable cane may be available for the extended cultivation that this system will entail.

With regard to cotton, experimental testing of varieties was continued on the Government farms. The results are most disappointing and seem to prove that cotton cannot hope to compete with other rains crops, such as jute and paddy, so far as monetary returns are concerned.

It is useless to distribute seeds until we have a suitable variety and can prove that it will pay the raiyat to grow the crop.

An exhaustive examination of all the available records of cotton experimental work in Bengal during the last 100 years has been made and an abstract of the results will, it is hoped, be printed immediately for general information. The rainfall of Bengal is too heavy to grow cotton satisfactorily during the monsoon, but it is proposed to start experiments with cotton as a cold weather crop in certain selected parts of the province. Experiment alone will show whether cotton, as a cold weather crop, will be paying, but experiment has already shown that it does not pay to grow cotton as a rains crop.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Board of Agricultural Department decided last year to recommend spread of cotton cultivation in Bengal after fully considering the suitability of Bengal climate for the cultivation of cotton?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state if it is a fact that there is a large demand for cotton seeds which the Agricultural Department cannot meet?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khair Bahadur: I should ask for fresh notice.

Water-hyacinth in Bengal and the waterways of Assam.

34. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state whether it is a fact that water-hyacinth is carried to Bengal mandals along the waterways of Assam?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that no scheme for the complete extermination of the plant is likely to prove effective without the co-operation of the Assam Government?

(c) In answer to question No. 3 at the Council meeting held on the 13th March, 1919, regarding the problem of checking the spread of water-hyacinth, it was stated that the Public Works Department of the Government was taking steps to root out the plant gradually from all canals or khals maintained by Government or declared under the Canal or Embankment Act, and that some of the district boards were also co-operating in the matter of extermination. Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether as a matter of fact the steps taken have been sufficient to check the spread of the plant or whether the plant has gone on spreading?

(d) If the evil has not been checked, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what further steps, if any, have been taken or proposed to be taken to combat the spread of this plant and bring about its extermination?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khair Bahadur: (a) and (b) Government has no information to show that the water-hyacinth comes to Bengal mainly along the waterways from Assam.

(c) The steps hitherto taken have not been sufficient to check the spread of the plant.

(d) The question of what further action should be taken to combat the spread of the plant is now under the consideration of Government.

Members of the governing bodies or managing committees of mufassal colleges.

35. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to lay on the table the names of members of the governing bodies or managing committees of the first-grade mufassal colleges of Bengal?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: A statement was laid on the table showing the constitution of the governing bodies of Government first-grade colleges in the mufassal. Government are not concerned with the managing committees of non-Government colleges, except in so far as the grant-in-aid rules require that the management of the affairs of every college which obtains aid from Government (whether by a grant of money for maintenance or for capital charges or for land) shall be in the hands of a governing body constituted in accordance with the University Regulations and approved by the Director of Public Instruction.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 35.

Scheme for reorganizing the subordinate executive service.

36. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state when the final scheme for the reorganization of the subordinate executive service is likely to be published?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: The matter has been referred to the Government of India, and no announcement can be made till their orders are received.

Political prisoners and detenus of Bengal.

37. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state whether there are any Bengali political prisoners or détenus who have not yet been released?

(b) If there are any who have not yet been released, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state their number and the places of their confinement?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) and (b) All State prisoners under Bengal Regulation III of 1818 and all the détenus under the Defence of India Rules or the Ingress into India Ordinance against whom orders were passed by the Government of Bengal have been released.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTĀ: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state if there are any persons convicted of political offences who have not yet been released.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I do not quite follow the exact meaning attached by the Member to the expression "political offence." There are a certain number of persons still in prison, who have been convicted of murders and dacoities, and such like offences, in connection with recent troubles in the past few years in Bengal. They are still in jail, that is, those whose sentences have not yet expired. A few such persons have, however, been released.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTĀ: If so how many are there and where have they been kept?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: It is not possible to give the figures off-hand.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTĀ: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is their intention to release them on the occasion of the inauguration of this Council by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: There is no present intention of taking action further than that which has already been taken.

Public Vehicles Department of the Calcutta Police.

38. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTĀ: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department aware that there is a strong feeling against the administration of the Public Vehicles Department of the Calcutta Police?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member considering the desirability of enquiring into the causes for such feeling with a view to remedy the same, and to lay before the Council the result of such inquiry and the steps if any, taken?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the procedure by which Rules and Regulations relating to all classes of motor vehicles are framed and put into force under the Indian Motor Vehicles Act of 1914?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether, in the matter of the framing of these rules, public bodies, representatives of the public, representatives of taxi-owners and representatives of motor drivers are consulted?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether these rules and regulations are duly published in public newspapers and journals before being promulgated?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) and (b) Government are aware that there have been recent complaints regarding the motor traffic regulations and the exercise of control by the traffic police. There have also been complaints as to the dangerous state of the Calcutta streets because of ill-regulated motor driving, particularly in the case of taxi cabs. Government have appointed a committee, which is now sitting under the presidency of Mr. C. F. Beadel, to examine the existing regulations and control and to make recommendations as to the regulations, degree and manner of control that should be exercised in future in order to provide Calcutta with an efficient taxi cab service. Their report is awaited.

(c), (d) and (e) The rules under the Motor Vehicles Act were framed by a representative committee in 1914. The public were invited then through the medium of newspapers, to offer suggestions and criticism, and the draft rules were sent to the principal public bodies for opinion before they were published. Whenever changes are proposed, the draft amendments are published in the Calcutta Gazette for public criticism, one month's time usually being allowed, and any suggestions received are considered before the final notification of the rules. Proposed changes of an important nature are communicated to leading public bodies for opinion. They are not published specially in newspapers. Amendments made which are likely to be of public interest are brought to the notice of newspapers by the issue of press communiqués.

Electors under the Bengal Electoral Rules.

39. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to lay on the table a comparative statement showing the number of electors enrolled in each of the general constituencies under the new Bengal Electoral Rules as against the number of voters estimated by the Southborough Committee for such constituencies?

(b) If there is any substantial discrepancy, are the Government considering the desirability of ascertaining the cause?

(c) If action has been taken in this matter, will the Hon'ble the Member please state the result of the inquiry?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state how many applications for enrolment as voters were made to the Revising Authorities for each constituency, and the number of such applications rejected?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The comparative statement desired by the Member is placed on the table.

(b) The figures of electors used by the Southborough Committee were merely estimates, and Government do not think it necessary to institute inquiries as to the discrepancies between these estimates and the figures of the finally published rolls.

(c) The Local Government brought to the notice of the Government of India the figures of electors disclosed by the rolls, and recommended, on the light of these, some modifications in the distribution of seats. These recommendations were generally accepted by the Joint Committee and the Secretary of State.

(d) Inquiries are being made whether the information required is available, if so, it will be placed on the table in due course.

Statement referred to in the reply to unanswered Question No. 29 (a) Union Boards under Bengal Act V of 1919.

40. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state, district by district, and thana by thana how many Union Boards have been established up to date under section 6 of Bengal Act V of 1919?

(b) Has any Union Court or Union Bench been established in any Union Board?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) A statement* is laid on the library table.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

District Boards' expenditure on tanks and wells and on drainage, and expenditure by 24-Parganas District Board on medical relief and primary education.

41. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state what percentage of the total income of each District Board in Bengal has been spent during the last five years on—

(i) tanks and wells, and

(ii) drainage?

*Not printed in these Proceedings.

(b) Is it a fact that of all the District Boards the 24 Parganas District Board have invariably been spending, in recent years, the least percentage of their income (not exceeding 16 per cent. every year) on medical relief and primary education?

(c) If so, is the Hon'ble the Minister considering the desirability of calling the attention of the District Board to this?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) A statement is laid on the table.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

(c) This question does not arise.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred Question No. 41 (a), showing the percentage of income of District Boards spent on tanks and wells and on drainage.

Percentage of expenditure on transferred subjects in past years.

42. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state what percentage of the total annual charges or expenditure was spent on the heads now coming under the transferred subjects during the last ten years?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: Under the arrangements hitherto in force, expenditure has not been separately recorded for "Transferred" and "Reserved" subjects, and in the matter of the several administrations it has been conducted in most cases against the district allotment. The question is further complicated by the alteration of territorial boundaries which took place in 1912, and by the changes of budget heads which have been made in connection with the Reform Scheme. It is not, therefore, possible to separate the expenditure incurred in the last ten years on "Transferred" subjects in order to calculate the percentage of such expenditure on the total expenditure. Figures for the current year are being collected and will be given as far as possible in the budget statement for 1921-22.

Appointment of Ministers and dates of publication of elections.

43. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to say when the Ministers were appointed?

(b) What is the latest date on which the name of an elected member was published under Rule 12, sub-rule (9) of the Bengal Electoral Rules?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) On the 3rd January 1921.

(b) The 26th January, 1921, is the date on which the last list of members elected to the Bengal Legislative Council, at the general election, was published in the Calcutta Gazette.

Rice position in Bengal.

44. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state what is the present rice position in Bengal? Has the outturn been such as was anticipated in February last?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that there has been a partial failure of crops in some rice-producing districts, owing to the failure of rain in the month of Kartik?

(c) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state in what districts such has been the case and to what extent?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) The present position as regards rice is on the whole satisfactory. The final estimate of the outturn of the autumn crop is 86 per cent of the normal outturn. The second forecast of the winter rice crop puts the outturn at 90 per cent of the normal. The mean price of common rice in the middle of January was Rs. 6-8, against Rs. 6-15 for the corresponding period of 1920. No forecast of the outturn of the past season's crop was published in February.

(b) The autumn rice crop was generally good throughout the province except in Dinajpur, where it was only 61 per cent of the normal. The winter rice crop is estimated at less than 75 per cent of the normal in five districts only. The deficiency is attributed to want of timely rain.

(c) The following statement shows these districts and the estimated outturn in each:—

Dacca University Advisory Committee.

45. Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that there is a strong feeling in Eastern Bengal regarding the constitution of the Dacca University Advisory Committee?

(b) Are the Government considering the desirability of reconstituting that Committee?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what work the Vice-Chancellor of the Dacca University has been doing since his arrival in India?

(d) When is the Dacca University likely to be in working order?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) No.

(b) No.

(c) The Vice-Chancellor has been engaged in making preparations for the starting of the University.

(d) It is hoped that the Dacca University will be in a position to open its classes in July.

Malaria in Manikganj.

46. Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that malaria is at present rife in the Manikganj subdivision of the Dacca district?

(b) What action are the Government taking to meet the situation?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The attention of Government has been drawn to an outbreak of disease in the Manikganj subdivision, and a special inquiry has been made by the Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Dacca Circle.

(b) Three Sub-Assistants have been deputed there by the Sanitary Commissioner, and it is proposed to spend Rs. 1,075 on the distribution of quinine treatments and influenza pills.

Establishment of Co-operative Services in Bengal.

47. Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to place on the table the establishment of the Co-operative Services in Bengal with scales of pay of the different branches?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what the pay and prospects of the Co-operative Inspectors (other than Sub-Deputy Collectors) and Auditors are?

(c) Is the latter service a Government one and pensionable?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that Co-operative Inspectors and Auditors consider their pay and prospects to be inadequate?

(e) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of a feeling of resentment among officers in the Department on the ground that while almost all the other services have had their scales of pay revised on account of the present economic strain, their cases have not been considered since the creation of the Department?

(f) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what action (if any) they propose to take regarding the increment of the pay of these officers?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI Khan Bahadur: (a) A statement giving the information asked for is laid on the table.

(b) The pay of Inspectors and Auditors is shown in the statement referred to in the answer to (a). Inspectors are eligible for promotion to the posts of Chief Auditor and Divisional Auditors. Auditors are eligible for promotion to the rank of Inspector.

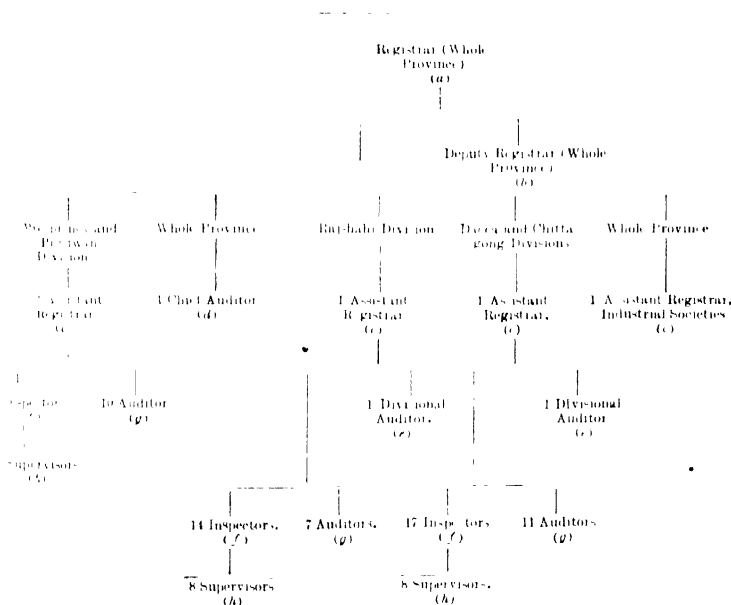

(c) Auditors are paid out of audit fees levied from the Societies. They are therefore not Government servants and are not eligible for pensions.

(d) and (e) No representation on the subject has been received by Government.

(f) Till recently the entire staff of the Co-operative Department (including the Registrar of Co-operative Societies) was temporary. The Secretary of State, however, has lately sanctioned the retention of a superior controlling staff as a permanent measure, while the question of the subordinate staff has been left to the consideration of the Local Government. This matter is now being dealt with by Government, in consultation with the Registrar of Co-operative Societies, and the question of the pay of the subordinate staff will come under consideration.

Action of Dacca Drainage Scheme contractors.

48. Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government been drawn to the proceedings of a general meeting of the Municipal Commissioners, Dacca, under date 21st December, 1920, in connection with the inconvenience and danger to the life and health of the public caused by the action of the contractors of the Dacca Drainage Scheme?

(b) Are the Government contemplating taking steps in regard to this matter at an early date?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) The Member is referred to the reply given to unstarred question No. 21.

Appointment of retired police officers as Honorary Magistrates of Dacca.

49. Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department aware that three retired police officers have recently been appointed as Honorary Magistrates of Dacca and that these appointments have caused great dissatisfaction to the Dacca public?

(b) Are the Government considering the desirability of appointing qualified non-officials as Honorary Magistrates instead of the police officers referred to?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) In May 1920 two retired deputy superintendents of police were appointed as Honorary Magistrates at Dacca, and in January 1921 a third was reappointed on the expiry of his term of service. Government are not aware of any dissatisfaction resulting from these appointments.

(b) No. While Government are of opinion that a general policy of selecting retired police officers to act as Honorary Magistrates might be open to objection, they are not prepared to debate themselves from making such appointments in the case of individuals who possess special qualifications for the performance of the duties attaching to the post.

(1) the expenditure incurred in connection with the Fisheries Department since its formation,

(2) the amount of work done by the Department during that time,

(3) the practical results so far achieved?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in a position to say whether the supply of fish in the Bengal markets is better and whether they are sold at cheaper rates than before?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Bahadur: (a) (1) A statement is laid on the table.

(2) and (3) For the work done and the results so far achieved, the member is referred to the annual reports of the Department of Fisheries for the last three years (1917-18 to 1919-20), and to the Government resolutions thereon, copies of which have been placed on the library table.

(b) Statistics of the supply of fish to the Calcutta markets only are selected. The figures for the last three years are as follows:

Appointment from Bar to District and Sessions Judgeship.

1. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be good to state whether, in the matter of the recommendation of the Public Services Commission, it is their intention to appoint only one person from the Bar as a District and Sessions Judge, or if not, how many such appointments are in contemplation and within what time are they to be made?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: In pursuance of the policy outlined in Government of India Home Department resolution No. 2559, dated the 1st December, 1920 (an extract from which is laid on the table), the Government of Bengal intend to appoint immediately one gentleman from the Bar as a District and Sessions Judge, and to make two more such appointments when suitable opportunities occur. Should the experiment prove successful, this number will ultimately be increased, but it is not possible at present to fix a time-limit or to frame a definite programme.

Extract from Home Department Resolution No. 2559, dated the 1st December, 1920, referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 51.

11. Appointments from the Bar.—Local Governments already have power under the rules laid down in the Home Department Notification No. 598, dated the 21st June, 1918, to appoint persons who are not members of the Provincial Service up to one-fourth of the total number of listed appointments. This power will be utilized by them as an experimental measure to appoint District Judges direct from the Bar. It is hoped ultimately to fill not less than 40 posts in this way should qualified men be available. Members of the Bar will, however, be appointed to posts in excess of 25 per cent. of the total number of such appointments, only as new posts are created, and with due regard to the claims of existing members of the Civil Services. Thus the rights of these officers will be duly safeguarded, as was expressly provided for by section 36 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1919, at the same time there will be no reduction in the number of posts open to men promoted from the Provincial Civil Service. Should the experiment prove successful (and on this point the opinion of High Courts will be ascertained from time to time) the full number, i.e., 40, will eventually be made available for persons from the Bar. For the purposes of these appointments, Vakils and Advocates of High Courts and Pleaders of Chief Courts will be eligible as well as Barristers.

Pay and prospects of Kanungoes.

52. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to state whether any representations have been received from the Kanungoes of Bengal praying for an increase of pay and betterment of their prospects; and what action, if any, has been taken in the matter?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: Memorials were received last year from several District Kanungoes. The orders passed on the memorials are contained in the Revenue Department letter No. 1702 T R, dated the 9th September, 1920, a copy of which is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 52.

No. 1702 T. R., dated Darjeeling, the 9th September, 1920

From—THE HON'BLE MR. M. C. McALEER, I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Revenue Department,

To—The Commissioner of the Rajshahi Division

I am directed to refer to your communications, noted on the margin, with which you forwarded memorials from certain District Kanungoes employed in the districts of Rajshahi and Pabna, on the subject of the improvement of their pay and prospects. The prayers of the memorialists are—

1. Memorandum No. 2427 J., dated the 30th June 1920
2. Memorandum No. 2431 J., dated the 9th July 1920
3. Memorandum No. 2803 J., dated the 3rd August 1920

- (1) that the pay of the District Kanungo may be fixed to be Rs. 120 rising to Rs. 250 by annual increments of Rs. 10,
- (2) that the District Kanungo may be regarded as an officer entitled to draw second class travelling allowance,
- (3) that 25 per cent. of the Sub-Deputy Collectors be annually recruited from among efficient Kanungoes, and
- (4) that in appointing circle officers and managers for wards' and Government estates their claims may be first considered

2. In reply, I am to say that the pay of District Kanungoes was substantially increased in the year 1911. The District Kanungo service, which formerly consisted of two grades, viz. Rs. 50 and Rs. 75, was re-organised in that year and a time-scale of pay of Rs. 60 per mensem rising to Rs. 120 per mensem by quadrennial increments of Rs. 10 was introduced. In these circumstances Government are not prepared to consider the question of the revision of their pay at present. As regards the prayer for the grant of second class travelling allowance, I am to observe that Kanungoes were formerly allowed to draw travelling allowance only when the distance travelled exceeded 15 miles a day. Since 1913 they have been allowed travelling allowance under the ordinary rules of the Civil Service Regulations. The Governor in Council does not therefore consider that the Kanungoes have a real grievance regarding their travelling allowance. With regard to the third prayer of the memorialists referred to above, I am to say that as the Revenue Department can nominate for only 20 per cent. of the vacancies annually in the cadre of Sub-Deputy Collectors from Departments subordinate to it, no further action can be taken in the matter.

District Kanungoes are already eligible for appointments as managers of Wards' and Government estates. Government do not therefore see the necessity of issuing further orders on the subject.

Curricula of study for Primary Schools.

53. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether it is a fact that sudden changes have been made in the curriculum of study for primary schools in Bengal and that these changes have been enforced as soon as they were made?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that these changes have been prejudicial to the interest of authors and have caused some of them great loss?

(c) Have the Government received any memorial from the authors concerned on this subject?

(d) Are the Government reconsidering their decision on this matter?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTÉR: (a) A new syllabus has been sanctioned. It has not yet been brought into operation.

(b), (c) and (d) The original orders of Government prescribing the new syllabus directed that it should be introduced with effect from the 1st January, 1922. The Minister in charge of Education has modified this order and the revised syllabus will now be introduced with effect from the 1st January, 1923.

Grand Trunk Canal project and acquisition of land therefor.

54. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware that in connection with the Grand Trunk Canal project, the Deputy Collector of Land Acquisition has been serving acquisition notices on owners of all holdings and buildings, whether these fall actually in the alignment zone or outside it?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that this is contrary to the assurance given by the Government to these owners in reply to their memorial?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of making an inquiry into the matter with a view to taking such remedial steps as may be found to be necessary?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Government are not aware that in connection with the Grand Trunk Canal project, the Deputy Collector of Land Acquisition has been serving acquisition notices on owners of holdings which are not required for purposes of the canal. The total area required for purposes of the canal necessarily extends beyond the alignment zone, as extra land is necessary for purposes of subsidiary works, such as staff quarters, service roads, etc., as also for manufacture of bricks and disposal of spoil earth.

(b) No.

(c) No remedial action appears necessary.

Births and deaths.

55. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the excess of deaths over births in Bengal during the official year 1919 was 395,719?

(b) Are the Government contemplating any measures to arrest this threatened depopulation of the country?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the affirmative

(b) The decrease, regrettable as it is, represents less than 1 per cent of the population, and such a decrease occurring in a single year cannot be regarded as indicative of a threatened depopulation of the country. The Member is referred to the first paragraph of the Government resolution on the report of the Sanitary Commissioner for 1919 (published in the Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette of the 29th December, 1920, page 1464), in which it is stated that the decrease is attributed to economic pressure resulting from the poor harvest of 1918 combined with the effect of high prices, the prevalence of influenza and the consequent excessive mortality which occurred in the latter part of 1918 and the earlier months of 1919.

Strikes of workmen in the firms of Messrs. Burn & Co. and Messrs. Jessop & Co.

56. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce aware that the workmen under Messrs. Burn & Co. and Messrs. Jessop & Co., numbering 12,000 in all, have been on strike for nearly a month?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that in these days of high prices these strikes cause serious distress among the workmen?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking early steps to settle the strikes by arbitration?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) Government are aware that strikes were recently in progress in the works mentioned. Both strikes are now over. The strike in Messrs. Burn & Co.'s works began on the 14th December, 1920, involved 5,000 men, and terminated on the 26th January, 1921. The strike in Messrs. Jessop & Co.'s works began on the 23rd December, 1920, involved 2,000 men, and terminated on the 29th January, 1921.

(b) Yes.

(c) In view of the answer to (a), this question does not arise.

Grant-in-aid to the Midnapore College.

57. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that the refusal of the Director of Public Instruction to revise the scale of the grant-in-aid to the Midnapore College has been very keenly felt by the people of the district?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that this refusal has been specially prejudicial to the interests of the professors of the College?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the increments in the salary of these officers are long overdue?

(d) Are the Government reconsidering their decision on this matter?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) The Director of Public Instruction was powerless in the matter. He had no funds which could be devoted to increasing the grant-in-aid to the Midnapore College. No representation has been submitted to the Minister.

(b) The Minister is aware that the inability of the Director of Public Instruction to revise the grant-in-aid prevented the College authorities from increasing the salaries of the professors and lecturers.

(c) and (d) The Minister is prepared to reconsider the question of increasing the grant-in-aid to the Midnapore College when the Education Budget for 1921-22 has been sanctioned, but he will not be in a position to increase the grant to the College, unless increased funds for grants-in-aid are placed at his disposal.

Closing Charitable Dispensary at Rajarampur under orders from Civil Surgeon, Burdwan.

58. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state why the charitable dispensary at Rajarampur in the flood-stricken area on the right bank of Damodar has been closed under orders of the Civil Surgeon, Burdwan?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that no non-official medical aid can be had for miles around Rajarampur and that the villagers there are very poor?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Since 1918 the District Board has opened a temporary fever dispensary at Rajarampur for 4 months every year. In 1920-21 it was opened on the 1st September and closed after working for 4 months in accordance with the orders of the District Board.

(b) The Government have no information as to the local conditions. The Government will inquire.

Distress in Paikgacha and other villages in Jessore district.

59. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue aware that the people in Paikgacha, and the numerous villages in Magura police-station, are in dire want of food, clothing and shelter?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that in consequence they are dying of cholera and fever in numbers?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member also aware that in North Magura and certain other places bordering on the river Kapotakshi, adjacent to Satkhira, the crops have totally failed over an area of about 50 square miles?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of ordering an immediate inquiry into the situation and of taking such steps as may be necessary to relieve the distress of the people?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Prior to the aman harvest the beggar class and a few persons without means of support suffered considerably owing to the fact that the charity usually available in the Patkgacha and Magura villages in the districts of Khulna and Jessore was temporarily withheld. The District Magistrate accordingly arranged for the distribution of rice and cloth at convenient centres. Since the aman crop came into the market the Magistrate has visited all the affected areas and satisfied himself that the continuance of gratuitous relief can no longer be justified.

(b) Cholera appeared in sporadic form in many villages of the Khulna district in November last. The local authorities, with the help of the Sanitary and Deputy Sanitary Commissioners, took remedial measures, which appear to have stamped out the epidemic during the month of December. The current epidemic reports show no cases of cholera in the villages of Magura and Patkgacha stations.

(c) Government are aware that over an area of 50 square miles near the Kabodak river the crop has totally failed. The area in question is liable to saline inundation and ample work is now available on the construction of embankments for the local inhabitants. The District Magistrate, who visited this area, reported that at present there is no appreciable distress in that area. The crop in North Magura was good.

(d) The District Officer is in close personal touch with the situation and no further inquiry is necessary at present.

Co-operative banks in villages.

60. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Revenue aware of the fact that co-operative banks in villages are not opened in spite of repeated calls from the honorary organisers?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to say whether the Government are taking any measures to set the matter right?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) Whenever the legal formalities are observed no co-operative societies are refused registration, provided the applicants are of good character and can either finance themselves or arrange to be financed by a Central Bank.

(b) This question does not arise in view of the answer to question (a).

Election of Deputy-President.

The Council proceeded to the election of the Deputy-President.

The PRESIDENT: The Council will now proceed to the election of the Deputy-President. I have got only two notices, namely— (1) for the election of Babu Surendra Nath Ray as Deputy-President, proposed by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, seconded by Mr. D. C. Ghosh; and (2) the other is for the election of Dr. A. Suhrawardy, proposed by Mr. Watson-Smyth and seconded by Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. Atzal. The Council will now proceed to the election.

A ballot was taken with the following result:—

Mr. S. N. Ray, 59 votes

Dr. A. Suhrawardy, 46 votes

Mr. S. N. Ray was declared elected.

The Deputy-President's Emoluments Bill.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to determine the salary of the Deputy-President of the Bengal Legislative Council. In so doing, I would first of all offer my congratulations to Mr. S. N. Ray upon the honour which the Council has done him. Both he and the other candidate are, I am sure all will agree, well suited by their attainments and long experience of previous Councils to preside over our deliberations. But when there are two candidates for one vacancy it is obvious that only one can be taken while the other must be left, and as regards Dr. Suhrawardy, we can only wish that he may have better fortune next time.

Sir, the Bill, which is before the Council, is of a commendable brevity, which one might sometimes wish was characteristic of all our Bills. It is introduced in compliance with section 72 C of the Government of India Act, clause 2 of which says that there shall be a Deputy-President of the Legislative Council who shall preside at meetings of the Council in the absence of the President, while clause 5 provides that the Deputy-President shall receive such salary as may be determined by an Act of the local Legislature. Under those provisions of the Government of India Act we have accordingly to introduce a Bill covering the point at issue, and it is proposed in the Bill, as a basis of discussion, to provide for a salary at the rate of Rs. 5,000 per annum. The actual sum will be determined by the vote of the Council. Obviously it was incumbent upon the Government to put forward some figure, and in arriving at a figure of Rs. 5,000 we were guided by the consideration that the office was one of honour and dignity, which, therefore, should carry with it a reasonable though not excessive remuneration. The duties of the post may or may not be arduous. We hope they will not be, as we trust, Sir, that you will long be spared with health and strength to preside over our debates. The duty of the Deputy-President will be to preside over the Council in the unavoidable absence of the President, and doubtless in other miscellaneous ways he will be able to help the President in the business of the Council. There were various ways by which the remuneration might have been fixed. We might have given a daily fee for each sitting of the Council. That, I am given to understand, is the method proposed in the case of the Deputy-President of the Legislative Assembly, the rate I am told, which has been suggested being Rs. 30 per diem. It seemed to us that that course presented difficulties. The Deputy-President might be asked to do work on days on which the Council was not actually sitting, and a daily fee of small amount is perhaps not altogether consistent with the dignity of the office. A second method would have been to fix a monthly salary to be paid throughout the year. To that there was the possible objection of calculations for broken periods, if the salary was to be dependent on the actual sittings of the Council, while otherwise the salary might have been paid during months in which the Council was not in session. We therefore came round to the proposal of the Bill, and we understand from the daily press that this course is also about to be proposed in Madras. We have put forward the salary clause only provisionally for discussion and the future form of it will depend upon the vote of the Council.

The Bill is simple in character, and we do not contemplate its reference to a Select Committee. The issue is clear and can only be decided by a vote of the Council. I propose therefore to move on the 21st instant that the Bill be taken into consideration with a view to its being passed.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I thank you very much for referring to my services in this Council and I am also thankful to you for having elected me as Deputy-President of this Council. It is the only elected office which is under the Council. I have assured some of my friends that I am not going to take any emoluments for the office so long as I am here.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I beg to move that this Council is of opinion that no salary should be attached to the post of the Deputy-President and that the Bill be postponed sine die. I would have used a stronger word "rejected," but as my learned friend says that he would not take any salary I use the words "sine die." Sir, we are a poor people and indeed cannot afford to spend a single pie on unnecessary things. All of you know that there is a deficit of 2½ crores in Bengal and that the deficit will, it is rumoured, be made up by appropriating surplus balance. When we shall be able to husband our resources there will be time enough to pay any salary to anybody. But at present there are a great many things to do for our people and we cannot miss-spend one single rupee. The gentleman, who has just been elected, has refused to take any remuneration. Dr. Subhawardy would not have taken any remuneration either. There are at least two dozen men in this Council who were willing to work without any remuneration. Therefore there is no use forcing any salary upon them. I therefore propose that there should be no salary and the Bill be postponed sine die.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I have much pleasure in supporting the motion which has just been moved by my friend.

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! Under the rules there can be no debate. I would refer you to section 50 of the Manual. It says that, if a motion for leave to introduce a Bill be proposed, the President after permitting, if he thinks fit, a brief explanatory statement from the member who moves and from the member who opposes the motion, should put the question. I do not propose to allow any debate, and what I would do now is to ask Sir Henry Wheeler to make a brief explanatory statement and, after he has done so, to ask the member opposing the motion to do the same and then I will put it to the vote.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: With reference to the speech that we have just heard I would like to explain that under the Government of India Act we must have a Deputy-President, and he, under the same Act, shall have such salary as may be voted by the Legislative Council. I submit, therefore, Sir, that if we disregard that provision by declining to allow the introduction of the Bill, we are disregarding a statutory provision governing the constitution of the Council. As regards the generous statement of Babu Surendra Nath Ray that he has personally no desire to take the remuneration attached to this post, we all admire, of course, the public spirit which has instigated that offer. But I would put it to him that an equally efficacious way of achieving his aim would be, after allowing the Bill to pass into law, to refrain from drawing whatever salary is fixed for the post, a course which will rejoice the heart of Mr. Kerr. That, it seems to me, would be the proper position which would at the same time ensure compliance with the Government of India Act.

Rai JOCENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I propose to use the word "sine die," because my friend Babu Surendra Nath Ray desired me to do so; otherwise I would say "reject the Bill altogether."

The PRESIDENT: You can only give an explanatory statement and not enter into a debate regarding the merits of the Bill, which comes up when the Bill is taken into consideration.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I would have no objection to the Bill being passed, but what I object to is that there should be no mention of salary attaching to the office and the post should be an honorary one.

The PRESIDENT: You are out of order.

Mr. J. CAMPBELL FORRESTER: Am I in order in calling attention to the fact that if the Vice-President declines to accept the salary—

The PRESIDENT: I cannot allow any speech. Gentlemen, before I put the motion, I may say that generally at the stage of the introduction of a Bill the principles of the Bill are not to be discussed. The general principles of the Bill are discussed when the motion is that the Bill be taken into consideration or that it be referred to a Select Committee. Then you discuss the general principles of the Bill and after that you discuss the various provisions of the Bill one by one. The motion that leave be given to introduce a Bill means nothing more than this—that the Bill is placed before the House. However, the rules allow a member to oppose the Bill, and in this case the Bill has been opposed. I will now ask the Council to divide.

The Council accordingly divided and the result of the division was as follows:—

Resolutions

(under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest).

The PRESIDENT: Although the resolution standing in the name of Mr. Watson-Smyth is No 8 in the Appendix to the List of Business, those who precede him have expressed a desire that his resolution should be moved first. I accordingly call on Mr. Watson-Smyth to move his resolution.

Hour of meeting of Council.

Mr. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: "This Council recommends to the Government that His Excellency the Governor be approached with the request that future meetings of the Bengal Legislative Council be summoned for 3 o'clock in the afternoon."

This is as far as I know the procedure followed at Westminster, the mother of Parliaments. The trouble about being elected to this Council is that in Bengal, and specially in Calcutta, we have practically no leisured class. We have to take our legislative duties in competition with our business duties, and therefore it is difficult to get the best men that Calcutta and Bengal can produce, because they are afraid either on the one hand that they will neglect their legislative duties on account of their ordinary work, or, on the other hand, that they will neglect their work in order to attend the Council. Now we in this new Council are so newly acquainted I am afraid I cannot say with certainty the classes to which we all belong, but I think I am fairly accurate in saying that the great majority can be divided into four classes—the officials, lawyers, professors and business men. I will appeal first to the officials. They of course are to a certain extent more fortunate than the rest of us. They have a knack which we have not of carrying their office wherever they go by the assistance of a red chappassi and a pile of mysterious things called files. But still it must be very inconvenient to them to have to carry through urgent business sitting in some room off the lobbies of the Council chamber, and it would be much more convenient if they could spend the mornings, at any rate, of Council days doing their work in their own offices. As regards lawyers, especially Calcutta lawyers, I think I can count on their support. It is not only inconvenient, but also it costs them a good deal of money if they are unable to attend to their work on Council days either at their chambers or in court. Professors too suffer from the same difficulty, and their presence is required in their lecture rooms or at the University. As regards business men—Indians as well as Europeans—the difficulty is very great and the inconvenience of attending the Council meetings in the morning will go a great way in keeping the best men from the Council for fear that their business will suffer. The whole point is this, that men have got to make up their mind whether they can do the two things, and the conclusion that many of them come to is that they cannot. Therefore either they will attend to their business and neglect their duties by being absent from the Council, or else they will do their best to attend Council, and if they find that makes them neglect their business duties they will either resign or at any rate not offer themselves for the next election. It, however, a compromise can be come to, namely, that we can do both without detriment to either, then I think it will be a good thing both for the men themselves and for this Council. The compromise that I suggest is that we so arrange this Council to meet that the business men can spend their mornings in their offices, and then having had their lunch they can come round and devote the rest of their day to the legislative duty. I think that in this way and in this way only shall we attract to this Council a class of men that it most necessary should be returned. I therefore, Mr. President, commend this resolution to the Council.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I have much pleasure in seconding this resolution which has just been moved. It is one of the duties of this Council to develop Indian industries and encourage commercial education. That is the reason why we should have the co-operation of the European merchants who are the members of this Council. It appears that it is most inconvenient for them to attend the meetings of this Council at 11 o'clock and it appears that it will be most convenient for them to attend meetings of this Council at 3 o'clock. Therefore, Sir, I think we would be justified in voting for the resolution. It will be most inconvenient for the lawyers of Calcutta, for the official members of this Council, to attend at 11 o'clock, and I may draw your special attention to the fact that the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation and the Chairman of the Calcutta Improvement Trust are members of this Council. They cannot be expected to attend this Council at 11 o'clock, otherwise the work of the local authorities will materially suffer. I may also state, Mr. President, that the meetings of the British Parliament, the House of Commons, as well as the House of Lords are held at 4 o'clock, and therefore I think we would be justified in convening meetings at 3 o'clock as suggested instead of at 11 o'clock.

THE PRESIDENT: I would now call upon Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur to move his amendment, and after the amendments are moved there will be a discussion.

RAI RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved "that in the resolution to be moved by Mr. Watson-Smyth, for the figure '3' the figure '2' be substituted."

As many of the members of the old Council may remember, we used to meet at 11 o'clock and when there was a number of important measures for discussion or a number of resolutions to be gone through, the Council continued to sit till 6 o'clock with an interval of one hour for lunch. On an average, I believe, we used to sit for about six hours and the proposal of my friend Mr. Watson-Smyth reduces that time to three hours. Having regard also to the fact that considerable time is taken up by questions and answers and also supplementary questions, I think the time that will be left at the disposal of this Council for the transaction of the ordinary business will be quite inadequate. Perhaps an earlier hour than this would be more suitable to transact the volume of business which, I am sure, will grow larger and larger day by day, and I think some compromise— I used the word "compromise" as has been used by Mr. Watson-Smyth— may be come to, and I suggest that for the figure "3" the figure "2" be substituted. I may explain that it will not entail any inconvenience to any professional member. In the first place, as we all know from our experience of the old Council that the questions and answers take not less than three quarters of an hour, and looking to the number of members on the former Council, which was 52, and now we have 139 members, and also looking to the large, growing and extensive interest which my countrymen are now taking in the affairs of my country, I am sure the number of questions will also grow larger and larger, and I think if we have the meetings at 2 o'clock we may safely leave one hour margin for questions and answers. Therefore those who are not able to come exactly at 2 p.m. may come a little later, say 2.45 or 3 p.m. without any sacrifice of their profession. I know that some of my learned friends here have got their succulent pastures in that corner of an adjoining building (I mean no offence), they may attend the Council meetings at any hour they please without putting themselves to any inconvenience, as they know that they need not attend when the questions are put and answers given. To those of them who want to put any supplementary question, my reply is that they may do so even if they come half an hour later, and the questions might also be so arranged as to suit the convenience of the members as well. As regards my friend Babu Amulya Dhone Addy's argument that the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation and the Chairman of the Improvement Trust, who are very important members of this body, will be very much inconvenienced, if they are to attend the Council at 11 A.M., I would say that 3 P.M. would be a more inconvenient hour for them. But Babu Amulya Dhone Addy forgets the fact that the Chairman of the Corporation is more required in the afternoon to transact the business of the Corporation, and the work of the Improvement Trust will not suffer if the Chairman attends the Council an hour earlier. I am sure neither Mr. Donald nor Mr. Bompas will send many interpellations to embarrass the Hon'ble Ministers. I do not wish to further detain the House on this subject, but I hope that this modest compromise will be accepted by Mr. Watson-Smyth.

Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA moved "that in the resolution to be moved by Mr. Watson-Smyth, for the figure '3' the figure '4' be substituted."

I beg to move that 1 P.M. be substituted for 3 P.M., as the time for the meeting of the Council as proposed in the original resolution by Mr. Watson-Smyth. 3 P.M. might well suit the convenience particularly of those of the Calcutta members who are otherwise engaged in the High Court, mercantile offices, banks, etc., but it will be very disadvantageous on many grounds to other members, especially to the mufassal members, who have to keep away from their homes for days together to attend the meetings of the Council. The mufassal members who desire to return home early can easily avail themselves of some of the early trains which usually start between 2 and 5 P.M. if the Council sits at an earlier hour, but if the Council sits as late as 3 P.M. as is proposed in the original resolution, it is quite possible that all the items in the agenda paper would not be finished in the course of the day. This would mean the detention of the mufassal members in Calcutta involving unnecessary halting charges. As regards the amendment of Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, I think that 2 P.M. is the usual hour for lunch, but if the meetings are held at 1 P.M. it will not be too early and at the same time give short recess to the members for their lunch. For these reasons I think that the Council should sit at 1 P.M. instead of at 3 orders of this Council. Under these standing orders the Council shall meet at such an hour as the Governor may appoint, and although, following precedent, we have started to-day at 11 o'clock, I am authorised by His Excellency to say that it is his wish to fix such an hour for future meetings as, compatibly with the efficient discharge of the business of the Council, will best meet the convenience of the majority of the members. He will be guided therefore, largely, by the results of to-day's discussion.

Apart from that point, one may perhaps say a word on the resolution as it strikes one personally, and we doubtless all, quite legitimately, regard the matter largely in its personal bearing on ourselves. From the official point of view the proposed resolution has much to commend it. It is unfortunately true, as Mr. Watson-Smyth said, that our files can follow us about, but, there is a difference between doing work in office and doing it here in the hurried moments between the alarms and excursions of division bells and what not. Therefore we officials would appreciate the hour suggested, as it will enable us to get a few hours in the morning, in which to deal with our ordinary work, with which it will take us all our time to keep pace. Of the two amendments I like the second least, as it seems to me neither one thing nor the other. It anticipates the afternoon while not allowing the full ordinary duration of the morning. The amendment of Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur is perhaps not open to that criticism in the same degree, but having had some experience of his superb unpunctuality in past meetings of this Council, I cannot but feel that when he says 2 p.m., he does so with the mental reservation that, in his own personal case, it will be 3 p.m. I would also put another point, and that is we shall, unfortunately, have sittings in the hot weather, and it is of some advantage, both in the interests of our energy and temper, that we should, if possible, have the greater part of our sittings in the cooler portion of the day. For my own part, then, I can only say that the proposal of the resolution is quite acceptable.

Babu NIRODE BEHARY MULLICK: The principle on which the resolution is based and the discussion on it reminds me of the philosophy of Jacques in As You Like It, in which he says "it is 10 o'clock. An hour after it will be 11." Perhaps on this principle, I believe some members suggested 1, some 2 and some 3 p.m., but I want to remind them that unfortunately Calcutta is not the whole of Bengal and that there is a Bengal outside Calcutta. We, who belong to that Bengal, cannot afford to be present at the meetings at 3 p.m. which may last for months. The hour that will suit us best would be 11 o'clock, but Mr. Watson-Smyth has spoken of a compromise, and I suggest that the compromise be 1 o'clock.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: My suggestion is that it will be very inconvenient for all of us who come from the distant mufassal places if the Council sits at 3 p.m. instead of 11 a.m. We should look at this question from another standpoint, namely, what would be the most suitable hour for the Council as a collective body and not from the standpoint of individual convenience or otherwise. We have got a whole-time President and we have got more than half a dozen Executive Councillors and Ministers. Why should not then the Council be also given whole-time sittings so that we can get through a lot of work in the course of the day? The time suggested may suit a certain section of Calcutta lawyers or influential Calcutta merchants and traders in such a way as to make both their ends meet. But what about the poor people who come from Chittagong, Noakhali or Comilla? The members who come from the mufassal have also got their professional and other duties and it is not proper to look to the interest of one section only. It is really sad that the Calcutta lawyers, merchants and traders cannot afford to spend a certain part of the day in the interest of the reformed Council. They need not be as regular in their attendance at the Council as a student who seeks a prize for regular attendance. I do not wish to take up the precious time of this Council any further, and I only wish to say that none of these proposals should be accepted by this Council.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: It was not my intention to take part in this debate, but the reason that I wish to say a few words on this resolution is this. It is all very well to philosophise on a matter of this nature. It is easy enough for members of this Council coming from the mufassal, and I must confess that, until I was a member of Council, I was very much a mufassal man myself, to say what their conveniences or inconveniences are. You have heard the last speaker say that as we have got a whole-time President, other individuals, who come to this Council—officials and non-officials—should devote their whole time to the Council. That certainly is not a reasonable proposition. You must not forget that these officials or non-officials have got other business to attend to as well. In my opinion this Council can only decide upon one of the two courses—one is to meet as you do now and adjourn after what is known as lunch time, and the other is to meet after lunch time whether it be 2 or 3 p.m. and to proceed with your work until you do not wish to proceed any further. I think some of you, gentlemen, seem to forget that in a new Council of this nature those of you who have got anything to say can much shorten the time of discussion by avoiding verbosity. Those of us who realised this in the past can very well confine our speeches to 5 minutes instead of 15. We have sat for 4 or 5 hours, because we have been accustomed to it, but I am sure that the members of the new Council will not have the same patience with the great flow of eloquence that is sure to take place when an important debate goes on in this House. With due deference to my friend Mr. Watson-Smith I consider this resolution to be rather premature, but it is a matter on which I have an entirely open mind, and I consider that the best course for you to follow would be to accept as an experiment for this session, at any rate, what Mr. Watson-Smyth has proposed. You can easily change it, for nothing is likely to be sacrosanct in these days, nor do I suggest that Mr. Watson-Smyth's proposition should be held sacrosanct. What is more you can learn by experience whether it is going to be convenient or inconvenient, but I do not know how far the Rai Bahadur, who would of course like to take plenty of Bhim Nag's sandesh with his mid-day meal, would agree to this. There are people who have their lunch at 1-30, they will have to hurry up to the Council Chamber if the meeting is held at 2 p.m. I think, therefore, that the best course in a matter of this kind is to adopt as an experimental measure the hour suggested in the resolution which has been moved by Mr. Watson-Smyth. Whether the new hour would make it possible for the European members to get away from the Council chamber in time for their dinner or for dances at the Saturday Club my friend Mr. Watson-Smyth knows best, but for the present I think our best course would be to adopt the resolution.

Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: We must know how many hours a day we are to work here, and when that is settled we can decide when we shall sit.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: There is so much difference of opinion on this subject that it is impossible for me to formulate what would be the hour, and I think when there is so much difference it is better to stick to the old hour and come to the Council at 11 a.m. and go away from it at 5 or 6 p.m. That arrangement seemed to be a convenient one for the last four years when I was in the Old Council and none complained of the arrangement. The way in which work is being done in the Council shows that much time may be spent on discussing a single resolution. Consequently it will be better for the Council to consider whether we should start our work at 11 a.m. If this be not done I can prophesy that the mufassal members will have to wait in Calcutta for days together. It strikes me that in the new Council there being so many members, much time will be taken up in the discussion of a single resolution, as many members would like to represent their views.

Consequently I am afraid that if the Council does not sit at 11 a.m. we will have to wait longer in the Council chamber. 3 p.m. may be a convenient hour for the Calcutta merchants, pleaders and business men, but they ought to consider also the convenience of the mufassal members as well. If that is done I am sure there will be no dissentient voice in the matter of fixing an hour. The Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan suggested that we might start at 3 p.m. as an experiment, but I beg to submit that that will be inconvenient to many members and that is why I disagree with him. With these few words I beg to oppose the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: I desire to intervene in the debate in the hope that perhaps the Calcutta men and the mufassal men would come to some agreement. Speaking for myself it does not matter to me whether the Council starts its sitting at 3 p.m., 2 p.m. or 1 p.m.—and these are the three proposals before the House. I find that a lot of apparently divergent opinion has been expressed, but I am inclined to think that divergence is more apparent than real. Some of the mufassal members think that if 3 p.m. be fixed it will be very hard on them. I may say at once that I am in favour of this Council conducting its business in a business-like manner and I am not in favour of short hours. I have every sympathy with members who are dragged from their distant mufassal homes and detained here for days and days together, but I have no doubt that Calcutta members appreciate their position quite as well as I do. If we have fairly long hours then we really meet both sides. Suppose we start at 3 p.m. and go on till 7 p.m. That will mean four hours' work. Did we really do very much more than that under the old system? Under the old system we used to sit at 11, adjourn for lunch at 1-30, and reassemble at 2-30 and then go on till 4-30 or 5. That meant about four and a half hours' work. Therefore if we all make up our minds to work four hours I think the mufassal members will not have anything to complain, and if the Calcutta members wish to have their convenience suited by the mufassal members, they can best do so by coming to a compromise. But of course when the business on the agenda paper is not heavy we could adjourn earlier than 7 p.m., but if the business were heavy we could go on a little longer, because I think it is to the interests of the mufassal members that the business should be finished in as few days as possible.

The Council here adjourned for lunch.

The Council assembled after lunch.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I have followed with the closest interest the debate on the resolution which has been placed before this House by Mr. Watson-Smyth. I regret that there should be any tug-of-war on this question between the commercial members and the lawyer members on the one hand, and the mufassal members on the other. Unfortunately, for myself, I happen to be both a merchant and a lawyer, but I refuse to believe, Sir, that any case has at all been made out for departing from the practice which used to be followed in this Council. In deciding this question we should be moved by a consideration not of the convenience of one section of the community or the other. Besides, the advocates and the supporters of this resolution and the amendments have forgotten one very important fact and that is this: that if the time is fixed at 2 or 3 o'clock, it will interfere with the time fixed for the prayer of the Muhammadan as well as the Hindu members. I therefore feel no hesitation in opposing both the resolution as well as all the amendments that have been placed before the House.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: I quite agree with what has fallen from the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan and also from the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter. But one thing ought to be considered before we come to a final decision. On behalf of the Muhammadan members I want to point out that between the hours suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter time for Isa and Magrab prayers intervenes, and in order to meet the convenience of all the members it is desirable that the Council should meet at 3, i.e., after the Zohar prayer, and there should be two short recesses for the Isa and Magrab prayers, and the Council should adjourn at 8 p.m.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINCH ROY Bahadur: As a compromise I propose that instead of 3 or 2 o'clock, I think it would be better to have the Council at 2-30. We adjourn Council at 1-30, so we may meet at 2-30.

The PRESIDENT: This comes by way of an amendment, of which notice should be given. I cannot allow it.

Mr. C. H. BOMPAS: This discussion has turned so far largely on the question of convenience, and to a certain extent it appears that the convenience of mufassal members is somewhat different from the convenience of the Calcutta members, but I wish to point out that Mr. Watson-Smyth raised another branch of the subject. He pointed out that if this Council meets at 11, it would probably mean that a certain number of leaders in the commercial world, and in law and other professions, would be debarred from standing for membership of this Council. I believe that all of us here are convinced of the importance of the functions which this Council will perform in future. We are all anxious that it should fulfil these functions in the best way. We must all be convinced that it is most important that this Council should be truly representative of all the interests in the province. I think there is not a single member in the mufassal who would stand for membership in this Council if it met at 11, but who would refrain from doing so if its meetings were held at 3 o'clock. It is also undeniable that there are a considerable number of the leading men in Calcutta, who will be debarred from standing for membership if it sits at 11 a.m. I therefore appeal to the mufassal members of this Council that we should so arrange our business that it may be possible for the leaders of all branches of work in this province to take part in our deliberations. I am not sure that mufassal members have really any grievance. It is quite certain that as the work of the Council increases, members will find that their duties will not consist solely in attending meetings and assisting in debates. They will find that there is a great deal of work to be done outside this Council, there will be an interchange of ideas between leaders from all parts of the province and I am quite sure that all this will take several hours of their time every day. I believe that mufassal members will find that they will have to spend their time in these consultations and these arrangements, and so on, up till 10 o'clock, they can then have their bath and meal and nap and be ready to attend the Council at 2-30. They will not find much inconvenience, this is the natural course of life in Bengal. It is the only proper course in the hot weather. I therefore appeal to the mufassal members partly for facility of their own work, but mainly on the grounds put forward by Mr. Watson-Smyth, that many important interests will be debarr'd from being represented on this Council if it sits at 11 A.M. I think the second half of the day is the most convenient for our deliberations.

Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: I regret that I have to oppose the resolution moved by Mr. Watson-Smyth, changing the hour of the sitting of the Council from 11 A.M. to 3 P.M. The practice of holding the Council at 11 A.M. has among other advantages this much in its favour, that Muhammadan members can avail themselves of the lunch adjournment to offer their Zohar prayer. If the hour is changed to 3 P.M. the Muhammadan members must have two adjournments of the Council, one for half an hour for Isar prayer between 4 and 5 P.M., and the other for half an hour for Magrib prayer just before sunset. In the course of three or four hours to adjourn the Council twice will not be conducive to good work.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I did not wish to take part in this debate, but I feel that in a matter of such importance, I ought not to give a silent vote. It is quite clear that the trend of mufassal opinion is distinctly in favour of fixing the hour at 11 in the morning. But I desire to point out to my friends in the mufassal that they are under a misapprehension if they assume that their morning hours will be lost. Nothing of the kind. There will be hard and strenuous work as the Council proceeds with its duties and responsibilities. There are important Bills which will have to be introduced and in regard to which references will have to be made to Select Committees. These Select Committees, following the precedent of the House of Commons, will meet in the morning. Then there is, without anticipating the future, the Calcutta Municipal Bill coming up for consideration, the amendment of the Bengal Municipal Act will also have to be taken up, and there will also be the amendment of the Local Self-Government Act. Select Committees will be appointed in connection with all these Bills, and these Select Committees must meet in the early hours of the day. There will be other committees, the character of which I am unable at the present moment to foreshadow.

There will be an abundance of work for mutassal members in the morning hours, and this can only be done if the Council meets at 3 o'clock. At the same time it seems to me that as we are here to promote public business, it must be done in a spirit of compromise and self-sacrifice. We should not think of ourselves only. Whether in this Council or anywhere else we are not always permitted to have our own way. I appeal to mutassal members and those whose personal convenience will be affected to look at the question from the larger standpoint of efficient work and public utility. It seems to me quite evident that there is a large section of non-official members whose presence we want in this Council and who are here in considerable numbers, and who will help us in our deliberations-- I mean the Calcutta merchants and lawyers who are here to-day. We require their wide experience. I think we should go half-way to accede to their wishes, and I may point out that so far as I am concerned, the morning is very convenient to me, the afternoons are not. I go to bed at 9 in the evening, but I am prepared to sit up till midnight, if necessary, for the work of this Council. I therefore appeal to my friends in the mutassal to set an example of self-abnegation in this matter-- a sacrifice of personal interests and personal convenience to suit the other members who are in Calcutta and elsewhere, and to accept the suggestion of Mr. Watson-Smyth. I am perfectly certain that if we find that this arrangement is not suitable and causes inconvenience to a large number of the members, we should be quite prepared to make a change. Our rules are not as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Let us try it as an experiment for this session, and if we find it inconvenient we can change it. I hope that no division will be called for and that Mr. Watson-Smyth's resolution will be accepted.

Babu HEM CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI spoke in Bengali opposing the original resolution.

SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ also spoke in Bengali opposing the original resolution.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE moved that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: I think I should allow the debate to continue. It is important that we should have the views of as many members as possible on a question like this.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I move that the motion moved by Mr. Watson-Smyth about fixing the time at 3 o'clock be dropped, obviously because the Muhammadan members offer their prayers just in the afternoon. But of course if some recess is given for offering their Asar prayer and the Magrib prayer which is said at sunset, the afternoon will be suitable. My objection on behalf of the Muhammadan members is that there ought to be a recess of about a quarter of an hour for the Asar prayer, and another recess for the Magrat prayer if the Council sits beyond sunset. That is my point for submission before the Council.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I have only one word to say. I desired at first that the meeting should take place at 3 o'clock, but after hearing the mufassal members I have completely changed my mind. Sri Surendra Nath Banerjee spoke of sacrifices to be made by the mufassal members. Are all the sacrifices to be made by us for the Ministers and their friends? That is very good! Sacrifices, if any, should be made by the Ministers and their Calcutta friends and not by the mufassal members.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I hope that I am not intruding upon the prerogative of Mr. Watson-Smyth. I have followed with great interest the speeches that have been delivered for and against this motion. In the first place it has been said that we ought to make some sacrifice in the discharge of our duties. May I ask, and ask in all seriousness, if those who are advocating a change of hour from 11 A.M. to 3 P.M. are doing so in a spirit of self-sacrifice? It is quite apparent from the speeches that have been delivered in support of Mr. Watson-Smyth's motion that our friends, the Calcutta merchants and lawyers, have joined together in order to fix an hour which will be most suitable to them. I have ascertained from the mufassal members their views during the lunch hour, and they are all opposed to it. They think under the present system business will be completed in a couple of days, whereas a change will entail a longer time for discussion of the business on the agenda, and the mufassal members will be compelled to spend a longer time in Calcutta and not be able to attend to their business. Another point is, as the old members are aware, that in the afternoon usually many members leave the House, and I appeal to the members on the Government side, as well as on the ministerial side, to consider the point. Many members are aware that sometimes in the afternoon there is not a sufficient number of members to count a vote. Further, it has been stated that the Muhammadan members will be put to great inconvenience in saying their prayers. Hindu members will be equally inconvenienced. I was not a little amused to listen to the speech of Mr. Bompas. This is the first time that I have the pleasure of hearing him in the reformed Council. He has said that we want the representative men to be gathered together and none to be absent. Are not the mufassal members also representative men as well? He has said that, following the traditional custom of Indian habit, the members will take their bath in the morning, then meal at mid-day, a nap in the afternoon and after being refreshed they might attend the Council at 3, as if they had nothing else to do to earn their living, and as if there were no lawyers or professional men among the mufassal members, and that they would all be contented to take meals, bath, and nap, and attend the Council in the afternoon. If that is his experience after his 32 years' stay in Bengal, then I must say that his experience is not quite adequate to his stay in this country.

Then, it has been said that it will greatly hamper the commercial and the European members if they were to attend at 11 o'clock. May I enquire of Mr. Watson-Smyth whether he remembers that he was for some time a member of the old Legislative Council?

Mr. S. R. DAS: I rise to a point of order. Is the member entitled to speak against his own amendment?

The PRESIDENT: I cannot help if the member speaks against his own motion. It is his own look-out.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: If I am speaking against my motion, I think it will help my friend more than myself. I have already stated that I am in favour of maintaining the present hour of 11 o'clock, and that my motion is a compromise. What I want to point out is that the European members and the commercial members have for the last 50 years attended the Council from 11 o'clock and they have not grudged it and they have never approached His Excellency the Governor to change the time to 3 o'clock. If they have done their work diligently in the past and they have not felt any inconvenience, I do not quite understand why this motion emerges from Mr. Watson-Smyth.

The Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee has said that there will be enough work for the mulassal members as also for the Members of Council, because of the number of Select Committees they will have to attend from 11 to 2. Well, Sir, that shows that if all the members are willing to work during that time and will not keep away from the meetings of Select Committees, they will all come all the same at 11 o'clock. Therefore, I am afraid, as Mr. Das has pointed out, instead of supporting my amendment I was speaking against it. If members can afford to attend Select Committee meetings at 11 o'clock, surely they can afford to attend the Council at 2 o'clock. My proposal is a very modest one and I hope my amendment will be carried.

Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: I do not like to speak anything at this stage in order to waste the time of the members of this Council.

Mr. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: I will not take up the time of this Council very long in replying, as most of the points which I had intended to make have been made for me by the supporters of my resolution who have spoken since lunch.

The last question asked by my friend Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur can easily be answered. The difference is a very great one between what used to go on in the Council in the old days and what is likely to go on in the future. In the old days, the Council meetings were not very long, except under very exceptional circumstances, such as the Rent Bill and contentious measures of that kind. And also we, merchants, had only to put up two men on the Council. Consequently, the circumstances in the old days are quite different to the circumstances at present, under which the Council will meet and meetings will be very long and protracted to any length of time, and we, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, have to put a very large number of men on the Council.

Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, as an old debater, was very clever when he made his original speech in putting in something, which was not in my original resolution and in building up a greater portion of his argument on that. Of course I should have been smart enough to see that he might do that and spike his gun before he had a chance of letting it off. As I have said, he is an old campaigner in these matters, in which I am but a child. He has said that we must rise at 6. Therefore, if we only begin at 3, we should only sit for three hours. Of course, in my resolution, there was nothing at all about what time we should rise. My resolution simply says that we should sit at 3, and the time when we should rise never entered my mind at all. As a matter of fact, we should go on till our work is finished, and consequently the idea of a three hours' sitting never crossed my mind at all.

I may tell my mufassal friends that it is not the wish of the Calcutta members to prolong the session and to multiply the days on which the Council has to sit—that is the very last thing we want. We want to get through the same amount of work in a day by commencing sittings in the afternoon as we did when we sat all day. It is my deliberate opinion that if we sit at 3 and rise at 7, if possible, four hours of continuous work will give us as much, and probably a great deal more than the four and a half or five hours' work under the old system of the old Council. For one thing, you will avoid an adjournment for lunch which has the effect of prolonging a debate more than anything else, for at the time for adjournment a motion may be just on the point of being put to the vote; and during the hour of adjournment members gather new ideas and after lunch there is a new list of speakers and the debate looks as far from ending as before.

There is another thing which the Rai Bahadur has said and I will also adopt it as my own—and that is, that in the evening members are tired. There is nothing that stops the volume of eloquence so much as the setting of the sun, and I think a member will no doubt between 6-30 to 7 put his views clearly and concisely in three minutes, which he would take 30 minutes to do at an earlier time of the day. Therefore, I think we will not detain the mufassal members longer in Calcutta by sitting at 3 o'clock in the afternoon than we will if we sit at 11 o'clock in the morning. After all, gentlemen, when we talk about sacrifices and conveniences and things of that kind, it is really the majority that should have their way, and personally I am perfectly willing to place this resolution as it stands before you and take the vote, so that the conveniences of the majority may win.

The amendment of Babu Surendra Narayan Sinha was, by leave, withdrawn.

The amendment of Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur was put and the Council divided as follows:—

Reduction of Executive Councillors.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "This Council recommends to the Government that the Government of India and His Majesty's Government in England be moved to take such steps as may be necessary to reduce the number of Executive Councillors in Bengal to two."

The resolution which I have the honour to move runs as follows: "This Council recommends to the Government that the Government of India and His Majesty's Government in England be moved to take such steps as may be necessary to reduce the number of Executive Councillors in Bengal to two." Sir, it is in the fitness of things that this resolution has got precedence over others in this day's list of business, as I know of no other resolution which is of more vital importance to us from whatever standpoint we may look at it. It was at the special request of some of my friends this morning, that I consented to have the resolution about the time of the Council moved first. Of course I am sorry for it now. In another resolution I have been permitted to raise the question of reducing the number of Ministers also. Both the resolutions could be considered together, as both of them deal with practically the same question and the same principle and cover the same ground. I am fully alive to the fact that if these resolutions are accepted by this House and then by the Government we, the people, lose two very important and lucrative positions at the top, while the Civil Service will lose one only. We might also lose the likelihood of greater influence in the joint deliberations of Government in the relative position of 5 to 3, whereas in the proposed reconstruction the relative position would be 3 to 2. I assure my colleagues that I yield to none in my desire for achieving greater and greater indianisation of the Government machinery. But all these considerations to my mind count for nothing when we think of our imperative duty to the people whom we are proud to represent in this Council. With all the emphasis I can command I very humbly, respectfully and earnestly implore the Government to pause and consider if it is at all necessary for the best interests of good government to create this costly machinery with so top-heavy a superstructure on the very weak foundations of an all-round accepted national poverty. If my information is correct it is not for the first time that this question is raised by me to-day in this Council, but it was raised and discussed very seriously in the Council of the Secretary of State, and it was only an irony of fate that the mischief could not be mended there. But then the matter may not yet have been made final and I have reasons to believe that it has been reserved for reconsideration in the very near future. I may be permitted to notice here that all credit is due to the Government of Sir Harcourt Butler in the United Provinces for having stood the test and not having been carried away by the wave of contagion running high in the other Presidencies of the same status.

Sir, the very simple issue involved in my resolution is this: while there were only three Executive Councillors to help the Governor of this Presidency in the year 1920 in the administration of all its affairs, how is it that four Executive Councillors are appointed in the year 1921 to carry on the same administration made much less onerous than what it was in 1920 by the transfer of some very important branches of the administration to the charge of Ministers? I ought, perhaps, to make it clear at the outset that the Government of India Act itself is not responsible for this. Clause I of section 47 of that Act, which provides for the appointment of Executive Councillors, is in these terms: "The Members of a Governor's Executive Council shall be appointed by His Majesty by warrant under the Royal sign manual and shall be of such number not exceeding four, as the Secretary of State in Council directs." I do not and cannot be expected to know the history of the direction of the Secretary of State in Council, but I know this—that the Government of India Act only gives a maximum and I have often wondered how it is that the maximum is always taken as the standard in this country as for another instance the salary of the Executive Councillors.

The strength of administration has thus been increased from 4 to 8. Previous to the Reforms we had the Governor and three Members of the Executive Council, while now we have the Governor, four Members of the Executive Council and three Ministers, keeping aside the President of the Legislative Council. The reasons which led the Government to make this costly change are yet unknown and are liable to all sorts of conjectures. Has the work increased so much between 1920 and 1921 that the strength of the administration must be doubled? I confess, Sir, I do not know of any such increase. Such a sudden innovation entailing so heavy an expenditure can only be justified by a corresponding increase of work, and I think no such event has happened between the years 1920 and 1921 as would lead to doubling the amount of the previous work. The Government of India Act also as far as we can gather had not brought about so great a change—if at all—as would require doubling the strength of the administration. I would therefore submit that there is no justification for creating four posts in the Executive Council, and if I can convince my esteemed colleagues as to the correctness of my proposition I would ask them to join with me in my appeal to the Government to make the retrenchment suggested by me. Let not any sense of delicacy or any other sense intervene between them and their duty to the motherland, and I am absolutely certain if we could by one united voice demand this retrenchment it would be impossible for the Government to resist. I give below a comparative statement of the division of work among the Executive Councillors according to the system that obtained before the present Reforms and the division of work among them and the Ministers according to the present arrangements.

88 REDUCTION OF EXECUTIVE COUNCILLORS. [7TH FEB

The arrangement before 1921, so far as my information goes, was:—

	Department	Branch
(1) H.E. the Governor ...	(a) Political ... (b) General ... (c) Municipal ...	(2) Political. (1) Ecclesiastical (3) Sanitation (ex- cluding local bodies)
(2) The Hon'ble Mr. Cumming (afterwards Sir C. J. Steven- son Moore) ...	(a) Revenue ... (b) Public Works ...	The whole Do
(3) The Hon'ble Sir H. Wheeler ...	(a) Appointment ... (b) Political ... (c) Financial ...	The whole. (1) Special Section. (3) Jails (4) Police The whole.
(4) The Hon'ble Maharajahduraja Bahadur of Burdwan ...	(a) Judicial ... (b) General ... (c) Municipal ...	The whole (2) Education (3) Miscellaneous (1) Local Self- Government. (2) Municipal. (3) Sanitation (local bodies)

The present arrangement from 1921, so far as my information goes, is as follows:—

	Present Departments (after Reforms)	Previous Departments (before Reforms)
H.E. the Governor ...	No portfolio.
(1) The Hon'ble Sir H. Wheeler ...	(a) Appointment ... (b) Political ... (c) Police ... (d) Ecclesiastical ... (e) European Education...	Appointment Political Do General. Do
(2) The Hon'ble Maharajahduraja Bahadur of Burdwan ...	(a) Land Revenue ... (b) Land Acquisition ... (c) Forests ... (d) Irrigation ... (e) Excluded areas ...	Revenue Do. Do. Public Works New
(3) The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr ...	(a) Finance ... (b) Separate Revenue ... (c) Commerce and Re- served Industrial subjects ... (d) Marine ...	Financial Do. Do. Either Revenue or Public Works.
(4) The Hon'ble Sir Abd-ul-Rahim	(a) Judicial ... (b) Jails ... (c) Emigration ... (d) Immigration ... (e) Jurisdiction ...	Judicial. Political. Financial. Do. New.

		Present Departments (after Reforms)	Previous Departments (before Reforms)
(1) The Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea	...	(a) Local Self-Government ...	Municipal
		(b) Public Health ...	Do
		(c) Medical ...	Financial
(2) The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter...		(a) Education minus European Education...	General
		(b) Registration ...	Do
(3) The Hon'ble the Nawab Sayid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri	...	(a) Agriculture ...	Revenue
		(b) Public Works ...	Public Works

I give these details subject, of course, to correction, but I believe they are approximately correct and can be relied on for the purpose of the present resolution. From the above it appears that in Bengal His Excellency the Governor is without a portfolio. This is rather unusual, and though the first Reforms Despatch of the Government of India anticipated that the Governor of a Province would have hardly any time under the Reformed Government to take up a portfolio, it will be seen that the Government of India were then under the impression that the Governor would continue to be the President of the Legislative Council under the Reformed Government. And it was on that account only that they thought that owing to the expansion of the Legislature the Governor's time will be wholly taken up by the Legislative Council. I could not do better than to quote the very words of the Despatch. In paragraph 38 of that Despatch they say: "It is clear that the sessions of the legislature will be longer, that far more time will be consumed in consultations and committees; and that it will no longer be possible for the Governor, who will be the keystone of the new Provincial system, to retain any portfolio in his own hands." And then in paragraph 86 they say: "the first proposal that the Governor should remain President of the Council is generally supported by the local Governments. Among non-officials there is some difference of opinion and some political associations favour an elected President, but for the reasons given in the report (meaning the Montagu-Chelmsford Report) we are persuaded that the Governor ought to preside." With great respect to His Excellency I submit, therefore, that I am at a loss to make out why this arrangement, I mean his not taking up any portfolio, has been made. And I am not quite sure if the same arrangement now prevails in the other provinces—I believe not. Before 1921, as will appear from the above, His Excellency had some branches of the administration in his own hands and, besides this, he was the President of the Bengal Legislative Council. Under the present arrangement His Excellency is not the President of the Legislative Council. A whole-time separate post has been created for that purpose with a salary of Rs. 3,000 a month. Consequently one is anxious to know the reason why even when relieved of the arduous duties attached to the Presidency of the Legislative Council His Excellency does not think fit to keep in direct touch with some important branches of administration. That is to my mind a decided loss as well to the administration as to the people. I say all this only in the public interest without meaning any sort of disrespect for His Excellency. And I am fully confident that if there were not so many members in the Executive Council with hardly sufficient work to do, His Excellency would have gladly taken over some branches of the administration into his direct control, and I think this very fact adds strength to my resolution. Then from the above table it will also appear that before 1921 there were eight broad departments - (a) Political, (b) General, (c) Municipal, (d) Revenue, (e) Public Works, (f) Appointment, (g) Financial, (h) Judicial, and there were sub-departments under the department Political - (i) Special Section, (ii) Political, (iii) Jails, (iv) Police, three sub-departments under the department General - (i) Ecclesiastical, (ii) Education, (iii) Miscellaneous; and four sub-departments under the department Municipal - (i) Local Self-Government, (ii) Municipal, (iii) Sanitation (excluding local bodies), (iv) Sanitation (local bodies only). Under the present arrangements these eight broad heads have been divided into as many as 24 heads and distributed among four Executive Councillors and three Ministers. An analysis of the distribution and comparison of the same with the distribution of business prior to 1921 would show that under the present arrangement -

- (a) Sir H. Wheeler has got Ecclesiastical (minor part of General) and some part of Political from His Excellency the Governor, and European education (minor part of General) from the Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan. On the other hand he has been relieved of the whole of Financial and Jails (minor part of Political).
- (b) Mr. Kerr has got the whole of Financial minus Medical and Marine (part of Revenue) from Mr. Cumming (afterwards Sir Stevenson-Moore).
- (c) Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan has got portions of Revenue (viz. Land Revenue, Land Acquisition and Forests) and part of Public Works (viz., Irrigation) from Mr. Cumming (afterwards Sir Stevenson-Moore), and he has got excluded areas (new) only in addition.
- (d) Sir Abd-ul-Rahim has got the whole of Judicial from the Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan and Jails (part of Political) and Emigration and Immigration (parts of Financial) from Sir H. Wheeler; and he has got Jurisdiction (new) in addition.
- (e) Sir Surendra Nath has got the whole of Municipal—major portion of it from the Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan and some portion of it from the Governor and he has got Medical (part of Financial) from Sir H. Wheeler.

- (f) Mr. Mitter has got Education and Registration (part of General) from the Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan minus European Education which has gone to Sir H. Wheeler.
- (g) Nawab Sahib has got Agriculture (part of Revenue) and the whole of Public Works minus Irrigation from Mr. Cumming (afterwards Sir Stevenson-Moore), Irrigation having gone to Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan.

It thus appears that Mr. Cumming's (afterwards Sir Stevenson-Moore's) work has practically been divided between the Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan and the Nawab Sahib, Burdwan having got the "excluded areas" in addition. And we also get from a comparison of Sir Henry's work and Mr. Kerr's work, taken together, with Sir Henry's work in the old régime, that practically the work of Sir Henry has been distributed between him and Mr. Kerr. And similarly from a comparison of the work of Sir Abd-ur-Rahim and that of Sir Surendra Nath and Mr. P. C. Mitter, all taken together, with the work of the Maharajadhiraja before 1921 we get that the work of the Maharajadhiraja has now been distributed between Sir Abd-ur-Rahim, Sir Surendra Nath and Mr. P. C. Mitter.

Therefore my conclusion is that even without disturbing His Excellency the Governor the work that is now divided between Sir Henry and Mr. Kerr can very well be done by one only, and again the work that is now divided between Sir Abd-ur-Rahim and the Maharajadhiraja can similarly be very well done by one only. If His Excellency cares to take some part of the business in his own hands, so much the better, but supposing he does not, even then, with a little redistribution the work of the Executive Council, as it at present stands after the transfer of the transferred subjects, can I think be managed by two only without either of them being overworked, and I trust the whole Council, including even my friends on the Government benches, will agree with me. For after all it is but common sense that it cannot take seven or eight persons to do the same work which used to be done by three or say four.

If then two Members of the Executive Council are a luxury, I am sorry, I as a representative of the people, cannot possibly support it. My poor province cannot afford this luxury, and I think we shall fail in our duty if we do not avail ourselves of the very first opportunity for undoing this costly arrangement.

My suggestion, therefore, would be to keep one Indian member and one Indian Civil Service member in the Executive Council. This would give us a saving of as many as 1,28,000 rupees per year. We are hearing on all sides proposals of taxation to meet the growing demands of the administration, if not immediately, possibly in the near future, as foreshadowed in the District Board Conference in the beginning of January last. I doubt not if retrenchments are made in the way suggested

We are hearing on all sides proposals of taxation to meet the growing demands of the administration, if not immediately, possibly in the near future, as foreshadowed in the District Board Conference in the beginning of January last. I doubt not if retrenchments are made in the way suggested by me and in other ways we could possibly avoid any fresh taxation of my already overtaxed poor countrymen and devote the savings towards the pressing needs of the country. And in this view I appeal to His Excellency and, through him, to the Government of India and the Secretary of State in Council that this luxury ought not to be allowed to go on even for a single day. My clear proposition is this—there is no necessity for such an arrangement, therefore it cannot and must not exist to the cost of the people. I am an old member of this Council and I confess I never heard during my tenure of office since 1916 that the Members of the Executive Council were overworked.

The administration of a larger area than the present area of the Presidency of Bengal, meaning the area of the Province of Bengal in the year 1905, used to be administered by one Lieutenant-Governor with the help of six Secretaries and five Under-Secretaries or so. And now in 1921, we have the Governor, four Executive Councillors and three Ministers, the President of the Legislative Council and several Secretaries, Under-Secretaries and Registrars. If things go on in this way and you go on adding such high salaried officers now and then, I don't know what ultimately awaits my poor country. Surely, therefore, checks and limits must be put. The least possible amount ought to go towards the cost of administration. That is certainly one of the tests of a good administration. Mine is a poor country, but nowhere perhaps in the world are there such highly-paid officers as in this country. I speak again subject to correction, because I do not interest myself much in the salaries of officers elsewhere. I implore everyone of my colleagues therefore—let not our critics say with any show of reason that the Reforms were introduced with the purpose of creating some highly-paid posts with a view to pacify the leaders of discontent. If they were, I for one would say, "Take back these Reforms"—the country does not want them at so ruinous a cost. Reforms to be real must first solve the problem of bread, making adequate arrangements for vocational education, and preserving the poor masses from the ravages of malaria and the abnormally high prices of the necessities of life.

The policy of the Government in creating four posts in the Executive Council is also open to the criticism that it has been done for the benefit of the Civil Service without caring for the heavy burden it will impose upon the public exchequer. The exponents of this view would maintain that before 1921 two of these highest appointments in the province were thrown open to the Civil Service; and to avoid the growing displeasure of the service for the introduction of the Reforms these two appointments were kept intact for them, and having regard to the recommendations of the Joint Committee two more Indians had to be added. I do not know what reply to give to this charge. If this view was correct I would say that it would be going directly against the spirit of the Reforms.

I think I have already tired out the patience of my colleagues, but I hope they will pardon me, considering the gravity of the proposal which I have ventured to bring up to them. And before I resume my seat I may mention that my resolution gets ample support from no less authorities than the Joint Select Committee of both the Houses of Parliament on the Government of India Bill, the first Reforms Despatch of the Government of India on the Reform proposals, and last but not the least in importance the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. The Joint Committee stated in their report with regard to clause 5, that "the Committee are of opinion that the normal strength of an Executive Council, especially in the smaller provinces, need not exceed two members." In paragraph 218 of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report on Constitutional Reforms it has been distinctly stated that the Provincial Executive Council is to consist of two members, one of whom will be an Indian. Then, though at first sight one might think that the Government of India in their first Reforms Despatch had recommended that there should be three members in the Executive Council, it would appear that this recommendation was based on the idea that His Excellency the Governor would not be able to take any portfolio, as his time would be taken up by the Legislative Council over which he would have to preside. Consequently when His Excellency is not the President of the Legislative Council, I would submit that even the Reforms Despatch can be taken to have recommended only two members in the Executive Council in addition to His Excellency.

And, in the last place, I may point out that the volume of work in the United Provinces, to which I have already referred, is not lighter than that of Bengal. The following comparative table will, I think, sufficiently bear me out:—

Name of Province	Number of districts	Area in square miles	Population	Estimated resources yearly, 1919-20	Expenditure
				Rs	Rs
Bengal	28	78,412	45,483,977	7.30 crores	7.77 crores
United Provinces of Agra and Oudh ...	48	107,164	47,182,044	13.76 crores	11.59 crores

And the Government of India Act also gives the United Provinces the same status as to Bengal. If then the United Provinces can do with two Executive Councillors and two Ministers, there is no reason why Bengal cannot and should not do the same.

One word more and I have done. I must not be understood to have meant one single aspersion, either direct or indirect, upon the ability and public-spiritedness and patriotism of my friends over there on the Government benches. I do not for a moment believe that any one of those estimable gentlemen, all of whom are my personal friends, and whose friendship I shall always value very highly, have entered upon their great office with any idea of personal gain. Nor do I apprehend the least opposition from any one of them if any reduction is decided upon by the Government. Many of them, I know full well, do not care in the least for the emoluments of their high office but have taken up these responsible offices only from a high sense of public duty and patriotism.

With these few words I would commend this resolution to the acceptance of the House.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: In rising to support this resolution I ought to say at the outset that I do not mean the slightest disrespect to the gentlemen who are the present Members of the Executive Council of this Government. In fact I have the highest regard for their ability and for their zeal for work; but everybody knows in this Council that the people of this country were quite taken aback when they heard that four members were going to be appointed in the Executive Council of this province. While formerly we had, during the time of the Lieutenant-Governors in the year 1909 and before that, one Lieutenant-Governor and three or four Secretaries to perform the duties of administration of this province and this province included the province of Bihar and Orissa; now, we have four Executive Council Members and three Ministers, together with a Governor and the President of the Legislative Council, to perform the duties in Bengal proper and three Executive Council Members and two Ministers in Bihar and Orissa. When the partition was effected we all said: men from Eastern Bengal as well as from Western Bengal—that there ought to be one Governor and an Executive Council instead of two provinces under two Lieutenant-Governors. That is what we asked for. And what did we get? When the agitation over the partition in which my Hon'ble friend Sri Surendra Nath Banerjee was the central figure, was over, and the partition was unsettled and Bihar and Orissa was made a distinct province under a Governor with an Executive Council, we also had our Council Government with three members in the Executive Council—two officials and one non-official. So there were five Members of the Executive Council carrying on the administration of the former province of Bengal. But with the advent of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms we find that instead of one Lieutenant-Governor and three or four Secretaries we have two Governors with 12 Executive Council Members and Ministers and a dozen Secretaries to perform the same duties. And the cost of this will have to be borne by the country. I am sure if my hon'ble friends—the Members of the Executive Council—had been in my place as popular representatives in this country or any other country—even they themselves would have come forward to denounce this present system which has brought into this Council four Members in the Executive Council in addition to the three Ministers. Is it necessary that we should have so many administrators in the top rung of the ladder? I will quote from the report of the Joint Parliamentary Committee. It says: "That the normal strength of the Executive Council, especially in the smaller provinces, need not exceed two members. They would not reduce the existing statutory maximum of four. But if in any case the Council had two members with service qualifications, neither of them being Indians, then the Council should also include two Indian members." They consider that two members would be sufficient for the purpose of administering the reserved subjects in the provinces. Now in Bengal so far as I am aware—so far as the public are aware—the Members of the Executive Council before the Reforms were introduced never complained that they were overworked. If they had complained—if they had said that they were overworked in carrying out the administration with any efficiency—then that would no doubt have been a very good ground and just and fair ground for the Secretary of State to appoint four members in the Executive Council. But as it is we do know why these four appointments had been made.

Then we find also in the second report of the Joint Select Committee on the Government of India Act—I read from the last paragraph: "The second matter which has been brought to the Committee's notice is the desire that they should reconsider the recommendation made in their report on the Bill, that if a provincial Executive Council contains two members with service qualifications, neither of whom is by birth an Indian, it should also contain two non-official Indian members." Well, at the time when Sir John Cumming was about to retire, there was only one official Executive Council Member and that was an opportunity for Government not to fill up one appointment. Why was it not done? Of course now that these appointments have been made what is our duty? I do not say, drive away immediately the two gentlemen who have been appointed. I am not so very unreasonable as that. But what I would say is that when Sir Henry Wheeler's term of office expires next year, let the post be not filled up, and when the post of the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan falls vacant after a year, let that appointment be not filled up as well. It will be enough if we have two members in the Executive Council and not four. There will be some debate on this question, and what is the reason? The country feels that some very high posts have been created and large amounts are going to be spent on salaries. Well, I am sorry that my friend the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee is not here to fight the people's battle, but I hope he will fight this question in the cabinet. That is my request to him and my earnest solicitation.

Babu FANINDRALAL DE: The subject-matter of the resolution is one which not only vitally affects the depleted treasury of the province, but also important from a general consideration. Only a few years ago, Bengal, Bihar and Orissa was a single province, and the administration used to be carried out by a much smaller body than at present. Then came the separation of Bihar and Orissa with its own Government. Next, with the advent of the Minto-Morley scheme, we had three Members in the Executive Council, who could smoothly manage the affairs of the province till the other day. Suddenly seven Councillors - I mean four Members and three Ministers - have been thrust upon us. True, the administrative work of the province is increasing and will increase with the gradual developments of political, social and material progress of the province, but as it is, there is absolutely no justification in the present state to increase the number to such a figure. Even the Parliamentary Joint Committee in its report says: "The normal strength of the Executive Council need not exceed two members," and certainly nothing abnormal has happened in this brief interval to justify this action of the Government. Again, a consideration and comparison of the respective portfolios of the old members with those of the new, indicate glaring inconsistencies. In the old régime one member had charge of Education and Self-Government; both of these are now transferred to two Ministers, of course with some additions in one case. The other two members have also been relieved of substantial portions of their duties, such as Registration, Agriculture, Excise, etc., and still the remaining portfolios have been distributed amongst four members. A more costly and luxurious administrative machinery is difficult to conceive. Apart from any other consideration, it is imperative from sheer economic necessity only, that retrenchments must be effected in this direction. With these few words, Mr. President, I wholeheartedly support this resolution.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: In discussing a resolution of this kind this Council is in a position of some difficulty on whichever side the sentiments of the speakers may happen to fall, whether in favour of the resolution or against it, since, as is recognised in the somewhat involved form of the resolution, the decision which is in issue is not a decision of this Council, it was not, indeed, a decision of any authority in this country. It was the outcome of the whole procedure adopted in the matter of the recent Reforms. Actually in this matter of the number of Memberships of the Executive Council the decision was of the Secretary of State in Council, but in arriving at that decision the Secretary of State, necessarily and rightly, paid heed to the various pronouncements made from time to time during the discussions of these Reforms by the authorities who had to deal with them. The procedure of those Reforms must be fresh in the minds of all, and if I touch upon its major features, it is merely to emphasize the point that I am now endeavouring to make. As all are aware, action dates from the famous pronouncement of the 20th August 1917 -a decision of His Majesty's Government. Following on that decision, Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford were deputed by that Government to make an inquiry in this country, and after taking an enormous amount of evidence and consulting as wide a range of public opinion as was accessible to them, either directly or indirectly, they submitted a report. That report, in its turn, after being subjected to criticisms was laid before the Houses of Parliament and was examined by a Joint Committee. The Joint Committee submitted its report, and the Bill subsequently made its passage through the House of Commons and House of Lords and became the law of the land. That was the procedure of the Reforms, and a matter like the present is governed by the pronouncements and findings which were arrived at in the course of that protracted discussion. It is scarcely open to us to say that we do not accept this or that part at the instance of isolated critics who did not actually take part in this lengthy inquiry, nor were even members of the bodies which came to the decisions involved.

Passing from that general point, I would like to explain to the Council more precisely how it came about that the present Executive Council of the province of Bengal has been composed of four members. In paragraph 218 of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report the suggestion was offered that an Executive Council should comprise two members— one official and one non-official. I see the mover of the resolution picking up his ears and saying "That is all I want." There was, however, a contingent aspect of that course. Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford saw perfectly well, and recorded their opinion in paragraph 220, that when the Governor of a province was not himself an official, he would not, with a Council so constituted, be provided with adequate official advice and assistance. That point, I submit, is clear. The administrative field in this country is large and no one official, however wide his experience may be, is fully equipped in every quarter of it. Some in the course of their services have specialised in one direction, and some in another, but none can have specialised in all, and the position of one official among a total of five or six non-officials, presided over by a Governor from England, would have been practically impossible if he was expected, single-handed, adequately to present what may be called the "official" case. If the basis of the whole scheme of dyarchy is the combination in one Government of official and non-official experience, it is obvious that both elements should be represented in reasonable force. Well, Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford, seeing this, made a proposal— a tentative proposal—that there might be official Members of the Executive Council who had no portfolios. But as was specifically said in a published despatch of the Government of India, no portion of the scheme came in for more criticism than this, and it seems to me clear that outside officials, however well qualified they may be for the appointments they hold, may not necessarily be equally qualified for the position of a Member of Council which in that event they would presumably be filling, if of the requisite seniority. Again, no official intervening spasmodically on specific invitation could advise on particular cases with the authority and responsibility of a Member of Council in constant touch with the administration and habitually acquainted with its developments. For these reasons, briefly, that proposal was discarded, and the final proposal of the Government of India was that the Membership of the Executive Council should remain as before the Reforms, namely, two officials and one non-official.

We now pass to the finding of the Joint Committee, and when I refer to the finding of the Joint Committee, it is practically the finding of Parliament, in so far as it was not modified by any pronouncement of the latter. The relevant portion of the report of the Joint Committee ran as follows: "The Committee are of opinion that the normal strength of an Executive Council in the smaller provinces need not exceed two members. They have not, however, reduced the statutory maximum of four, but if in any case the Council includes two members with service qualifications, neither of whom is by birth an Indian, they think that it should also include two non-official Indian members."

Bengal is obviously not one of the smaller provinces and I have just outlined the reasons for thinking the presence of two official members to be essential. Adding two non-official members under the above dictum of the Joint Committee, we arrive at a total of four. That was, in brief, the history of the evolution of the Council. It rests mainly on this fundamental necessity, which was accepted by the different authorities concerned, of giving an adequate official representation in the Council, with the corresponding addition of a non-official element of equal strength, and in so far as this Government is subordinate to the Government of India, and through the Government of India to His Majesty's Government, the decision is binding upon us.

But it is also a decision which, if I may say so, is defensible on its merits. The two main criticisms advanced against it are its extravagance in so far as it involves the over-weighting of the administration at the top. Now that is an argument which was definitely considered by the Joint Committee and rejected by them. That is a point of considerable importance, as the whole support of this resolution is practically based on this criticism of extravagance. The Joint Committee in their second report said: "The second matter which has been brought to the Committee's notice is the desire that they should reconsider the recommendation made in their report on the Bill, that if a Provincial Executive Council contains two members with service qualifications, neither of whom is by birth an Indian, it should also contain two non-official Indian members. The Committee have given their best consideration to the arguments upon which this request was based, but they see no reason to change their opinion. They recognise that this decision may involve a slightly greater man-power in the Government than present statistics would strictly justify, but they have little doubt that the increase of work arising out of the new legislative bodies will be such as to render past experience a doubtful guide as to the volume of business likely to fall upon the executive, and in any case they think it of more importance that as many Indian gentlemen as possible should obtain experience inside the Government, than that the salaries of a few of them should be economised." On that argument, therefore, we have a definite finding, many aspects of which will doubtless commend themselves to the Council.

The other criticism, which has been adduced, is briefly summed up in the contention that we did not have these appointments 5, 10 or 15 years ago, why then should we have them now? Surely this savours somewhat of the attitude of a Rip Van Winkle. A man wakes up after 10 or 15 years' sleep and exclaims, "These things were not when I first dozed into slumber, and why should they be now?" Surely this is to overlook all intermediate developments. When I first came out to this country in the 'nineties the administration was carried on, to speak in the most general terms, by a body of trained officials, who could devote the whole— or practically the whole— of their time to administrative detail, and were expected so to devote it under a system which in these days of trades unionism would probably be described as unwarrantable overtime. The proceedings of the Legislative Council occupied, in those days, comparatively little time. Under the changes of 1892 the Legislative Council was enlarged and new elements were brought in which increased the strain upon the officials but still allowed of work being carried on. That officers were unduly overworked has been established on several occasions in recent years before responsible bodies, such as the Decentralization Commission and the Public Services Commission. But now more important and more far-reaching administrative changes have come. We have now the political aspect of our work, which will loom larger and larger. It is clear that all of us will have to spend many more hours than previously in this Council. It is equally clear that we will not be able to get through the same amount of purely administrative work that was expected from officials in the old days. Then, again, there is another change which cannot be met in the way suggested by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. Hitherto in this province the Governor has personally taken charge of a certain portion of the work. Our present Governor used to deal directly with many cases connected with rural sanitation, Political and Ecclesiastical affairs. But it would be inconsistent with the spirit of the Reforms Scheme, were he to do so in future. This means that the work has got to be done by another Member. Lastly, there is another aspect of these changes. As I have said, in the old days the administration was largely in the hands of officials. There is now a considerable non-official element in the present Executive Council. We have been singularly fortunate in having two Indian colleagues, both of whom have been long accustomed to deal with administrative matters with promptitude and despatch-- the one as a High Court Judge and the other as long connected with public affairs. But this may not always be so. A gentleman might well be admirably fitted to be a Member of the Executive Council who, for no fault of his and for no shame of his, could not dispose of files as quickly, say, as Mr. Kerr or myself, who have been doing so for the last 30 years in this country. Therefore it is quite evident that things are going to be entirely different from those to which we have hitherto been accustomed and new arrangements must govern the new situation. It is surely premature at this, the first meeting of the Reformed Council, to contend that an arrangement which is the outcome of the deliberations of so many high authorities is unsuitable and unjustifiable.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: I strongly support the resolution and recommend it for the acceptance of this House. My reason for pressing this resolution is that, it gives expression to a very strong volume of public opinion which has been created in its favour. This reform is being condemned by the community on the ground that it is going to create a costly administration. That is one of the foremost grounds for cursing the Reformed Legislative Council. Now, before this Council came into being the Government has increased the number of members in the Executive Council and the public had no opportunity to understand the necessity of the Governor for a cabinet of seven members, whereas he had formerly a cabinet of three members only. No doubt the introduction of the popular element into the Government to a certain extent has given rise to administrative complexities, but nevertheless we have not been satisfied that it is absolutely necessary that there should be a cabinet of seven members instead of three. Further, Sir, it is to be remembered that these Reforms have launched us into enormous cost and expenditure, and in this poor country this question of cost is one of vital importance and necessity. In this Council we should voice the opinion of the public with regard to the administration, and we are thoroughly convinced that, with the introduction of the popular element into Government, we can introduce certain reforms by way of retrenchment. So, Sir, you will be pleased to see that the resolution, which recommends for the consideration of the India Government and also for the consideration of Parliament, if necessary, that the number of members should be reduced to two, is carried unanimously by this House. This of course may not be exactly within our province, but, as representatives of the people, we have to give expression to public feeling, which is very strong in its favour, and the costly expenditure should be cut down and reduced. So, Sir, I hope that this House, without a division, will accept the resolution, which has been so ably proposed by the member in whose name it stood, and which has also been supported very ably by another gentleman, and I hope and trust that this is a question on which the House—at any rate non-official members—should be unanimous.

Mr. H. BARTON: I have listened with much admiration to the previous speaker. In my opinion it seems that we have got to be largely guided by what we have witnessed to-day, for the proceedings of to-day are the true indication of the amount of work that is to fall on the Executive Councillors. They must have our fullest sympathy. A growing family naturally requires larger expenditure and a growing council such as this one similarly requires larger expenditure. While respecting the arguments put forward by the members, I think I may be justified in saying that the points they have put forward instead of strengthening their position has tended largely to weaken it, because it is more or less based on a good deal of real assumption. We are not yet in a position to know what the real work of this Council will be. A comparison that has been drawn by a speaker for our consideration only points in one direction. We have it stated by the member who moved the resolution that increased expenditure will be Rs. 1,23,000. I say we are fortunate in having such excellent brain at so low a figure. Now the fact that previous Councillors worked with a lesser number of officials is no argument against increased number. It only goes to show that previous Councillors were overworked and underpaid, and with the large amount of work which must go on increasing in this Council, taking to-day's proceedings as an indication, I feel certain that before we have got much further with our deliberations we may say we do not only require four but half a dozen as Executive Councillors. I therefore argue against this resolution.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I admire Babu Kishori Mohan Thandani, the mover of this resolution, for the object with which he has moved this resolution. If it be based upon economy, certainly it is a laudable one, but I am sorry to say that it will seriously affect the efficiency of the administration if the number of Councillors be reduced. If the duty of a Councillor is to simply register the decrees of district officers, then I beg to submit that there is no necessity for a Councillor even of Minister; but if it be the duty of a Councillor to supervise over the work of district officers, to go through the papers carefully and to pass necessary orders, then I submit that Government is quite justified in increasing the number of Councillors from two to four. We all know the vagaries of some of the junior members of that heaven-born service (I mean the Indian Civil Service); we have had sad experience of them, specially in the mufassal, and that is the reason why we should increase the number of Councillors to have better supervision over their work. Government have already increased the number of Members of the Executive Council and we should not press to reduce that number. With these remarks I beg to oppose the resolution.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I would not have ventured to intervene in this debate or inflict a speech on this Council, at this hour of the day, but for the fact that certain remarks that have fallen from the previous speakers require a sort of challenge. I may say at once that I rise to support this resolution and I think it my duty to say a few words in order to avoid being misunderstood. Under the ordinary rules it would not have fallen to us to represent the views of the non-official members of this House before the member on behalf of Government had spoken, but to-day we are fortunate that Sir Henry Wheeler has stated before this House his case against this resolution, so that we are in this position that the best defence that could be put forward is before us, but that defence has not convinced us that this resolution ought not to be carried. I submit that there could be no defence in favour of the rejection of the resolution at all. Then it has been said that the dimensions of the Council have increased and that with a growing family there ought to be a growth in the expenditure. That may be quite a sound proposition to lay down, but under ordinary circumstances if there is a growing family, the head of the family also takes care to see that there is a growth in the income. But if the income is more or less stationary in a growing family, however well-intentioned the head of the family may be, it will be a suicidal policy to embark upon growing expenditure simply because the family has grown in dimensions, and we are at the present moment in this miserable plight that the revenues of the country have not only decreased but we are going to start with somewhat of a deficit. Now Babu Amulya Dhone Addy has just reminded us that he has been induced to oppose this resolution on the ground that it may mean the weakening of the efficiency of the administration. I say at once that I am not one of those who are induced to burn incense at the altar of efficiency in season and out of season. We have heard it said that we are to voice public opinion and not to see whether any resolution that we pass tends towards efficiency or inefficiency, because that is the duty of the executive government to look to. I think I voice the general and widespread feeling in the country that the pruning knife must be applied to various items of the expenditure both in quality and quantity, and we have come to this conclusion that whether we can carry this resolution as a combined recommendation of the Council or not, it is our duty to convey to Government through this Council the opinion, a large volume of opinion, that the time has come when the heavy administrative costliness of the country should be reduced and that if it be necessary the number of members of the executive government should be reduced also. I have heard it said that the work of the Council is likely to be such that the members of the executive government will find themselves overburdened with work and therefore the number that used to carry on the administration previously would not be sufficient to cope with the work that will go on increasing in the near future. If this remark of Sir Henry Wheeler is meant to be a threat, I do not wish to say anything. But we rather hope that Sir Henry Wheeler's wishes to say that if we will allow him to go on and will not trouble him too much, time may come when he may consider whether the number of Members of the Executive Council are to be reduced or not.

Naturally we may think seriously whether we should not have three, as previously, instead of seven as at present. But whatever that may be I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by repeating what has been said by other speakers, and before I sit down I wish to say that I believe it is not the intention of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri nor of myself nor of anybody else who spoke in support of this resolution to propose that two of the Members of the Executive Council should forthwith resign their offices and walk out of the executive government. Our recommendation is simply an affirmation of the principle; as I have said, the pruning knife must be applied to the administration and that Government should take the earliest opportunity to give effect to this widespread public feeling that the costliness of the administration should be removed. With these few words I beg to support this resolution.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: I do not quite see that we can vote in favour of this resolution. I have listened to the various speakers who have spoken in support of it. I myself, before I came to this House and heard what Sir Henry Wheeler had got to say, was in considerable doubt as to what explanation he was going to give. Having heard what he has got to say I am perfectly convinced we must vote against this resolution. One of the speakers on this resolution has told us what should be done in carrying out this resolution. He told us that His Majesty's Government in England should take such steps as may be necessary to reduce the number of Executive Councillors. These Councillors have already been appointed. How is the mover going to remove them? We cannot remove them by discussing this resolution in this Council. We can, when the time of this Council runs out and the time comes to appoint other Councillors, decide what to do. We may remove two, but which two do you want to remove? The Act provides that the Members of the Executive Council shall not exceed four, and that one at least must be an official. Sir Henry Wheeler has explained the necessity for having two officials at present, and therefore if the numbers were reduced, the two non-official members of the executive government would have to go. I very much doubt whether that is the desire of the gentleman who has put the resolution to the Council.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I did not wish to intervene in this debate, but having heard Colonel Pugh, I rise to say a few words. Colonel Pugh, I am afraid, has taken the terms of the resolution much too literally.

I think that the object of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri's moving this resolution, is that when an opportunity occurs, or an occasion arises to alter the existing composition of the Executive Council, His Excellency the Governor, the Government of India and the Secretary of State will consider the views of this Council as expressed in this resolution. That is, I believe, the meaning of this resolution. I am afraid my friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, has considerably weakened his case by saying that while in olden times the guidance and control of the government of the province was exercised by one man, namely, a Lieutenant-Governor, we have now, in the place of one man, a Governor, four Members of the Executive Council and three Ministers. I am sorry that he has raised that point, because it does not lie in his mouth to say so. We, the educated people of this country, agitated and clamoured for a council form of government, and we have got it. So it is no use lamenting that we have now so many Executive Councillors, while in olden times we had only the Lieutenant-Governor. The ground upon which I attack the existing arrangement of the Executive Council is this: Take the last Executive Council. It consisted of three Members, and they were in charge of practically all the departments of Government. Now the major part of their work has been transferred to the Ministers. They are in charge of some of the most vital departments of Government. Therefore I submit that there is not work enough for four Members of the Executive Council. It has been contended that the existing arrangement had to be made because two members of administrative experience were necessary and therefore to equalise them two non-officials had to be appointed. Sir, I venture to think that the argument regarding the requirement of men of administrative experience does not carry conviction. Isn't plenty of administrative experience available from the Secretariat and permanent officials?

The other ground upon which I attack the idea of having four members in the Executive Council is this: We have now four Members and three Ministers. You will find, if you analyse, that the representatives of the people are really in a minority in the executive government of the province. It is no good denying that fact, because the four Members of the Executive Council are not responsible to the Council or to the people of Bengal; they are responsible to the Secretary of State for India. The three men who are responsible to us are in a minority.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I beg to submit a few observations on this resolution. We have listened to the history of the appointment of four Members of the Executive Council as given by Sir Henry Wheeler. We come forward before the House at the very commencement to express our fear for the appointment of four Members of the Executive Council. We do not acquiesce in the action taken by the Government, and the proper procedure for us is to say to the Government that their action is not approved by the people. We, the representatives of the people, voice their feelings when we say that the action is not approved by them. The people of the country are not happy to find that the administration is now managed by eight persons instead of two or three, and the question naturally arises as to how they are to be paid. That is the chief point I press upon the attention of the Council and through the Council to Government. We are told that the condition of the exchequer is not encouraging and that there is a large deficit, consequently the argument that Government should not appoint so many men as Members of the Executive Council is irresistible. It is said that the work of the Councillors has become heavy on account of the Reforms, but cannot the work be done by two? Although the law clearly lays down that the number of members to be appointed should not exceed four, they could be appointed when the work grew in volume. The people really do not understand why so many men have been appointed for the administration of the country. For these reasons I recommend to this Government and to the Government of India to take necessary steps to reduce the number of members to two. It is not my intention to suggest that immediate steps should be taken to remove these persons who have been appointed as members, but simply to represent the feeling of the country in the matter.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: The reasons quoted by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri have my fullest support, but I am afraid, as Colonel Pugh said, they are more theoretical than practical. It is no good waxing eloquent on economy in matters over which you have got no control and you should confine your economy to that over which you have control. Now you will find that there are many difficulties in our way. Section 47 of the Act says the Members of a Governor's Executive Council shall be appointed by His Majesty by warrant under the Royal sign manual and shall be of such number, not exceeding four, as the Secretary of State in Council directs and not as the Governor directs. Now that he has directed that members should be four under the law that is final. Now you find about the Ministers section 52 says any Ministers so appointed shall hold office during the Governor's pleasure—

The PRESIDENT: This motion has nothing to do with the Ministers.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: The Members of the Executive Council are appointed by law for the tenure of the Council and I am afraid they cannot be removed during that period under the law. Now I must say that the number four is a great burden upon the people of Bengal and you all know how it happened.

The Montagu-Chelmsford Report said that two members would be sufficient. Then there was a great agitation in India and in England that the number should be four, since of the four members, two must be Indians and two Europeans. The Government in England gave way to the agitation and made it four. Now this is how the matter stands. But there was the opinion and those very gentlemen who clamoured for four now clamour for two, but I say the clamour for two is right and proper. But this would be in support of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri's resolution because he pointed out that the people of Bengal could not be burdened with four Executive Councillors, and therefore after the next three years it should be two. However that might be, it should never take time to reduce the number, but we must remember that after a period of three years, whatever may be the wishes of the Government in England, I am confident that the reserved subjects will become transferred subjects, and that there will be no need of Executive Councillors, at least not four, and therefore I support this resolution.

Mr. C. MORCAN: I move that the question be now put.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I rise to a point of order. I submit that a motion for closure has got to be put to the House at once.

The PRESIDENT: That is not so, please see the rules. It is a matter for the exercise of my discretion. In the present case, as the question is one of importance and there are some other speakers, I would not like to stop the discussion.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I support the motion of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, but having regard to the temper of the House and the motion which my friend Mr. Morgan has moved, I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by a speech. I therefore simply say that I support the motion of my friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. I cannot, however, resist the temptation of saying one word with reference to Colonel Pugh's observation. If I have heard him aright, he said that the two Indian members would go. I do not think that that will be the decision of the powers-that-be. It will be half European and half Indian. Let the equilibrium be maintained in that way.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I did not intend to speak on this resolution, but I only want to raise a point of order. I want to know whether we are limited to the number of speakers who have sent up their names, and whether it is open to a member to speak after he has heard the speeches in Council, because after hearing the speeches, it may be necessary to answer the points raised by them. The resolution has my support; I need not detail the reasons for my support, but as much I may say that a "growing family" has growing members to be fed, and must have larger expenditure to incur, and therefore they have a right to see how that expenditure is provided. I entirely agree with what has been said that there must be drastic reduction so far as expense is concerned. If I am not committing a breach of faith, I can tell you what was said to me by one of the members of the Government that his longest day was one of 2 hours, and the shortest not even 10 minutes. There are now reserved subjects and transferred subjects, and having regard to the present position, I do not think it necessary that there should be an increase in the Executive Council.

The PRESIDENT: In regard to the point of order that has been raised by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, it is within my power to regulate the order in which speeches are to be made in Council. The practice that was adopted in the old Council, and which I propose to follow for the present, is to have a list of those who want to speak prepared, and to call on each speaker in such order as I consider best; and when I have finished, if anyone else wants to speak he would not be prevented from doing so. I now call upon the mover of the resolution to reply.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I do not wish to detain the Council long, as what I have to say has been very ably said by one of the speakers already. I am not convinced by the arguments of Sir Henry Wheeler for an increase in the number of Executive Councillors. I think some of the members should find time to do some more work, especially as they have not got sufficient to do at present. Moreover, there has been an additional member now; the Council business is to be managed by a whole-time officer. Further, I believe that His Excellency has now not to devote so much of his time as he used to do before, as some of the most important branches of the administration have been transferred to the Ministers. Why, therefore, there should be a necessity for appointing four Executive Councillors I am unable to understand. There was a proposal, I know, that some of the members without portfolio should form a cabinet or should be members of the cabinet, but that has been objected to and the deliberate opinion expressed by the Joint Committee and also in the Government of India Despatch, which I have quoted at length, was that ordinarily two members should be sufficient. I never proposed that the two Indian members should go out. The decision is that of the two members, if one is a Civilian the other should be an Indian; but there are four members now. Sir Abd-ur-Rahim can easily be appointed as the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court—a vacancy will very soon occur there—in which case the number can be reduced without any difficulty. With these words I appeal to my friends for support, and I hope that my resolution will be accepted for the consideration of Government.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to Tuesday, the 8th February, 1921, at 11 A.M.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

The Council re-assembled in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Tuesday, the 8th February, 1921, at 11 A.M.

Present :

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 111 nominated and elected members.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! I think it desirable to draw the attention of the Council, at the earliest opportunity, to any irregularity that comes to my notice. I am sorry that I myself met with one yesterday; and the matter was also brought to my notice by others, that as soon as a division was called for, several members rose from their seats and assembled in front of the eastern block and began loudly to talk to each other. The noise which was created yesterday attracted my attention, and I think it necessary that I should warn you that matters like this should not take place, and that you should strictly observe the rules. I ought also to point out that it is not proper for any member to canvass for votes inside the chamber.

I now call up Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur to move the resolution which stands against his name.

Increasing Child Mortality.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that a mixed committee of official and non-official medical men and other experts be appointed to inquire into the cause of the increasing rate of child mortality in Bengal and to suggest what measures should be adopted for its prevention in the way of organising schemes for child welfare work."

After I sent notice of this resolution, I obtained certain facts and had to amend the resolution and put it before you. You were pleased to inform me that you had allowed the amendment. Under such circumstances, the amended resolution is going to be discussed on the 21st of February and I would ask your leave to withdraw this resolution.

The resolution was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Charitable Dispensaries.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that every effort should be made to have immediately a charitable dispensary at every thana, and for the present to induce three doctors to settle and practice in the rural areas in each thana by subsidizing them to the extent of Rs. 30 a month each, half being paid by the Government and half by the District Boards."

The urgent necessity of this measure, which is after all very inadequate to the needs of the country, is known to everybody. I have consulted several Presidents, Chairmen, and members of District Boards and other local bodies, and they all approve of this resolution. I believe that the great majority of my countrymen who live in Calcutta have no idea of the distress of the people of the mufassal. I have many a time gone to the mufassal, and I know what is the fear in the minds of men, where there is no doctor. I know I have been told by a very experienced Subdivisional Officer that whenever he goes to outlying places, he trembles in fear. At the present moment, there is an epidemic of cholera at a place not more than 50 miles from Calcutta, and I have positive information that hundreds of men and women are deserted by their relatives and are left unburied and unburned. We know that Government comes to the aid of the poor when there is an epidemic of typhoid. We know also that one case of cholera in England or in any other country in Europe would create a sensation and a panic, and millions would be spent for driving out that epidemic. But what of India, where we have got several epidemics every year? We must do something in the matter. I know that we cannot always create doctors, but the want of doctors creates a panic and a sense of helplessness in the minds of the people who die by thousands.

I appeal to the Government to look to our poor countrymen in the mufassal—to the millions who pay taxes and get nothing in return. Sanitation and education are very good, but they are for the living and not for the dead. I have been asked where is the money to come from. I have made a very small demand. I have asked for Rs. 15 for each doctor from the Government, it may be more, Rs. 20 or Rs. 25. Two thousand such doctors can be employed from the salaries proposed to be paid to the Ministers and their establishments. I think that no Minister would like to take any salary when tens of thousands of his countrymen die without any medical relief and die in utter helplessness. It was the great Asoka who first laid down—and it is inscribed on pillars of stone—that it is the first duty of Government to give medical relief to its subjects. That rule was forgotten for many a year before the English came here. But I must give them the credit that is due to them; they established hospitals and dispensaries and employed doctors. But very little has yet been done, considering the grave needs of the country. Now that we have got the subject under our control, we should not do less than what the district officers did before and who certainly did very good work. I have made a very small demand. If our Ministers, who are men of great influence, will make the necessary effort I am sure the money will be forthcoming. The District Boards will rise to the occasion, and I further venture to say that every public-spirited man will come to the rescue. If the Government pay half, the other half will be forthcoming. I am a small zamindar and I am willing to pay for six doctors; and I know that there are many more generous and liberal-minded men than myself, who will do something to come to our rescue.

I am willing to leave out the latter portion of my resolution, namely, the following: "By subsidizing them to the extent of Rs. 30 a month each, half being paid by the Government and half by the District Board." What I desire is that every effort should be made in the name of humanity to give medical relief to the poor people of Bengal. I submit that this is a non-contentious matter, and I hope it would be carried without any division.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: Mr. President and Brother Councillors—(Cries of "Order," "Order.")

The PRESIDENT: The rule is that you should only address the chair.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I am sorry I cannot support the resolution as it stands. While I commend the spirit of the resolution, its wording is, however, such that it does not commend itself to me. Here what the mover of the resolution wants is that there must be three doctors employed in each thana, and that Government should pay half the expenses and District Boards should be made to pay the other half. We have no doubt heard a long harangue from my friend, the mover; but he does not give us one single fact or figure to show what is the population in each thana, how many thanas there are in a subdivision, how many subdivisions there are in each district. We must first know these facts and we must have these figures before we are in a position to ask the members to vote for this resolution. I should like to know from the mover himself if he himself knows how many thanas there are in the subdivision in which he lives and how many subdivisions there are in the district in which he lives. I think he will be unable to tell me all these things. Unless he answers these points, we shall not be in a position to know how we stand and what is the amount which the Government or the District Boards will have to spend. We all know very well that within the course of the year a large number of District Boards have been given the option of electing their own Chairmen and some of my friends here have already been elected as Chairmen. Is it then proper or politic on the part of the Government to force the Chairmen of District Boards and also the members of these District Boards to do something which may be against their wish? We do not know what steps have already been taken by them to improve the sanitation of their own districts; what medical relief they are imparting to their districts. Unless we know that, we cannot support this resolution. We know that of late when the Public Works cess was bodily handed over to the District Boards, I think it brought in about 30 lakhs of rupees of additional income to the pockets of the District Boards. That is a very large amount, and I know from my own experience as a member of the District Board of the 24-Parganas that after getting this amount, we have spent a good deal of it in excavating tanks and in affording additional medical relief. That shows that the District Boards are already on the alert and they are not sitting idle. We had been trying for a long time both from the pulpit and from the press to give greater latitude to the District Boards, and we have now got that. How can you now force the District Boards to contribute half of the proposed medical expenditure? Government have not got the power but Government can only express a pious wish and that is all the Government can do. If, however, the resolution had been worded "that this Council recommends to the Government that Government may be pleased to subsidize all District Boards for affording greater medical relief," that would have no doubt commended itself to us all.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I have already modified my resolution.

The PRESIDENT: The mover should not intervene at this stage of the discussion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: But to dictate to all these District Boards and to dictate to the Government to induce three doctors to settle in each thana, without knowing what the population of each thana is, and also by subsidizing them to the extent of Rs. 30 a month, half being paid by the District Boards and half by the Government, is something impracticable. As a matter of fact, the District Boards have already been doing so. Government can simply issue a circular that the Government will be only too glad if greater medical relief is afforded to the rural areas. This is all I have to say with regard to this resolution.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: The resolution is of such a nature that we must give a practical turn to it. The learned mover perhaps is not aware of the difficulties of the District Boards in Bengal. He considers that the District Boards will be in a position to advance a large amount of money or establish dispensaries. Perhaps he is not aware that in the areas within the jurisdiction of District Boards there are many generous people who have come forward to establish dispensaries. The other day in a neighbouring District Board we found that a gentleman came forward with a donation of Rs. 10,000. The District Board took up the matter; but the maintenance cost is about Rs. 5,000. If a dispensary is to be established within the jurisdiction of each thana, the cost would be enormous; and the mandate of the resolution is that immediate steps should be taken for the establishment of dispensaries in each thana. I say, therefore, a tactical turn should be given to the resolution. On the last occasion when influenza prevailed in the district of Hooghly, the District Board provided three or four doctors (I forget now the exact number), and we asked them to go round to provide medicines to those who were suffering from the epidemic. I may inform the Council that the attack of influenza was so great that the villagers could not find people for the purpose of cremation, and when that information was received, the Chairman of the District Board made arrangements for the purpose of getting three doctors; but even the doctors were not available at that moment. Hence, the learned mover suggests that some permanent arrangement should be made and that permanent arrangement is the establishment of dispensaries. I say, therefore, that the District Boards will not be in a position to help the people who suffer from epidemics, if the matter of affording relief be left to the hands of the District Boards, then I submit that the idea of getting hold of District Boards to afford relief would be a distant one. But I do not think that the mandate of the resolution ought to go so far. Arrangements may be made as far as possible for accepting donations from those who have the heart to help in the matter. In that way, the idea would be a practical one. I say, therefore, that I consider this resolution ought to be accepted by the Council with the observations which I have been privileged to make to-day.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: I may tell the Council at once that I have every sympathy with this resolution, but I wish the resolution were one of a more practical nature. We have heard nothing from the mover as to what the total expense for each District Board or the Government will be. However willing the Minister in charge of the Department may be to accept a resolution of this character, it would be necessary for him, when the proper time comes, to demand specific grants. It would have been helpful if the mover, instead of expressing a pious hope—for the resolution is nothing better than the expression of a pious hope—had really taken the trouble to go into the matter fully and had really suggested to the House something constructive, something definite, then this House could have considered the question properly. The mover has said something about the Ministers' salaries. I suppose that is a subject which he finds very hard to avoid. He has told us nothing as to what amount he proposes to deduct from the salaries of the highly-paid Ministers and how far the savings so effected will go to meet his scheme. But I suppose I should always be indulgent to the mover about Ministers' salaries, because he can never open his mouth without touching on that point. But, Sir, there is a serious difficulty. That difficulty is well known to many of us here, namely the paucity of doctors in this province. If the mover before venturing to put forward a resolution of this character—however commendable his object may be—had looked into materials available to him or, for the matter of that, to any man in Bengal, he would have found that there are only about 3,000 medical men in the whole province, including those who have been trained in the Campbell and Dacca Medical Schools and who are ordinarily called V.L.M.S.'s. Out of these 3,000 about 2,000 practise in the municipal areas and about 1,000 in the rural areas, so that in Bengal—we know that the population in the rural areas of Bengal is about 42½ millions—so that in Bengal we know, at any rate we ought to know, that there is only one doctor to a population of 42,500.

A great American millionaire had years ago sent out a Commission to Europe to study the system of medical education there, and from the well-written report which followed it would appear—I am speaking from memory, but I believe I am not very far out—that in Great Britain there is one doctor to a population of about 1,250 and in Italy there is one doctor to a population of about 1,700, and here in Bengal, the home of malaria, and where influenza rages every year in an epidemic form, we have only one doctor to a population of 42,500. If the mover really wanted to be helpful in the matter then he should have asked for more medical schools. I would respectfully ask the mover and others who are interested in the proper solution of this question to study this question more intimately, instead of delivering clap-trap speeches. If something definite be suggested I have no doubt that my hon'ble colleague, the Minister in charge of this Department, would do his best to get the necessary financial support, in spite of the high salaries of the Ministers.

Raja MANIOLL SINCH ROY: Though I am in sympathy with the spirit of the resolution, I am sorry I cannot support it in its present form. Instead of establishing one charitable dispensary in each thana, the Burdwan District Board, with which I am closely connected, are attempting to establish one such dispensary within the area of two or three Union Boards. Thus there will be not less than three dispensaries in each thana.

As for inducing three doctors to settle and practise in each thana, in the first place, I fear whether an adequate number of doctors will be available. Secondly, in view of the climate and the number of dispensaries and practising doctors, it may not be necessary for one thana to have three doctors, while another may require more than three. The funds at the disposal of the District Boards may not also be commensurate with the amount required for the purpose.

In my opinion, therefore, instead of adopting a hard and fast resolution of this kind, both the questions may be left to the discretion of the District Boards, with some advice. I beg to draw the attention of the authorities to the Government of India (Education Department) resolution No. 41 of 1918.

Mr. W. R. RAE: It seems to me that we are wasting the time of the Council in discussing what is undoubtedly an impracticable proposition. I certainly think that the mover of this resolution thoroughly deserves the castigation which he has received from the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter. I hope it will not become the practice of members of this Council, every time they get up to speak, to refer to the question of the Ministers' salary. Now, I do not think from what I have heard from the mover that he knows anything about the subject. We are certainly all sympathetic towards the object of the resolution and I can assure the mover that the European members of this House are always sympathetic towards suffering and are willing to help when a practical proposition is made. I am told there are 693 police-stations in Bengal, and, if the mover's scheme is accepted, it would mean an expenditure of fifty lakhs of rupees with a recurring expenditure of seventeen lakhs a year. I would ask the mover to take back his resolution and come back, if possible, with something practical.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I move that the question be now put

The PRESIDENT: I do not think that on this occasion I should put the question before the Government member has spoken and the mover has replied. After that is done, I will consider a motion of this nature.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjæ): At the very outset, I desire to say that I am in complete sympathy with the aim and object of this resolution, which I understand to be an increase in the number of charitable dispensaries and the widening of the scope and extent of the area of medical relief in the rural tracts. We are all in sympathy with this object but, at the same time, I feel it my duty on behalf of Government to oppose this resolution, because the resolution makes recommendations which are unsound and impracticable, and, if they are given effect to, will seriously interfere with the independence and the initiative of the local bodies which we in this Council are all so anxious to promote. The resolution divides itself into two parts. In the first place, the mover recommends the establishment of a dispensary in every thana in the mufassal; and in the second place, he suggests the employment of subsidized doctors at every thana at a monthly cost of Rs. 30, of which one-half is to be paid by Government and the other half by the District Boards. I desire to point out that as regards the first of these recommendations, Government has already taken action. So far back as 1917, Government addressed a circular letter to all District Boards, urging them to adopt a constructive policy so that every village might come within reach of a charitable dispensary. That appeal, I am glad to assure hon'ble members, did not fall on heedless ears. A considerable advance has been made since then. Let me refer to the triennial report extending from 1917 to 1919. We find that the number of charitable dispensaries increased from 600 to 765 and the number at the present moment is 796. The cost of medical relief in the mufassal in the year 1919 was 2 lakhs or 13 per cent. of the entire expenditure incurred under this head. In Calcutta, Government spent 2½ lakhs of rupees upon medical relief and medical institutions, that is, 72 per cent. of the entire cost. To some this may seem disproportionate, but it must be borne in mind that Calcutta is the seat of our great medical institutions and some of our most important hospitals. We have here in Calcutta the Medical College, the Campbell Medical School, the Belgachia Medical School, and the Medical College Hospital is one of the biggest in the world. And I am afraid we are hardly able to cope with the demands of the Surgeon-General in this matter. That represents what the Government have done in this connection.

Let me now take up the second portion of the mover's resolution, and in this connection I may say that the House has anticipated me. The gentlemen who have spoken have sympathised with the principle of the resolution. I also sympathise with it, but the principle is nothing when detached from details, as has been observed by one of the greatest political philosophers of the 18th century. But when he came to details, the mover could not forget the salaries of the Ministers. It is on his brain. It is an infatuation. He is obsessed by it. The resolution, as several speakers have observed, is unsound and impracticable. The mover wants that every thana should have a dispensary. Now, Sir, the proposition is thoroughly unsound. The locale and limits of the thana are determined by considerations very different from those which are the governing factors in fixing the locale of a dispensary and the area of its operation. The position of the thana and its area are determined by considerations relating to the protection of life and property and the maintenance of the public tranquillity. Far different are the grounds for deciding upon the position of a dispensary and the area to be covered by it. In this case, the numerical strength of the population, the health conditions of the place, and the needs of medical relief must govern the decision. The figures which I am about to lay before the House will confirm the soundness of the view which I have ventured to put forward. There are in Bengal 688 thanas and 796 dispensaries. In other words, there are 108 dispensaries in excess of the number of thanas. Obviously, therefore, there is more than one dispensary in the area covered by some of the thanas. Will my hon'ble friend knock off the dispensaries which seem to be superfluous from his standpoint? I am sure he does not mean to do that, and if he tried it, there would be a howl of indignation from the representatives of the District Boards. I feel that, in a matter of this kind, we should not lay down any hard and fast rule. Whether a thana should have one dispensary or two or more is a thing which must be left to be determined by the local bodies. They are on the spot and best conversant with the needs of the situation. The initiative must be theirs. We must not take it out of their hands. They know the local conditions. It is not for us or for this Council to take the matter into our hands and lay down a fiat for them that they must come to a particular decision regarding their local needs and conditions. They must be free in the performance of their duties in this matter. It is not for an autonomous Government such as we are to interfere. It would be wrong on our part. It would militate against the principles of local self-government to take away from them the initiative which they possess in this matter. I therefore oppose this part of the resolution.

Sir, there is another matter to which my friend refers, and that is that there should be three doctors in every thana. Why my friend should be so enamoured of the unlucky number 3, so inauspicious according to Oriental ideas, I do not know. Why should not there be two or four or five doctors? What are his data? What are his facts? Babu Surendra Nath Ray has asked for the facts. What are they? Has he got any statistics or figures? Has he consulted the District Boards? The Government declines to be guided by his ipse dixit on this matter, however clamant and capable he may be. He wants three doctors for every thana. There are 688 thanas, which means there will be Rs. 45 spent every month in respect of each thana. Multiply this into 688 and you will get an annual expenditure of Rs. 3,82,320. I am afraid the Government is not in a position to find the sum at present, and I doubt very much whether the District Boards will be able to find a like sum. Therefore, upon these grounds I object to this resolution. I hope that the resolution will be defeated in this House, which has already expressed its opinion on it that it is unsound and impracticable. I regret that a resolution of this kind should have been introduced at all. We are here for the transaction of business. Here are gentlemen who have come at the sacrifice of their time and convenience, and I think we must not indulge in discussions which are not helpful or fruitful.

The PRESIDENT: I call upon the mover to make his reply if he wishes to.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I have met with the greatest surprise of my life to-day. I have travelled through all the districts of Bengal and I know at least 50 thanas in Bengal. I have got properties in at least six thanas in Bengal. And I know the figures in every one of them and I have been told to my face—what do you know of Bengal?—by men who have never had any experience of Bengal outside the town of Calcutta. I have been told that I have given no figures and that I have no figures. I am told that I do not know that there are 688 thanas. I think I told them that it would require 2,000 doctors. Do not they know simple arithmetic and that 688 multiplied into 3 would make about 2,000? That is why I asked for 2,000 doctors in my speech. What more definite information do they require? What did I say? I said that 2,000 doctors were required for our poor people and I suggested that the Government should pay Rs. 15 a month for each doctor. And I am told point-blank that I am one who does not know Bengal and who has got no figures. There is another matter. Did I suggest for a moment that you should force it upon the District Boards? At the very outset I said that I would take out that portion in my resolution which says that half the cost should be borne by the District Boards, and what was my suggestion? I only said that an effort should be made in this direction. Even to this, objection is taken, rhetoric is employed, invective used and, as one gentleman rightly said, castigations made. I am proud of that. Nothing good was done in this country or in any country without abuse and castigation being cast upon the men who wanted to do good. How are the mighty fallen! Surendra Nath Banerjee—Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee gets up and says—I oppose and object to this resolution. How are the mighty fallen! A representative of the community, a member of the great English nation to whom we owe so much, gets up and says. We oppose this resolution of giving relief to the poor, to the dying, to the diseased. He seems to have lost all the traditions of an Englishman. If these gentlemen go 50 miles from Calcutta they will find hundreds of persons lying dead and unburied, and they get up and tell me that I do not know Bengal. I have travelled throughout Bengal since my childhood. I know what this Council is made of. But I will do my duty so long as I am here. I again say, Sir, that it is not good to oppose this resolution. I ask the Ministers to make an effort. Money? That is of no account. Let them make the necessary effort. But the truth is that they have not got the heart to do so. That is the question and it is not a question of money. It is a question of heart. The Hon'ble Minister's heart has dried up. There is no more sweetness in it. I am very sorry that I have made a reference to the question of Ministers' salaries. I am sincerely sorry for it—I am really sorry for that little reference my poor countrymen will suffer. Before I conclude I would only say that I am sorry that I became irritated when I was told by persons who have not been outside the precincts of Calcutta and its suburbs, who do not know the suffering prevalent throughout Bengal, that I knew nothing of Bengal.

Date Juice.

Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: "This Council recommends to the Government that date juice be excluded from the list of excisable articles."

I move this resolution with a trembling heart, because I know that our request to Government has been of no use, though it was made by such an eminent man as our late lamented and most esteemed countryman, Babu Kristo Das Pal. However, I gain courage by the fact that the matter is before this Council, where almost all of us know that date juice in its unfermented condition is a pure food for us and even the European members of this Council by their long stay in this country have known that date juice in unfermented condition never intoxicates people. We, the Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal, often take date juice in the morning. Besides, if it intoxicated, we Muhammadans would have out of religious scruples objected to this. Of course date juice, when fermented, becomes tari, so it might be said that it has been an excisable article. In that view of the thing even rice may also be included in excisable articles, as boiled rice when kept in water for two or three days produces intoxication and becomes pachuar. I want to put this before the Council. I know that almost all my countrymen know that date juice in its fermented condition is called tari. I know that all, even our worthy President and the Ministers and the members of this Council, must have taken date juice in the morning, and it must be admitted that it is never taken as an intoxicant. So, Sir, this should not be taken as an excisable article. I find in the list of excisable articles the following are included—spirit, wine, tari, pachuar, beer, and all that. In the definition of tari I find that it means fermented or unfermented juice drawn from the cocoanut, date, or other kind of trees. My point is that the juice drawn from a date tree, which is better known as khejoor rash, is not tari, inasmuch as it is not an intoxicant. We are surprised to find that date juice is included in the excisable articles. Jessore, as we all know, is the best date juice producing district in Bengal. So we have had often occasion to know much of it. I beg to cite a very curious instance of the engine of oppression under this law.

A labourer was drawing out his juice in the morning and an excise officer with two constables met him and asked for a pitcher of date juice for value. The man said: "Well Sir, if you simply wish to drink, you may do so without any money, as we often don't sell it." The excise officer said: "Well, Sir, why should we drink your juice without money when we can afford to pay for it?" So this poor man was given eight or nine pice with two or three of them marked, and no sooner had he accepted the money, the excise officers called two or three men of the village and began to legally discharge his duties by searching his body. The poor man said: "There is no use for search as your money is with me: take it back." Then the excise officer arrested the man. Seeing this, the whole village resented and the naib of the Maharaja of Dighapatia asked the excise officer not to arrest. Seeing his difficult position, the excise officer went away and reported that the accused had been snatched away from him, and so the naib and his men were prosecuted under the Penal Code, and the poor tapper under the Excise Act, with the result that the naib and his men were put to jail and fined, and the tapper was also fined Rs. 25 and the whole amount of his fine was ordered to be given to the excise officer. Now, Sir, this is an incentive to the excise officers for abusing the law. This is an engine of oppression to the poor unsuspecting people in the villages. I appeal to the experience of all, even the Ministers and the members, and I also appeal to the European members to taste it once, if they have not done so, and to see if it is an intoxicant. We take it as sarbat, and if you put it under the head of liquor, then we are considered to be taking haram, as according to our Muhammadan law, liquor is haram. I therefore appeal that you will kindly exclude this date juice in its unfermented condition from the list of excisable articles.

With these words I commend the motion to the acceptance of the Council.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I rise to support the resolution which has been moved by Maulvi Rafi Uddin Ahmed, who has referred to some ancient history. This matter has come up from time to time before the legislature since 1878. When the excise laws were consolidated in 1878, a motion was moved—rather an amendment was proposed to one whose name I bear, to exclude unfermented date juice from the list of excisable articles. The Hon'ble Mr. Herbert Reynolds, who was in charge of the Bill, unfortunately opposed it, and as usual the official majority predominated and the amendment was thrown out. Again in 1882 the accredited representative of the British Indian Association—the mover of the amendment in 1878—moved for the exclusion of unfermented date juice from the list of excisable articles. The same gentleman, the Hon'ble Mr. Herbert Reynolds, who was again the member in charge of the Bill, opposed it, and, as was the usual fate in those days, the amendment was rejected. In 1909 again, when I had the good fortune of getting into the Legislative Council, and when the Bengal Excise Amendment Bill came up for discussion and the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill was that genial and affable gentleman, the Hon'ble Mr. W. J. Macpherson—many of our friends might perhaps remember him—I moved a similar motion and there was a long discussion, and although to a certain extent I thought that I got the support of Sir Edward Baker, Government was opposed to it and it was thrown out. Now I am glad to see, Sir, that on the inauguration of this Reformed Council a gentleman from the mufassal has come forward with this motion, which I hope will be accepted by Government. “I hope,” I say deliberately for this reason, because the Hon'ble Minister now in charge of the Excise Department was a member of the East Bengal Council, when this legislation came up almost at the same time as the Bengal Excise Bill in the West Bengal Council and moved the identical motion there, and I hope that the Hon'ble Minister, who now presides over the Excise Department in this Presidency, will see his way to exclude date juice from the category of excessible articles, and I hope, too, Sir, now that the opinion of the country is voiced by the representatives of the people assembled in the Council, that this resolution will be accepted by Government and that the harassment to which the poor people have been subjected for the last 50 years by the underlings of the Excise Department will be put a stop to.

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHAUDHURI: I must confess that I had no mind to speak on this resolution, but my friend the mover has made certain allegations which are not justified, and so far as I am aware this liquor also does some harm to the people who drink it. I think it is absolutely necessary that some sort of restriction should be imposed upon any kind of intoxicant, however mild it may be, and I think that the mover has not been able to make out a case in favour of date juice as it can be converted into an intoxicant after fermentation.

With these few words, I beg to oppose the motion.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTT: I beg to associate with my friend the learned mover in supporting this resolution. This is the first time in my life, though I belong to a district where the date tree is in abundance, that I hear that date juice is an intoxicant. Well, I know this much, that after a certain amount of fermentation date juice may intoxicate and does intoxicate, but does my friend, who took the trouble of opposing the resolution really mean to suggest that unfermented date juice is identical with fermented date juice? The learned mover himself differentiated the two things. All that we want is that there should not be any restriction to the drinking, to the possession and to the sale of this unfermented date juice, and that the poor people who have had the luxury of this sweet drink or sarbat, which they could get from nature, should have the privilege of getting it free and without any molestation from the officers of the Excise Department. From my own personal experience I can bear out the truth of the statement which my friend has made regarding the high-handed oppression of the officers of the Excise Department. As a matter of fact I know that at least the responsible officers of the Excise Department never take any notice of the ordinary date juice and possibly, if I am correct in quoting it, under section 13 there is a provision which allows the possession of date juice in an unfermented state of a quantity not exceeding 4 seers. While 4 seers can be allowed to owners, I do not see any reason why this restriction should not be taken off at all. We, whether Hindus, Muhammadans or Christians, belong to joint families consisting of different members. The hard and fast rule of 4 seers does not really seem to be very much. One other restriction which I have noticed is this. A man can tap his own tree and obtain as much date juice as he can and can utilise the same for his own purposes, but a poor man, who lives by his manual labour, is not allowed to sell it unless he takes out a license from the Excise Department. So the person who could have it tapped by himself or by a hired agency is certainly at liberty and welcome to obtain as much date juice as he can—it does not matter whether it is 2 or 3 maunds or 4 seets, but the poor man will have to take out a license. Now a license means a small amount of money, but everybody who has got experience of the mufassal knows what additional and illegal impositions are made on the people to get a license. If they do not take out licenses they are prosecuted. While the excise authorities do not take any serious notice of the owners obtaining as much date juice as they can, I think it is consistent and logical that the restriction which has been put upon the tappers to take out licenses for selling date juice should be taken away. If this restriction is removed, this will have the additional advantage of allowing the poor people to prepare gur in their own homes in abundant quantities, and in these days of economic distress this will no doubt prove a great boon. For these reasons, I hope, this resolution will be accepted.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): It is not possible for Government to accept the resolution in its present form. Date juice is consumed in two states—either fermented or unfermented. In both states its consumption and sale are at present controlled under the Excise Act. The necessity for controlling its sale in a fermented state is obvious. It is the primary duty of all Governments to control the sale of intoxicants. The object of Government control is in the first place to regulate the consumption of intoxicants and prevent intemperance. Fermented tari is a potent intoxicant, and I think every member will agree with me that its unrestricted manufacture and sale would lead to incalculable evil, especially among the labouring classes. The second object of Government control is to derive revenue from the sale of excisable articles. During the year 1919-20 fermented tari brought in a revenue of Rs. 5,15,000 and this is a sum which Government cannot afford to sacrifice.

With regard to fresh juice, the position is different. It is not an intoxicant, but a cool and refreshing drink. Restrictions on the sale of fresh juice were imposed not for the sake of the revenue derived from the sale of this article, which is negligible, but in order to make it easier to control the use of fermented juice. I am aware, Sir, that there has always been a strong body of public opinion in favour of the exemption of this harmless beverage from the restrictions of the Excise Act. On at least three occasions the matter was discussed in the Bengal Legislative Council, but on each occasion Government resisted the proposal to remove restrictions from the fresh juice on the ground that to do so would interfere with the control of the fermented juice. I have considered the matter carefully and have consulted the expert adviser of Government and have come to the conclusion that the danger of interfering with the control of fermented juice is less serious than has been supposed. I am prepared to remove restrictions on fresh date juice experimentally in certain selected districts and if, after a trial, it is found that the removal of these restrictions has not seriously hampered the control of fermented juice, they will be removed throughout the rest of the province. As I have explained, it is impossible to accept the resolution as it stands, since its effect would be to remove all restrictions on tari. If, however, the member is prepared to amend his resolution and to recommend that Government should take action under section 90 of the Excise Act to exclude unfermented date juice from the provisions of the Act, I am prepared to accept it and give effect to it at once.

Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: I accept the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Minister.

The resolution was then put in the following amended form and agreed to: "This Council recommends to Government that action should be taken under section 90 of the Excise Act to exclude unfermented date juice from the provisions of the Act."

Calcutta Municipal Act.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: "This Council recommends to the Government that the amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, be taken up by this Council without delay and that His Excellency the Governor be approached with a request that preference be given to it over all other projects of Government legislation."

The resolution speaks for itself. It is a request to Government to take up a measure of legislation which I venture to submit is long overdue. The present Calcutta Municipal Act was passed as far back as 1900, and it is a strange commentary on our advancing ideas of local self-government that for 20 years we have permitted ourselves to be governed by the same constitution in the municipal administration of the premier city of India. It is significant that none of the previous Calcutta Municipal Acts enjoyed such a prolonged lease of life. The Act of 1863 was in force for 13 years; that of 1876 for 12 years and that of 1888 for about the same period. To my mind the present Act is an anachronism and the sooner it is ended the better. That it has outlived its date cannot be questioned for a moment. The Government and the Corporation are my best authorities. In 1909 it was the Decentralization Commission which realized the inherent defects of the constitution under which the Corporation has an official Chairman at its head. That Commission, among other things, recommended the Bombay system of a non-official President side by side with an official as the head of the executive. More than a decade has passed by and still we are left with a constitution which was considered out of date in 1909. Three years later, that is, in 1912, when the Corporation presented an address to Lord Carmichael on his assumption of the office of the first Governor of Bengal, the Commissioners expressed a hope for radical alteration in the law and constitution of the Corporation. Government were evidently impressed with the idea of amending legislation and they lost no time in publishing their tentative proposals. Public opinion was invited on those proposals which were published in July, 1913, and the Corporation offered their opinions at the end of January, 1914. The opinions that were received from the various public bodies were carefully considered by Government, and their final proposals based on such consideration were embodied in the Calcutta Municipal Bill which Government introduced in the Bengal Legislative Council in November, 1917. The Bill was subjected to a good deal of public criticism and, if I am correctly informed, a large amount of valuable materials was got ready by Government with a view to ensure the successful passage of the Bill through the Council. In July, 1918, however, Government withdrew the Bill. It is not necessary for me to recapitulate all the reasons which moved Government to adopt this course.

Suffice to say that in view of the far-reaching changes in the constitution of the Provincial Legislative Council, which were foreshadowed under the Reforms, it was thought desirable that such an important measure relating to local self-government as the amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act should be left to be dealt with by a democratic legislature under the leadership of a popular Minister. That consummation has now been achieved and I venture to think that it would be a happy augury for the future of this Council if it were to inaugurate its career with a measure for extending and liberalising the municipal constitution of the metropolis of Bengal in consonance with the demand of progressive public opinion. Remember that, if you take up the amendment of the Act now, in the normal course of events, it will not come into force before two years. That has been our experience in the past. In connection with the older Municipal Act, I may remind the Council that the Bill was introduced in April, 1886, and came into force in 1889, and the Bill out of which the present Municipal Act emerged, was introduced in Council in March, 1898, and became law in April, 1900. It follows, therefore, that unless you are prepared to tolerate the existing constitution for an indefinite period you must not lose any time in addressing yourselves seriously to this urgent measure of legislative reform. Remember also that the tenure of this Council, giving it its full allotted span of life, is only just three years, and surely it cannot be your ambition to leave this matter as a legacy to your successors. Bombay got its municipal constitution with a non-official President in the 'eighties. Even Madras has got a new Municipal Act, but here in Calcutta we have been cogitating these eight years without producing any tangible result. How long, one is tempted to ask in despair, are we to wait here for that fuller development of municipal polity and wider recognition of popular control of which we hear so much and read so much in Government resolutions? The Councils have been given a democratic franchise and an elective majority. Is Calcutta to continue for an indefinite period yet to be dominated by a constitution in its municipal government which is the very negation of democratic franchise and elective majority? In the Councils we have got Ministers who are responsible to the legislature. But are we to tolerate in the municipal administration of Calcutta an official Chairman, above all popular control, playing the autocrat in the triple capacity of the head of the executive, Chairman of the General Committee and President of the Corporation? In pressing the Council to accept my resolution, I submit I am not pressing for undue hurry in tackling a problem of unquestioned importance and magnitude. I may remind the Council that my Hon'ble friend and leader, Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee, the Minister in charge of Local Self-Government, publicly declared the other day that of the three or four measures which he would like to take up in Council, he would assign the place of honour to the amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act. That shows that our representative in the cabinet is fully responsive to public opinion in the matter and it behoves us all to show the same responsiveness to popular demand.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I rise to say a few words to clear the position as regards the attitude which I and some members of the Corporation of Calcutta would like to take regarding the proposal of our friend Mr. D. C. Ghose. In the beginning I must say that whatever I might say now should not be misunderstood. I clearly let my friends understand that I am as anxious as Mr. D. C. Ghose and the gentlemen who think in that line, in having the Calcutta Municipal Act amended as soon as possible. My close relation with the Corporation as a Commissioner for the last 18 years has taught me that the Calcutta Municipal Act is defective and is very defective in many vital points. We have been since the year 1912 trying again and again to press upon Government the desirability of giving us certain amendments, so that the administration of the Act may be more properly carried out. But what has been the result? I am sorry to say that in spite of resolutions in the Corporation, and in spite of representations made again and again, no relief has been given to us. My friend Mr. D. C. Ghose now comes before us and asks us to press Government to have the Calcutta Municipal Act amended at once. Who is there in the Corporation who would not also support him in that? But before my friend took up this attitude, did he take into consideration what the other members of the Corporation had been trying to do during the last few years? I do not like to take up the time of the Council and would at once come to the proposal of a committee which was formed in the Corporation in 1919. This Committee, presided over by Mr. Payne (then Chairman of the Corporation), submitted an unanimous proposal before the Corporation pressing for certain urgent non-controversial amendments. The report is in my hand, and I would ask your indulgence to allow me to read the first paragraph of it: "The Committee have considered the suggestions made by the Chairman and heads of Departments and also the list of proposals which have come before the Corporation or its committees from time to time for the amendment of the Act. They recommend that the following amendments which they regard as urgent and non-controversial should be undertaken as early as possible without waiting for the proposed changes in the constitution of the Corporation."

This report is signed, headed by Mr. Payne, then comes Mr. Bompas, Sir Kailash Chandra Bose, the late lamented Rai Debendra Chandra Ghose Bahadur, father of the mover of the resolution, myself, Mr. Akram Hussain, Colonel Pugh, Mr. A. C. Bannerji, Mr. James Wyness, Mr. Ramtaran Banarji and Mr. Morgan. The Corporation adopted their proposals, and those proposals were sent to Government with a request for urgent action in preference to the constitutional modification of the Act. What has been done since March, 1919? I do not know where the papers are. Only the other day, when I happened to be in the room of the Hon'ble Minister, I was surprised to find that the Minister had not the papers by him. He might have got them later on, but, whatever that might be, the Minister is not responsible (but his predecessor certainly is) for not giving that attention to the proposals of the Corporation which they deserved and for which the Corporation had been again and again pressing before Government. Mr. Payne and his successor, Mr. Donald, have assured us again and again that these proposals would receive the best attention of Government, but in spite of committees, in spite of the Corporation, in spite of the support of Chairman after Chairman, nothing has been done. Those urgent non-controversial resolutions are still before Government for consideration. Now that my friend the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea is in charge of it, would it be improper for us to expect that more sympathetic consideration will be given to our reasonable demands from the Corporation? I would ask my friend Mr. D. C. Ghose to remember that these amendments are much more important than many parts of the Act. Some of them are so urgent that no legislature in the world can ignore them. Take, for example, the food question in Calcutta. I am ashamed to say that even to-day adulterated mustard-oil is sold in the city of Calcutta. If you fix a board over the door saying that mixed oil is sold there you can defy the whole body of health officers under the Calcutta Corporation. Is it not necessary that this state of things should be stamped out without a day's delay?

My friends know that only three years ago Mr. Payne, while Chairman of the Corporation, tried his level best in conjunction with some of us to formulate a scheme for the establishment of a dairy farm in Calcutta. A scheme was drawn up, some experts were consulted, and a large sum of money was spent by the Corporation, land was selected for the purpose, but nothing could be done because the lawyers pointed out that the Corporation had not the legal authority to do it. The Corporation at once asked for that legal authority and I ask my friend Mr. D. C. Ghose to say if the constitutional amendments are more important than the supply of pure milk for our children. Certainly it is more important that the sale of unadulterated food articles and supply of pure milk should be ensured than the immediate amendment of the constitutional part of the Act. I again say that it is a disgrace that people in Calcutta can sell adulterated food for the purpose of human consumption without any control over them by simply hanging a board stating that they are selling adulterated articles. The present Chairman of the Corporation, whom I find sitting there, will be able to tell you that you will find such boards wherever mixed articles of food are sold. Lawyers advise us that unless proper legal authority is given to the Corporation to prosecute the dealers of any adulterated food we cannot put a stop to such state of things. Along with these important items there are other things which also stand in the way of the smooth administration of the Act. I find that under the present Act a ridiculous situation has arisen. You will be surprised to hear that at present motor lorries are taxed under sections 208 and 209 of the Act Rs. 4 per half year the same as bullock carts. Is it not ridiculous that motor lorries plying in the streets of Calcutta should pay Rs. 8 a year? How long are we going to tolerate it? This was one of the subjects of reference.

The PRESIDENT: I do not think that these details to which the gentleman refers have anything to do with the general question raised by Mr. D. C. Ghose.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I only referred to them because they appear in connection with the report of the special committee.

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! You cannot discuss my ruling.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: The only point for me to urge now is this. My friend Mr. D. C. Ghose, who has asked for an amendment of the whole Act, suggests that it will take two years to do so. I have also come to the same conclusion. The Bill of 1889 was placed before the Council in 1886 and the Bill of 1900 was introduced in 1898 and became law in two years. The Calcutta Municipal Bill was placed in November, 1917, before the Council and withdrawn in July, 1919. So I take it ordinarily it takes two years for a Bill either to be passed or withdrawn. I want to impress upon my friends here that if accept Mr. D. C. Ghose's proposal, the inevitable consequence of that would be that we will have to wait for two years before the urgent suggestions of the Corporation can be attended to. Instead of that, the proper course for us would be to ask for the urgent amendments at once and then go for the Calcutta Municipal Act. That was the point I was anxious to draw attention to. I intended to move an amendment to this resolution, but I find that I am not in order because I did not give notice of it. I want to point out that if we accept this resolution, in our desire to have the urgent amendments would not be fulfilled.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I rise to support the resolution that has been moved by Mr. D. C. Ghose, and in doing so will just refer to the observations that have been made by my esteemed friend, Mr. Dr. Haridhan Dutt Bahadur. He apprehends that if this resolution is accepted by the House, the emergency legislation which has been recommended by the Calcutta Corporation will be indefinitely postponed. I do not think that he need have any apprehension on this point. The resolution recommends that the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1909 be taken up for amendment at an early date. It may be taken up in a whole, or it may be taken up in part, and therefore I do not think that the acceptance of this resolution will preclude Government from undertaking the emergency legislation recommended by the Corporation. Now, with reference to that piece of legislation, I may say that Mr. Dr. Haridhan Dutt Bahadur has very properly referred to some anomalies of the existing law, which require immediate amendment, but it is not likely there will be any differences of opinion about the amendment of the sections regarding adulteration of food, milk-supply, storerooms and other things, but I am not quite sure. I had a brief glance at the big list of amendments—whether there are not some matters in the list of amendments proposed which are of a controversial nature. While I may say I also demand equally that such non-controversial amendments as those referred to by Rai Dr. Haridhan Dutt Bahadur should be taken up at once, I will oppose with all the emphasis at I can command any controversial item that may be brought in along with these amendments, because I remember certain attempts have been made in the Corporation to insert controversial items. We do not always see eye to eye with the executive, and therefore I think that controversial matters should be deferred till we take up the amendment of the whole Act. It is a happy augury for the future of the Calcutta Corporation that the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee, who has fought for nearly 50 years for the expansion of local self-government, is in charge of the Local Self-Government Department. The Calcutta Corporation was the cradle of his political life, and no one more conversant with the feelings of the people of the city in regard to the present constitution, and their demands for genuine local self-government. Mr. D. C. Ghose has laid particular stress upon the Bombay constitution. But it is not the mere glamour of the Corporation Presidential chair that will satisfy the citizens of Calcutta. What they want is that the Corporation should be the supreme authority, and the head of the executive should be subordinate to the Corporation and should not have any power to interfere by pulling strings from behind. In the Bill originally introduced this principle was not recognised. The Bill should be recast and every section should be carefully examined and real and genuine power of self-government bestowed on the people of Calcutta. I hope the Hon'ble Minister will take this fact into consideration when the Bill is brought up before the Council. I think it is high time that this measure should be laid before the Council, as considerable delay has already occurred. We know very well that when the Act of 1862 was passed the Corporation were supreme under that Act and were referred to as the Justices of the Peace from the first section to the last, and nowhere was the Chairman of the Justices mentioned. In 1876, when the Act was remodelled, the words "Justices of the Peace" were dropped and the word "Commissioners" substituted. Then, in 1888, when the Act was again amended, the word "Commissioners" occurred, and then to our misfortune—I do not want to go into details—in the year 1899, forgetful of all our past history, the present constitution under which the Corporation was made only one among three co-ordinate authorities and an official Chairman dominating the whole organisation was introduced. It violates every fundamental principle of local self-government. We have had it now for 20 years and I hope, Sir, that no time will be lost to recast the present Act, and to liberalise the constitution of the Corporation.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I should like to state before the House what the intentions of Government are regarding the resolution which has been moved by Mr. Ghose. I may be permitted to congratulate my friend on the lucid speech with which he moved his resolution. I quite agree with him in thinking that an amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act is overdue. As my friend has pointed out, there had been amendments of the Act, but that was 21 years ago; the last amendment took place in 1900, and we all know the storm of opposition which it called forth at that time. I myself was a member of the Corporation at the time and I was one of the protestors, I was one of the 28 who resigned their seats in the Corporation—almost all are now dead, except Mr. B. N. Basu and Mr. Kali Nath Mitter. We were then non-co-operationists. Experience has shown that non-co-operation is not always an efficient instrument of political warfare, and we then came to the conclusion that it is only by co-operation that we can work out our destiny. That has been the conviction that has been forced on our minds. I am sure the principle of non-co-operation is at a discount. By our act of non-co-operation—

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! I am sorry to interrupt the Hon'ble Member. We are not discussing the question of non-cooperation at present.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I bow to your decision. I desire to say this: the amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act is overdue, and, that being so, we are prepared to accept the first part of my friend's resolution, viz., that early steps be taken with a view to introduce an amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act. So far as Government are concerned, we are not prepared to accept the latter part of the resolution, viz., that preference should be given to this amendment over all other projects of Government legislation. There is an emergency Bill which has been presented to Government by the Corporation. That emergency Bill is before us. I have been considering that Bill. It was recommended on the ground that it was a non-controversial piece of legislation. I have discussed the matter with persons interested in this question, and we have come to the conclusion that it is highly controversial. That being so, the sole ground upon which preference was to be given to the Bill disappears, and if all controversial points were eliminated, very little of the Bill would be left.

We are prepared on behalf of Government to accept the first part of my friend's resolution, viz., that early steps be taken to introduce an amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act, but we cannot give it preference over all other projects of law. If my friend agrees to move his resolution on these lines, Government are prepared to accept it.

The PRESIDENT: I should like to know if the mover of the resolution is prepared to accept the suggestion made by the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: Having regard to the very sympathetic utterance that has fallen from my friend Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea, I am quite willing to split up my resolution into two parts and withdraw the latter.

The PRESIDENT: You want to omit the last few words of your resolution?

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: With the leave of the Council I will withdraw the latter part of the resolution, which is this: "And that His Excellency the Governor be approached with a request that preference be given to it over all other projects of Government legislation."

The resolution was, by leave of the President, put in the following amended form:—"This Council recommends that early steps be taken for the amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899."

The PRESIDENT: Does anyone wish to speak on the motion in its amended form?

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MAITRA: I wished to oppose the original resolution, but as the latter part has been withdrawn, I shall not speak any further.

Colonel A. J. PUCH: I move that the question be now put.

The resolution was then put in its amended form and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned for lunch.

The Council reassembled after lunch, the Hon'ble the President in the chair.

Allowances, etc., of Council Members.

Babu NIRODE BEHARY MULLICK: "This Council recommends to the Government that an ordinary member of the Bengal Legislative Council should draw a monthly allowance of Rs. 250 plus free first class railway passes and postage throughout the Province."

I am in the somewhat embarrassing position, which has been described by the author of Hitopadesh, thus: [Here the speaker quoted a Sanskrit stanza, the meaning of which is "Do not undertake anything, the fruits of which, if successful, are reaped equally by all, but which, if unsuccessful, brings ridicule to you only."] But I have ventured to bring it before the House in the belief that with the growth of Parliamentary, or representative, or democratic institutions the question was bound to arise, as in other countries, and if it is good and desirable the sooner it arises, the better.

The subject being somewhat of a novel nature in India, although not so in other countries where Parliamentary institutions are a thing not of to-day or of yesterday, it may strike you as somewhat awkward. So in order to remove this unnecessary awkwardness let me quote certain figures of other countries. Take first of all the case of England or the Mother of Parliaments. Here, as is well known, each one of about 700 members gets about £400 per annum. In Canada the same arrangement is found for 234 members. In the United States each member gets about Rs. 1,875 per month, besides travelling allowance. In France each one of the 924 members of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies gets about Rs. 750 per month plus travelling allowance. I have taken the examples of some of the well known self-governing countries at random, and, on a study of the above-quoted facts, one thing obvious is that each country, particularly sensible as it is of retrenchment or economy, does not countenance ugly economy.

As regards the latter part of the resolution, namely, the grant of a first class pass and free postage throughout Bengal, it practically touches nobody's pocket, although it is a splendid advantage to a member to know each and every corner of Bengal as it helps him in the discharge of his duties.

In the second place a member of the former Minto-Morley Council of Bengal told me that under the present system every regular mufasal member gets about Rs. 150 per month on an average. If, together with this fact, we remember that under the Reforms Scheme meetings of the Council will be more frequent, then perhaps it will not be wide of the mark to say that each regular mufassal member can expect about Rs. 200 per month. Consequently, it is apparent that from this sum of Rs. 250 per month is not a very big jump. From this point of view, all that the resolution aims at is to do away with the unnecessary management to have the Bills countersigned by the Secretary and all that sort of circumlocution. Moreover, the present system of allowances was fixed in 1909, that is about 11 years back. The rise of prices, i.e., the dearthness of living in Calcutta since then, is a factor not known to any member of this Council.

In the third place, it may be said that even if nothing is paid in the shape of allowances, there will be no want of self-sacrificing men to serve the Council, i.e., the country. To me that is an irrelevant argument. If such an argument is really advanced, I would say that there could be many who would be quite willing to pay a good deal of money as members of this Council. Why not then fill the coffers of Government by putting membership up to the highest bidder?

Lastly, let us not in season and out of season clamour for economy as is done by the third class editors and sub-editors of Calcutta, when they find that they have nothing to fill their columns with. Believe me, Mr. President, when I say that you will scarcely find a person more anxious for economy and retrenchment than I am. But I am never for ugly and meaningless economy, which is a source of weakness rather than of strength to the real prosperity and a peaceful administration of the country. With these few words, I commend the resolution to the consideration of the House.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: I regret that an elected member of the Council has thought fit to move such a resolution. However, after all that has been said on this resolution, I not only feel unconvinced, but am as opposed to it as ever. I confess that I have not been able to gather what else can be the object of it if it is not to impose, though indirectly, a fine on the overburdened taxpayers and our electors for their simple fault of electing us as their representatives to the Council. And it is not a small fine indeed; but an annual fine of a few lakhs of rupees. As I do not wish to punish my electors and countrymen, I frankly say I cannot see my way to support this resolution. I really wonder, Sir, what are we coming to with the inauguration of the Reforms. We have been hearing of nothing else but of salaries, emoluments, offices with maximum salary; and last though not the least of allowances for popular representatives. Is Bengal so denuded of public spirit that with the advent of the Reforms nothing but a monetary inducement appeals to us? Have the Reforms really so much deformed us? If our predecessors—I mean the members of the former Councils under the Minto-Morley Act—did not require any remuneration, I don't understand why should we require any. I do appreciate the requirements of the mufassal members; but the existing arrangement to pay for their travelling and halting allowances is, I think, quite sufficient. I see, therefore, neither any necessity nor propriety for such a resolution. On the contrary, I am afraid that if this resolution is carried, it will stand to our everlasting discredit and we shall for all time to come be accused of petty self-seeking. With these remarks, I beg to oppose this resolution.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I wish to make just only one observation. I find that the mover of the resolution is somewhat inconsistent, because in another sheet, he has moved a resolution to the effect that the Ministers' salaries be reduced to the figure of Rs. 3,500 a month on the question of retrenchment; and for the same member to move that this House should pass a resolution to the effect that each member of the Council should be paid Rs. 250 a month as allowance, does not seem to me to be quite consistent. But apart from consistency or inconsistency, the whole question seems to me to be rather premature at this stage. It is a question of ways and means. We should like to have comparative figures before us. We have absolutely no idea of what the present travelling allowance system, including double first class fare, mileage and halting charges, costs the Government. We should like to have another statement showing what the present proposal is going to cost. If a comparative statement be prepared and it can be shown that in the long run what the resolution proposes will cost less, then of course this House will be in a position to come to a reasonable conclusion in the matter.

Dr. H. SUHRAWARDY: I do not wish to take up the time of this Council by repeating what Professor Mukherji has just now told us. I am entirely in agreement with him that it is premature at the present moment to saddle the country with any further expenditure, without going into details from the point of consistency or inconsistency on the part of the mover himself as the person who has introduced a resolution to reduce the pay of the Ministers. When the country develops we shall be in a position to judge whether the elected members from the mufassal ought to have some remuneration. I am myself a mufassal man, but consider that at the present moment, the privilege of representing the people and of doing honorary work ought to be quite sufficient for us. I request the hon'ble mover to reconsider the matter.

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): The present resolution introduces a new principle, and it therefore behoves the Council to scrutinise with some circumspection. Our old system was to endeavour to insure that members attending the Council from outside Calcutta were not, during the Council session, actually losers pecuniarily as a reason of their doing so. In order to attain that end, members were paid travelling allowance at the ordinary first class rates, and for the period of their stay in Calcutta they were given what is now known as a residential allowance of Rs. 10 a day. Gentlemen, who lived in Calcutta, I admit, were expected to serve from altruistic motives and public spirit. But we did try and, I think, succeeded, on the whole, in ensuring that the outside members were not out of pocket. The principle underlying that procedure was, I think, sound. The sittings of the old Council were not unduly protracted, and neither do we yet now that they will be excessively protracted under the new system. Undoubtedly, the sessions will be longer, but we have yet to see how long they will be, and it is probably a rough forecast to imagine that we may sit for something like three or four months in the cold weather and possibly a month or so in the rains. I do not wish to prophesy, and events will show whether this is correct or not. But in any case, it is not likely for some time, at any rate, that we shall have protracted sittings such as are characteristic, for instance, of the House of Commons in England. We have therefore now a system which worked reasonably well in the past, and which, so far as we can see at any rate, will be, for some time to come, fair and reasonable. Even if assal members will not be kept so long in Calcutta as to prevent their completing their duties in Council with their other avocations.

The payment of members, of course, as the mover has said, has numerous precedents in democratic countries, though I would remind the Council that in England it is a precedent of fairly recent date, and it is a precedent which was largely created by the presence of a large number of labour members in the House of Commons. So far the conditions of this country do not approximate to those of England in this respect, and I submit, therefore, as has been urged by previous speakers, that it would be wise to wait and see what the future course of the Council is going to be. In other words, as Professor Mukherji has said, the present resolution is premature. To enforce it now will, so far as can be foreseen at present, mean that members will receive monthly remuneration for a large portion of the year during which they will not actually do any work in Council. So much, Sir, for the general principle.

As regards the details, the proposals as regards free railway passes and free postage seem to be particularly open to objection. In the first place, it must be remembered that if this proposal were accepted, it would definitely mean that the provincial revenues would be directly out of pocket. Both Railways and Postage are Imperial sources of revenue, and for any concessions that we make to our members in these respects, we shall have to reimburse the Railway and Postal Departments. We shall have to supply our members with service stamps and books of requisitions for railway accommodation. It is a system which, with the best of intentions, will not be easily enforceable with strict economy. Neither can I see any reason why members of Council should be enabled to travel all over the province, and even to the hill stations, at the public expense.

Professor Mukherji has asked if we have got figures showing what the present cost is and what it is likely to be if we adopted this resolution; and we have fortunately worked out some details. Our expenditure in 1918-19 and 1919-20—the two latest years before the conjunction of the two systems took place in the current year—on travelling allowance and residential allowance to members was Rs. 12,295 and Rs. 12,133, respectively. Continuing the old system as applied to the larger memberships of the present Council, we propose to budget Rs. 43,000 under these two heads next year. So, even under the old system, we are going to be let in for an increase, as, of course, was inevitable with the numerical expansion of the Council. If we were to adopt the system proposed in the resolution, and taking 113 elected members and six nominated non-official members—I presume the officials will be left out—the expenditure at the rate of Rs. 3,000 for each member on this account would amount to Rs. 3,57,000. That would be exclusive of travelling allowance, and obviously means a large increase. The argument of economy is one which the Council will do well to weigh, because, quite apart from these matters of travelling and residential allowances, this new Council is going to cost a good deal more than the old Council. Thus, again taking the years 1918-19 and 1919-20, on various items such as postage stamps, telegraphic charges, books and publications, rents, rates and taxes and office expenses, we spent Rs. 11,259 and Rs. 10,839, respectively; but our budget under the same head for the enlarged Council—it is to be remembered that we have to pay rent for the Town Hall—will work out to Rs. 42,000, and these are inevitable items of expenditure. This being so, I think the majority of the Council will agree with me that it will be unwise to incur a further expenditure which cannot be shown to be absolutely necessary or fully justified.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I do not know what the temper of the House is; but I have no hesitation in saying that it is a matter of surprise to me that public-spirited gentlemen who have come to the Council for the purpose of serving the country can ask the Government to contribute something as their allowance. The mover will remember that in this country there are Municipal Commissioners, Honorary Magistrates, Municipal Chairmen, Members of the District Boards and non-official Chairmen of District Boards who do not charge a single pice from the funds of the local body. Where

, therefore, the necessity of asking the Council to pass a resolution in favour of payment of an allowance? Self-sacrifice is the order of the day, and in this Council we are very anxious and strongly desirous to see that economy is practised. Are we not departing from that principle? I would ask therefore the mover to seriously consider this matter. In my own humble opinion, it will be to his own discredit and the discredit of all those who are sitting in this House. There are many men who come from the mufassal and who are coming from a great distance and they have all their own professional work and other occupations.

Babu NIRODE BEHARY MULLICK: I accept the view that my resolution is premature, and beg leave to withdraw it.

The resolution was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Darjeeling Exodus.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: "This Council recommends to the Government that the annual exodus of the Government to Darjeeling be discontinued from the next official year and that no provision be made for it in next year's budget."

In moving this resolution, I need hardly say that it is a very simple one and one which, to my mind, does not admit of much controversy. The matter had been for a very very long time before the press and the public platform; and the whole of it has been thoroughly discussed, and I am free to tell you that all that I need say about this is nothing but common knowledge. This matter also received attention in various meetings of Councils, both Imperial and Provincial, but the sum and substance of all that has been a pious and an earnest prayer and nothing more than that. The authorities were asked to give up the habit of the exodus—I stick to the word "habit"—but they have never paid any heed to this; and in this demand it was not the Indians alone who urged, but it was also the non-official members and Europeans as a body who did figure. I can assure you, Sir, that so far as the Indian opinion is concerned, it is absolutely unanimous in its opinion against the habit of exodus. There is not one man in this country who does not believe that this exodus is merely a waste of money and a luxury indulged in by those persons in whose power it lies. So far as European non-official members are concerned, the earliest record, on which I have been able to lay my hand, is one about a meeting held in this stonied hall, before it was mutilated like this, in the year 1886. I was in school then. I went to hear our great Surendra Nath Banerjee speak in that meeting. I was in the habit of attending meetings when I was very young. That meeting was held in 1886. You will remember the year, gentlemen. It was held shortly after the most unfortunate agitation in connection with the Ilbert Bill. But still the two communities forgot their differences; the European and Indian communities laid aside all the bitterness of feeling that had come between them on account of the unfortunate controversy over the Ilbert Bill and what did they do? They joined on a common platform here for a common cause to oppose this matter of the exodus to the hills. It was not an agitation, if agitation it could be called, engineered by Indians. No, not at all. The whole of that movement was engineered by the non-official European element in the country. It was a meeting called by the Sheriff of Calcutta—a great name—George Yule, a respected name amongst the Indians. That was the meeting, and the resolution was drafted not by an Indian but by a European gentleman who held a leading position in the Chamber of Commerce in those days, and he was Mr. Clarke. I have the resolution with me. Nothing could be more thorough than that resolution. It gave 10 or 11 different reasons why this exodus should be abolished. And it was drafted, as I have already said, by a non-official European—a merchant prince. Then, again, who moved the resolution? The resolution was moved, I again say, on behalf of the non-official European community by Sir Alexander Wilson, also a merchant prince of those days. And I will now tell you who presided over that meeting. To the best of my recollection, the meeting was presided by the late Hon'ble Mr. Pugh, a leading member of the Calcutta Bar—a man whose name many of us remember here and who used to command the spontaneous respect of both the Indian and European communities. Mr. Clarke drafted the resolution, Sir Alexander Wilson proposed it on behalf of the European community and, who do you think, seconded on behalf of the Indian community? No less a person than Surendra Nath Banerjee, than whom there was nobody who had a better claim to represent his countrymen at that meeting. I have got his speech in my hands and if I were to say one-tenth of what was said by him at that meeting I would make one of the most brilliant and splendid speeches that have ever been made. But I remember the suggestion of the Hon'ble President to condense our speeches as much as we can, and I am going to follow his advice and not to quote from the splendid speech at length, but will content myself by going into the merits of the question itself.

Now as regards the merits of the question. What is the basic idea underlying this exodus? It is easy to see and it is well known. It is the supposed unsuitability of the climate of Calcutta for Europeans—nothing more—nothing less. There is no other reason to justify it and I would ask—I might even use the word “challenge”—any European official or non-official to say whether there is any reason other than that at all. That was the reason which that great monster meeting of all the people of Calcutta protested against. That was the reason and nothing more. I would say now that in the opinion of the responsible non-official European gentlemen themselves of those days that people had an exaggerated notion of the unsuitability of the Indian climate. Men like Sir Alexander Wilson, men like the late Mr. Pugh and Mr. Yule, thought that it was an exaggerated notion. And it was so thought in 1886—35 years ago—when many of us here were quite young, when some of us here were even unborn; at that time it was considered to be an exaggerated notion. In the opinion of my leader in those days it was also so. And I cannot do better than quote the last four lines of his speech. I hope he remembers them, and I also hope that he will help us here in this matter too. These are his words: “The time is indeed fast approaching when these yearly migrations will soon have become a thing of the past and the future generations will wonder that it was possible for the rulers of a great country in full possession of their senses” mark the words “in full possession of their senses”

“to dream of governing a vast empire away from the scenes of popular opinion, intelligence and wealth.” That was said 35 years ago and the prophecy that was then made, the hope that was then cherished by our leaders was that the time was fast approaching. Thirty-five years have since passed by and we are still where we are. That has been possible—why?—because the Government of the country was selfish. They cared for nothing else than their own comforts and convenience, and they did not want to deny themselves anything. Well, Sir, if that was the state of things 35 years ago, if it was thought 35 years ago that the unhealthiness of the climate of Calcutta was exaggerated, what would these gentlemen say after 35 years of the municipal administration—albeit the much-maligned municipal administration—of Calcutta and not to say of the recent good work done by the much-dreaded Improvement Trust? Who would deny at the present day that Calcutta is a sanitarium? Can anybody say that there is a better and healthier place in India than Calcutta at all seasons of the year? Can anybody deny that it is absolutely at its best during the rains? What reason is there for going away to the hills? There is absolutely none. Over and above that, look at the other things. We see on all sides that the amenities of existence have advanced. In 1886 when the meeting was held—mark, the date was the 14th of July—in this very historic hall, there was no fan at all. What an awful day it must have been, when in the beginning of February we have the electric fans running here to cool our heads. Look at the other amenities of existence which have grown since. There is plenty of ice now and it is cheap too. We have got rid of the punkah coolies and you have no more his ways to try your temper. You have got the fans by day and by night. You have got motor cars which have shortened distances, and minimised exposure to the sun to and from your offices, and last—though not the least—you have got your typewriters. You have now got your office files before you quite clean and legible. Everything is placed before you in a comfortable way to help your work and you still try to find out reasons for going away to Darjeeling. There are other ways of looking at it; there are some other reasons such as comparison with others similarly circumstanced, which I could have told the House, but which I would not say now as they might be unpleasant. But if there is opposition which impels me to refer to them, I shall have to do it in my reply, though with a certain amount of regret. I can cite to you various instances of that description which perhaps will bring this thing home to you. But I would not take them up now and will not bring them up either, unless I am forced to do so.

If you, gentlemen, consider that the exodus is not required in the interest of public service or for efficiency--that blessed word which has come into vogue since Lord Curzon's time; if you think that this money ought to be saved and could be saved, if you think that it should go to the tax-payer and not to the tax-gatherer, then the time has come to say that we shall have nothing to do with the hill exodus any longer. In the past, we could only move pious resolutions and express eager hopes. But now that we have got some semblance of power in our own hands, we shall say that we do not want to waste so much money when half the population in Bengal live on one meal a day.

One word more. I would ask everybody to consider the question not in a party spirit. It is not a party question at all. It is a matter which we should look at from a broad point of view—from the point of view of efficiency as well as of economy—which is so much needed in the administration of the province. With these words, I move my resolution.

Dr. H. SUHRAWARDY: This resolution is said to be based on economic grounds, as the mover has said. Well, Sir, if it is good economy, the expenditure must be cut down, otherwise not. My hon'ble friend Mr. Fazl-ul Haq said yesterday that the pruning knife must be applied mercilessly and everywhere items of expenditure should be cut down. The metaphor is good, but it is, I am afraid, bad botany. Not only judicious pruning invigorates the plant and promotes luxuriant vegetation. The indiscriminate use of the pruning knife is not only not good but it acts like a blight on a plant. If we cut down expenditure indiscriminately, the result will be that we will make the Secretariat unpopular and, I apprehend, may lose the services of many experts. We require their services as we ourselves are not experts but more or less amateurs. As more and more of us come into positions of responsibility in the administration and Government, more work devolves on the Secretariat, whose long experience in their special departments is drawn upon to efficiently and expeditiously get through the work. Besides this, we should consider that the Secretariat is not made up of young men, but of men well on in years, who require a change after strenuous work in the heat of the plains. They do not take rest up at the hills, but without breaking the continuity of work, which will happen if they are forced to take leave, they work and work harder and better during their stay in the hills. Consider, Sir, how much money will be spent in arranging reliefs for persons who will be forced to take leave at shorter intervals on medical grounds. How much money will be spent on overseas allowance to attract men to an unpopular service. I do not think that the proposition set forth in the resolution is a sound one. It is not a remunerative scheme. It is based on false economy—nay, parsimony. I have, as a medical man, often advised people to go to the hills after they have worked here in the rains and during summer months. Besides the European officials a large number of Indian people go to the hills during the exodus, but simply because at present the officials happen to be largely Europeans, it is no reason that we should cut down expenditure on this head and not look to the future. We, Indians, also go there and come back with renewed health. I go there myself. Why should not the Europeans, who are also overworked, go to the hills? I do not hold any brief for them, but if you look to the figures which I am sure the Government member will give us, you will find that the expenditure is not very much and that the money is well spent, and that you can work better in the hills than in the sweltering heat of Calcutta. Calcutta might be a very good place at the present moment, but the climate of Calcutta is undeniably enervating. The hon'ble mover, who is a Municipal Commissioner, can easily get statistics of sickness and mortality in Calcutta during summer months and immediately after the rains. The only thing that I want to say is that we must be fair, absolutely fair, even to our enemies, and that there must not be any racial consideration in deciding the question. Now that we have got some power in our hands, let us use it judiciously in the best interest of our country. As the hon'ble mover himself has said, "it is a matter which we should look at from a broad point of view;" from the point of view of economy yes, but of efficiency also and more so. I, as a surgeon, have often sacrificed the finger to save the hand, the hand to save the limb, and the limb to save the whole system and body. There is construction even in apparent destruction. I oppose the motion.

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): The resolution raises a question which is one of the antiques of political discussion in Bengal, or, for the matter of that, in most provinces, and it follows that there is very little new that can be said about it. I dealt with the question at some length at Dacca in the old Council in 1917, and anybody who cares to look up the proceedings of that meeting will find there most of the arguments which I can now adduce. I do not propose, therefore, to speak at length, and I will put my points as concisely as possible, the more so as I would fain keep the debate free from the street-corner catchwords which are not infrequently introduced in discussions of this matter to the prejudice of the real issues.

In the debate to which I have already alluded, the main points which I endeavoured to establish were these. In the first place the so-called exodus is neither so comprehensive nor so expensive as is generally supposed. I then mentioned that some 31 higher officials were involved, and that the cost was roughly Rs. 91,000 a year. Since then we have endeavoured, consistently with the tone of that debate, to reduce the expenditure, and the latest figures—excluding Heads of Departments who pay their own way up and take few clerks with them—show that the cost was a little over Rs. 46,000 in 1918-19 and a little over Rs. 52,000 in 1919-20; that is, about half a lakh of rupees of year. Out of this approximately Rs. 38,000 and Rs. 43,000, respectively, were spent on ministerial establishments and their allowances. Therefore the cost is a great deal less than is usually supposed, while the duration of the stay is only about two months before the rains and about six weeks after. My second point was that Secretariat work is of such a nature that it can be performed away from Calcutta without detriment, and even with enhanced efficiency, especially the consideration of larger questions away from the disturbing elements of personal interviews and interruptions of that kind. Thirdly, I endeavoured to establish that if heavy, continuous and trying work is to be expected from men, most of whom are no longer in their first youth, they should be allowed to carry on the work with the relief which follows from the cooler climate of the hills. At the head of all, we have the Governor. In this province he is a nobleman who comes from home. He is fortunately young, but is no longer as young as he was. He is bound to serve for five years continuously, and it is eminently to the benefit of the province that he should do so. He is not allowed to take leave during that time. The responsibility devolving upon him is very great and his work is continuous. Then we have the Members of the Executive Council. They are all expected to serve for five years, and whatever be the leave due to them when they accept office, they cannot get leave afterwards except on medical certificate. Even then, they are only allowed six months, and if they are too broken down to return after that period, they would get no pay for the period of their absence—a procedure which may be beneficial to the public exchequer but is somewhat hard on the victim. Then you now have Ministers. Ministers are elected and cannot be replaced. In the event of a short breakdown, it will not be possible or proper to put in somebody else in the place of a Minister. Therefore in the interest of popular administration in this country a Minister should be kept physically fit to perform his duties continuously. Even in England it is not the case that Ministers have to sit at their desks de die in diem. They can absent themselves from their work and they do avail themselves of the opportunities that arise for so doing. Hence my point was that the move to the hills in the truest sense makes for efficiency.

So much for the old arguments. I will now deal with the stock objections which are frequently brought forward. The first has been put by the hon'ble mover, namely, that we go to the hills for nothing else but for our own comfort and for our personal convenience—a criticism which, I can only charitably assume, is based on entire ignorance of the conditions under which we carry on our work. As regards the second point that of cost I have already gone into details. The third stock argument is that by being away for two short periods, we lose touch with public opinion—a contention which never seemed to me to be sound or sustainable, especially in these days of enlarged Councils. Lastly, there is the oft-repeated analogy, and to my mind the false analogy, of High Court Judges, merchants and district officers. These have not the same continuous work to do as in the Secretariat, and Judges enjoy a regular vacation. Business men, especially those in the senior ranks, have greater opportunities of proceeding home on leave than officials.

All these conclusions still hold good. But it is obvious that new conditions have effected certain changes. In the first place the numerical strength of Government is now greater, and it would entail an increase of expenditure to go to the hills in the old style, possibly, also, there might be greater difficulties of accommodation, especially office accommodation, at Darjeeling. Secondly, a larger popular element has now been introduced, and rightly introduced, into the Government. That being so, we have, in the light of these new factors, carefully re-examined the whole question, and I would now state the conclusions we have arrived at.

In the first place, I hope it will be admitted that if we are to have the best men available as our Governors, they must be allowed to go to the hills. I anticipate the support of the majority in this respect with greater confidence, because in the debate at Dacca this point was specifically admitted by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, Babu Surendra Nath Ray and others, and practically accepted by the Council as a whole. Now, if the Governor goes to the hills for these two short periods, I put it to the Council that it is clearly essential that he should have a free hand in keeping himself in touch with his Members and Ministers. To hold otherwise would be entirely inconsistent with the spirit of the constitution under which we are now working. Under that constitution, as has been often pointed out in recent discussions, the personal duties of the Governor are very onerous, and it is essential that he should be in touch, whenever need may arise, with his Government either in whole or part. We must leave it to his discretion to maintain such touch with his Members and Ministers as he may think best, and to require the presence of Secretaries and Heads of Departments as occasion may arise, they being the people who are primarily responsible for departmental cases. If Members and Ministers have occasionally to go to Darjeeling, it is equally impossible to stipulate that they should leave Sealdah, say, on Monday, arrive at Darjeeling on Tuesday, and leave for Calcutta on Wednesday. A series of frequent wearisome and expensive railway journeys would obviously not make for efficiency, neither would it serve any good purpose.

Well, in these circumstances, Government are prepared to alter the previously existing system by which the Secretariat moved as a whole on a particular day in April to Darjeeling, coming down in June, leaving again in September and coming down at the end of October or the beginning of November, and to that extent I hope we shall meet the wishes of this Council and carry with us the majority of its members. It is, in effect, in compliance with the sense of the resolution, though not within its precise letter, and I submit that it is a reasonable arrangement arrived at in consideration of the arguments which we have often met in the past. It will, in practice, materially minimise the duration of the stay of Members of Government, other than the Governor, in Darjeeling, and it will materially reduce the cost of the move, a large part of which, as I have already said, is on account of the ministerial establishments, which will in future be reduced to the lowest level commensurate with the conduct of work. Whether this change may not give rise to the loss of efficiency, which we have apprehended in the past, and which I still apprehend in the future, we cannot say. The members of this Council perhaps find it difficult to appreciate the dislocation which it means to the work of Government if officers of Government responsible for giving orders have to be frequently changed, it may be temporarily or it may be permanently. However, be that as it may, as I have said, we are willing to try this new system, and I hope it will be recognised by the Council, that in so doing we are making a sincere and honest endeavour to meet arguments of which we do not admit the validity, but which we recognise do carry weight with many.

Mr. J. CAMPBELL FORRESTER: With your permission, I should like to say a few words. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has stated something about street-corner talk. As an elected member I can assure him that during my active election campaign, at my meetings in Calcutta and also in the districts, this subject was continually brought up, and lively public interest was shown in the same. I was asked: "If returned, will you vote against the exodus to the hills?" I promised to do so, because I thought the exodus was unnecessary. There are three points only to be considered—health, efficiency, and economy. The reply to the first is seen in the appearance of the buria sahibs of Calcutta—look at their ruddy complexions and physical fitness—they do not look as if their stay in the plains did them much harm—and the other two points are absolutely exploded by the remarks of Lord Carmichael in his reply to the address of the Darjeeling Municipality. He said: "I am afraid I cannot agree with those who profess to think that far more work is done in the hills than in the plains. In Bengal, at any rate, that is certainly not the case. When dealing with those files, from which there is never any escape, I have often wished that Darjeeling was nearer Calcutta so that I might have got the information I needed quickly."

Now then, gentlemen, we know that the District Judges do their work in Alipore and we also know that the merchant princes do their work here. We cannot call them young men and I think all of them do their work efficiently. The members must take into consideration the fact that there must be dislocation and delay in business by the removal of papers to Darjeeling and possibility of same being mislaid or lost, and I trust the members of this House will vote in favour of this resolution.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA RAHADUR of BURDWAN: From the Government point of view Sir Henry Wheeler has laid a very clear case for the consideration of the Council. It is not my intention to in any way minimise the desire, the honest desire, on the part of the mover of this resolution regarding the importance which he attaches to the centralisation of Government in Calcutta, but I think that not only as a Member of Government, but as an Indian who is perhaps more acclimatised to the climate of Bengal than the average European, I would like to point out certain of the advantages that there are in this so-called migration to the hills. Sir Henry has mentioned in his speech that in future Government are prepared to take up to the hills as few of the Secretaries and heads of departments and ministerial officers as might be compatible with the move of His Excellency the Governor and the occasional stays of the Members and Ministers. What I should like to emphasise regarding what Sir Henry Wheeler has said, not from the point of view that I happen to possess a comfortable house and a good deal of landed property in the Darjeeling district—for personally I do not like Darjeeling as it does not suit my health very well—but from the point of view of Government that I have found since I came into Government that we really do and finish more work up in Darjeeling than down here, specially after a strenuous session of the Bengal Council in Calcutta. And what is more. It must not be forgotten that visitors to Darjeeling, when they go up there for the Puja vacation, if they have eyes—and I think some of them have—must have noticed that even during the Puja holidays many of the Secretaries as well as the Members are not idle and do not while away their time with mere pastimes; but during the holidays they have to do a good deal of work and carry through and finish it. I do not think that the temptations of ice, fans or typewriters or telephones in Calcutta are of such a nature as would draw the sympathy of the members of this Council, when I tell you, gentlemen, that in September, 1919, when I was coming back from Darjeeling, I happened to spend a few days at Kurseong and, early one morning, when I was having a walk, whom should I meet, but the advocate of ice and fans and typewriters and telephones, the mover of this resolution, Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, enjoying a holiday at Kurseong. He told me he was very glad to get away from the heat of this place to the enjoyable climate of the hills. Well, gentlemen, you will admit that what is sauce for the goose can also be sauce for the gander. You must also admit that as human beings we do require a certain amount of relaxation, although I tell you that as a Member of Government and ever since I accepted Lord Ronaldshay's kind invitation to take up the work when Lord Sinha made his way to England for the Imperial Conference I have not had really and honestly a day's rest, for even when I took over charge from Lord Sinha for the second time I took it over in a bed of sickness after a very severe operation and at a time when I was forbidden by doctors to do any work, and my old Secretary, Mr. O'Malley, will bear testimony to this fact. It is therefore quite clear that because some of us happen to go up to Darjeeling for certain parts of the year we do not go there and enjoy holidays.

As regards Lord Carmichael's statement to the Commissioners of the Darjeeling Municipality, I am sorry that Sir Henry did not explain that. When did he make it—in the last year of office: and why did he do so? Well, I do not wish to belittle a Governor, but I would say these utterances may have had a significance of their own to him, but could not possibly be said to apply to the Government as a whole or present or future Governors. Further, you must now make up your mind about another thing. Many of you, rightly or wrongly, have discarded the old form of heads of Government—the Lieutenant-Governors—who were members of the Indian Civil Service. You have now accepted the principle of getting out Governors from England. There is no guarantee that you will get an agreeable Scotchman evidently much after the heart of Mr. Campbell Forrester like Lord Carmichael. Mr. Campbell Forrester forgets that burra sahibs take their holidays and can go on leave without having to put in a substitute or resign his post as is done when a Member of Government goes on sick leave. When you have accepted the principle that Governors should come out from England, it is no good trying to hold up to them that the climate of Calcutta is suitable to their temperament or to their health all the year round. You would do well to remember that you will not always get a man like Lord Carmichael nor will you get a man like your present Governor, and therefore it is essential, specially when under the Reforms Schemes so much responsibility has been put on the shoulders of the Governor, that he should have some time during the year to divide between leisure and work under better conditions than prevail in Calcutta during the rains or autumn. Now if you once admit this fact, you must also look into the question of the present constitution of the Government. It is true that many orders are issued in the name of the Governor in Council, for the Governor cannot himself issue the orders and most of the orders emanate from the heads of departments, but in most cases these orders emanate after His Excellency has decided upon the course of action in consultation with his Members of Council and in future with his Ministers as well. That being so, and as Sir Henry Wheeler has very justly pointed out that you must allow the Governor a free discretion as to when or where he will require the services of the Members of the Council and Ministers, you must allow him a free hand also, specially when you cannot stop the Governor going up to Darjeeling. What I ask you, gentlemen, is this. Sir Henry Wheeler has given you the figures. I can well understand, in view of the present financial position of this presidency, the condition of your mind regarding the financial position generally. But I would personally, if I were not among the Government to-day, deprecate and strongly deprecate doing away with this move, and what is further, I would like you all to remember this, that if you want the Secretariat, the Members of Council or the Governor to do the work for you to the best of their abilities, when you know that in the Government there is that element to whom the climatic conditions are trying at times—when you know that among the Members of Government there are men to whom this climate is not so suitable as it may be to those of us belonging to the land—you ought to be a little more catholic and you ought to be a little more charitable in bringing this question up before this Council. I cannot help thinking that with the exception of some of the references made to the 1886 debate, that the views that have been adduced have been very uncharitable, and I appeal to the good sense of this Council, in view of what Sir Henry Wheeler has said, not to accept the resolution that has been moved by Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, and I also hope that the mover of the resolution himself will, after the assurance that has been given by Sir Henry Wheeler, not press for his resolution.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I had the honour of moving this resolution in the Dacca meeting in 1917. That resolution was lost because the number of non-official members present there was small. Dacca was not the proper battle-ground for such a resolution as this. We hope to have a better fate to-day. Well, I may tell you that probably it was in February or March, 1917, that I wanted to move a resolution for the constitution of a committee to inquire into the expenses of the Darjeeling exodus. That resolution was not admitted. I said, however, all that I wanted to say with reference to this matter in my budget speech of 1917; but it was a cry in the wilderness, no answer came from the official side. It is necessary that I should go into some details in order that the members present here may have some idea about the annual expenditure of this annual exodus. You will probably be surprised to hear that while during the administration of Sir Stuart Bayley during the year 1889-90 the expenditure was Rs. 29,786 and Rs. 29,780, the expenditure during the year 1907-08 was over a lakh of rupees; that was during the administration of Sir Andrew Fraser. Well, in 1913 the expenditure was Rs. 96,568, in 1915 it was Rs. 91,843; but for some reason or other the expenditure in 1914 was Rs. 68,749. But again it rose up, and it was I think in 1915-16 that the expenditure rose to Rs. 91,000. So again from Rs. 68,000 the figure has gone up to Rs. 91,000.

Our esteemed friend, Mr. Forrester, has already quoted the reply of Lord Carmichael to the address of the Darjeeling Municipality. Well, I also quoted that reply in my speech at Dacca, and you perhaps all know what he said. He said: "I am afraid I cannot agree with those who profess to think that far more work is done in the hills than in the plains. In Bengal at any rate that is certainly not the case. When dealing with those files, from which there is never any escape, I have often wished that Darjeeling was nearer Calcutta so that I might have got the information I needed quickly, but I was pleased to move for my own enjoyment and for the sake of my health, though I know that if I had been in the plains I could have done more work. I know too that many of my friends, especially those who seem to me to work hardest, think the same thing, and I cannot see why we should not say so."

This was the reply of the head of a province to the address of the Darjeeling Municipality. The reply was given on the 1st November, 1916. Now the official version is that the nature of the work that is done at Darjeeling requires that we should work in a hill station to do the work efficiently, as if all the other work that is done in the plains is not done efficiently. I see Mr. Donald there: he was in the Secretariat for a very long time and used to go up to Darjeeling during the summer with Government. There has not been any lack of efficiency in the administration of the Calcutta Corporation now that he is in Calcutta and not at Darjeeling. It is curious to see one of my Indian friends, who was Personal Assistant to the Commissioner of the Presidency Division, Mr. Lang, also going up there. As soon as he was posted in the Secretariat he thinks it necessary to go up to Darjeeling and spend his time there—why, nobody knows. The leading Anglo-Indian paper, the Englishman, said some time ago that the annual migration was a waste of money. Well, I think every word of it is bitterly true. We have got before us the merchant princes of Calcutta. I think their work is as much responsible work and they have to do work as efficiently as any members of the Indian Civil Service in the hills. Then there is another question, and it is this: the members of the Indian Civil Service, when they are District and Sessions Judges, have to do their work in the plains. I think when a District Judge tries a case of murder or has to distinguish a case of murder from a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, he has to think about the case as much as any Secretary or Chief Secretary has to think in the hills of Darjeeling whether this Deputy Magistrate is to be transferred to Noakhali or to Tippera. So I think the grounds on which the Secretariat and the heads of departments go to Darjeeling are not at all tenable, at least in these days when we have got the electric fans and other amenities in Calcutta. Mr. Bompas is trying to make Calcutta as beautiful as he possibly can.

Then, I understand that the heads of departments have not rented any house at Darjeeling for the next season. Whether that is gup or that is true I do not know, but that is what I have heard. That is probably in anticipation of the feeling of the people that the high officials should not go to Darjeeling. My friend, Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, has told us that in a meeting of 1886 protesting against the exodus to the hills Mr. George Yule, who was then in Calcutta, took a leading part. I was with his estimable nephew, Sir David Yule, only in the month of December, and what he told me was this: "I have been in Calcutta for the last 40 years; I know Calcutta and I know Bombay, I do not know any other place. Whenever I go away from Calcutta, I go to England and nowhere else." Though Darjeeling is within 18 hours' journey from Calcutta he had never been there.

There is another question, a constitutional question, which I do not know if I shall be justified in placing before this House, and it is this. You must all know that Darjeeling has practically been treated under the Reforms Scheme as a backward province, so that for four months in the year you want to go to a backward province in order that you may spend the rest of your time at a place where the Reforms Scheme is in full swing. I find in the 9th despatch on the Constitutional Reforms the following:—

"No legislation should be enacted, no question should be asked, and no resolution should be moved, affecting such area in the Legislative Council.

"The administration of such areas as regards both reserved and transferred subjects should be carried on either by the Governor, as proposed in the report, or, as we ourselves should prefer, by the Governor in Council.

"Budget provision for the administration should be made separately and should not be subjected to the scrutiny of the Legislative Council."

Again, we have in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary of Monday, the 3rd January, 1921, the following:—

“ The Governor-General in Council is pleased to authorise the Governor of Bengal in Council to direct that any Act of the local legislature of Bengal shall not apply to the said territories or any part thereof, or shall apply thereto, subject to such exceptions or modifications as the Governor may think fit.

“ The provisions of the said Act which require proposals for expenditure by the Governor-General in Council and by the local Government of Bengal, to be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly and of the Legislative Council of the Governor of Bengal, respectively, shall not apply to proposals for expenditure in these territories ”

So we have got no jurisdiction over Darjeeling or over the amount that will be spent on it. Even if the Executive Councillors go there, I do not think the Ministers should go.

I may say in conclusion that we have no objection to His Excellency the Governor, with one or two of his personal staff going there for a month or two in the year, or if necessary, sending for one or other Member of the Executive Council, when necessary or sending for a Secretary, but to take away all the officers, including the ministerial officers and heads of departments and dislocate business in Calcutta is something which cannot commend itself to me nor, I think, to the House

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: This resolution, which has been moved by my friend Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, has my whole-hearted support. I was rather disappointed (though I listened with rapt attention) with the two speeches made by the two Members of the Executive Council, and the net impression that the two speeches left in my mind was that they were at very great pains to defend a very weak case. I do not see any reason why it should be assumed that the members of this House take it for granted that the Members of Government who migrate to Darjeeling do it purely for the sake of pleasure. I do not think that anybody or any member of this House ever entertained any such idea. We base our whole case on public grounds. We do not for a moment say that Members of Government who migrate to Darjeeling do no work; on the other hand we say, with all the emphasis we can command, that they do work there, but the question from our point of view is that of economy in the long run and of efficiency. We think greater efficiency is secured when the high officials are living in vital contact with public opinion in Calcutta. If, for the sake of health, any holiday is needed, no one will grudge. But barring health reasons we would like to see our official Members and our Ministers living in close touch with us.

I say it for health reasons any member is perfectly justified to take a holiday. But from the point of view of efficiency we think that it would tend to greater efficiency if we have the Government in our midst all throughout the year. I do not believe for a moment that all the people who are forced to migrate to Darjeeling because of this official migration much appreciate their stay in Darjeeling. Very many of them complain and complain bitterly of it, and therefore on principle of the greatest good to the greatest number we would like to see Government located here. As most of the ground has already been covered by other speakers, I do not wish to waste the time of the Council by a long speech.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: This is one of the re-renchment resolutions that are before us and it embodies in principle a reform which has long been overdue. The annual migration to the hills has been the subject of perennial complaint by the Indian public, and reference has been made by the mover of this resolution to a meeting or demonstration that was held in this historic hall. I was present at that demonstration. It was an unique demonstration engineered, not by the professional agitators, as my friend suggests, but got up by the entire non-official community of Calcutta—the merchant princes, the zamindars and leading men. I remember the vigorous speech that was delivered by Mr. Evans-Pugh, whose voice is still ringing in my ears, against the exodus of the Government of India to Simla. He said that lakhs of rupees had been spent in building a house for the accommodation of the Viceroy. What use would the pillars of that house in Simla come to, if Simla was given up as a second capital? I remember that Mr. Evans-Pugh said that if the house could not be put to any other use it could be used as an asylum for incurable lunatics. This resolution is not concerned with the exodus to Simla, as we are only concerned with the exodus to Darjeeling. But the arguments are the same and our position in this Council, as an organ of public opinion, demands that we should see that money is not unnecessarily spent in migrations to the hills, though we do not grudge the Europeans going to the hills to recruit their health, to cool their brains and to get away from the heat. My friend, Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, said yesterday that it was for efficiency of work that the officers go to the hills. Many things are done in the name of efficiency. I do not think that Government will lose its efficiency if it does not go to Darjeeling, although it may be true that the Executive Councillors who repair to Darjeeling get much refreshed and can on their return work like giants. There are many people—High Court Judges, merchant princes, busy lawyers—who remain in Calcutta and do their work quite efficiently. But without Darjeeling this Government would also have worked very efficiently in the plains. By the move to Darjeeling the Government loses touch with the people. As for the Ministers who are the representatives of the people, I do not think they ought to lose touch with the people: they should not go to Darjeeling. His Excellency the Governor, as he is not to attend the Council, may go; the Executive Councillors may also take holiday trip but at their own expense, as the money that is spent in this move is not an inconsiderable amount. If the move of the Governor and the Executive Councillors also involves the move of the Ministers to Darjeeling, I am afraid it would be doing some violence to the constitution which has been so recently vouchsafed to us.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: The move to Darjeeling is open to serious objection. We find that the High Court Judges, merchants and other high officials do their work quite efficiently so this fetish of efficiency reduces itself almost to nothing.

The question of economy has also got to be considered. In my opinion we should practice the strictest economy. I supported the resolution of my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, on this subject in the old Council, but it was not carried. I have again an opportunity of speaking on this proposal and hope and trust that the Council will carefully consider the reasons that have been put forward.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: The resolution has my fullest sympathy, but in fairness to the European gentlemen I must say that the expenditure on the exodus to Darjeeling has not been quite wasted. Darjeeling has been made what it is by the Governor and the officials going there, it is now a paying concern, and I believe that the cost of the exodus has been fully covered by the great expansion of trade and by the income of Darjeeling and its neighbourhood. But that does not justify the continuance of this expenditure on the exodus. I can fully appreciate the argument that the Governor and these high officials should be allowed to go to Darjeeling because if they do not go, Darjeeling will fall into disrepute and there will be loss to our revenue, but I do not understand why the expenditure on the exodus should be paid by the Bengal tax-payers. The Governor gets Rs. 1,20,000, and each Member of the Executive Council Rs. 64,000 a year, and they can certainly spend a little amount on the trip to Darjeeling. I may mention here that such high salaries are not given anywhere else in the world, so these high officials should bear the cost of their sojourn to the hills. I say with confidence that the people of Bengal are losing the sympathy of their Governors, else the latter would not throw the burden of this expenditure on the people. I do suggest that the Governor alone should go to Darjeeling and the expenditure for the move must be borne by him.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: Although I am a new recruit in this Government, the question before the House is quite familiar to me as it is to everyone who reads newspapers. The question that has been raised by the mover of the resolution is a very old one, it takes us back at least to 1886. The hon'ble member quoted from the speech of one of the great merchants of Calcutta a passage which contained formidable forebodings as to what would happen to the country if this so-called exodus was continued for a long time. Gentlemen, the time that has elapsed since then has furnished a complete answer to these forebodings. The so-called exodus to Darjeeling, I think the House will agree, has not, in fact, in any way affected the progress of the country, or the efficiency of the Government during all these years. It has also been said, "Look at the Judges of the High Court, they carry on their duties in the plains in Calcutta during the summer, and they carry on their duties undoubtedly most efficiently," but they forget that the Judges of the High Court enjoy a recess which is not granted to the Members of the Government. A recess of 2½ months is a very valuable time in which hard-worked officials, such as Judges, can recruit their health. Sir, I have just left the High Court of another province and I can assure the House that all Judges feel that were it not for the recess which they enjoy, they would not be able to carry on their duties to their own satisfaction or to the satisfaction of the country. Now, it was conceded, very generously conceded by several hon'ble members, that if Members of the Government or heads of departments and Secretaries wanted a change to the hills on reasons of health, they would not mind their having some recess or respite in some other form. But so far at least as the Members of the Executive Council and the Ministers are concerned, there is no such thing as privilege leave or a recess. As the hon'ble members have been told by Sir Henry Wheeler the Members of the Executive Council can get leave for a certain time only if they have actually broken down in health. But those who have to carry on the administration in Calcutta necessarily require, as we have been told by an hon'ble member who is a doctor of experience, some change of climate and conditions. A great deal has been made of the argument of economy. Since yesterday I have been hearing this argument on all sorts of occasions, but, Sir, I venture to suggest to the Council that it is possible, even in a poor country like this, to exaggerate arguments based on economy. There is true economy and there is false economy, and I suggest to the House that the proposal under consideration is not based on sound considerations of economy. In the first place what happens now is, in my opinion, rather inaccurately called "exodus." There is really no such thing as "exodus" of the Government to the hills, a good portion of the machinery of the Government stays on in Calcutta to carry on the administration, only the Governor and the Members of the Executive Council with their Secretaries and a sufficient clerical staff from the Secretariat go to the hills. The cost of all that, as you have been told by Sir Henry Wheeler, is Rs. 46,000 a year, and I do not think that you ought to grudge this cost, if it be necessary, as undoubtedly it is in my opinion, for the efficient conduct of public business. I am not unfamiliar with the climate of Calcutta. I lived here for many years ago till I went away to another province, and no one can deny that for some portion of the year it is most difficult to carry on one's work in Calcutta. It is for this reason—especially that the High Court of Calcutta takes a recess of 10 weeks during the rains. In the hot season also the conditions are not very agreeable and certainly do not conduce to efficiency in discharge of official business. But, Sir, I can assure the House, and I may confidently in this connection speak on behalf of my colleagues as well, that if it were really necessary for the proper discharge of our duties to suffer all the inconveniences and discomforts of the plains during the hot months, we should all most gladly sacrifice our personal comfort and convenience in the interests of public business. It is said that during the time the Members of the Government are not in Calcutta, they lose touch with public opinion. Now, when the Council is sitting, the Members of the Government do not get away from Calcutta, as they have to be here in order to carry on the business of the Council. It is only when the Council is not sitting, and there is no legislative business to attend to, that the Executive Members of the Council go to Darjeeling. I am perfectly familiar with Darjeeling; whenever I have been there I have met many of my friends of Calcutta; they find it quite necessary for purposes of health to get away to Darjeeling for some time, and I believe Darjeeling is becoming in fact so overcrowded that it is very difficult nowadays to find accommodation there. It may happen sometimes that some Members of the Government may be required in Calcutta to deal with an emergency, on these occasions you may be absolutely sure that those Members of the Executive Council whose presence in Calcutta would be useful would always come down without hesitation. There is not the least difficulty in their doing so. It seems to me that there is really no particular necessity for all the Members of the Government to remain in Calcutta throughout the year. Further, as has been pointed out by Sir Henry Wheeler, there are practical difficulties in the way of the proposal being accepted. The Governor must go to Darjeeling for some portion of the year, and he must have the opportunity of consulting the Members of the Executive Council and also the Ministers from time to time. Sir Henry Wheeler has told the members what modifications the Government are prepared to make in this matter and I beg the Council to consider whether the concessions will not more than sufficiently meet the requirements of the case.

Mr. H. BARTON: We have heard a good deal as to the real causes underlying the change to Darjeeling. Somehow it appears to me that much of this is more from prejudice than a true knowledge of the facts. We have been told that this question is to be considered from the standpoint of finance, and I am glad that the mover of the resolution has changed the resolution in this respect, because it rids the discussion of any party feeling and brings us down to a fair consideration of the case. When we say fairness, we say fairness with due consideration of all the facts, consideration as affecting the claims of this Council and the people on the one hand, and the consideration of the claims of the workers on the other; and those whom we are discussing to-day constitute the workers. It does not need much to convince this Council that this is an age in which the claims of the workers come first. We find that a great deal of capital is being made of what the late Governor, Lord Carmichael, had to say on the question of work in Darjeeling and work on the plains. Without any desire to be disrespectful to our late Governor, I need only say that it is a very peculiar position for any Governor to have taken up, making an admission on the one hand that it was unnecessary, and yet, on the other hand, allowing his Ministers to do it year in and year out. Whether we are prepared to be moved by an opinion such as this, and whether we are prepared to accept that opinion as an honest one, is, I beg to say, a very different question.

We are asked by the mover of the resolution to believe that the living conditions in Calcutta have so considerably improved to-day as to give it the first place in India for comfort and health even during the hottest season of the year. Apart from the official members who have a change to Darjeeling, may I ask you to collect statistics from the Darjeeling-Himalayan Railway of the thousands of people who run away from Calcutta to Darjeeling? You will find that during recent years, a considerably larger number of Indian gentlemen have found it necessary to rush away from the heat of Calcutta to Darjeeling. What I consider one of the strongest evidences against this statement is the hill schools in Darjeeling. If Calcutta afforded all the facilities, if living conditions were as we are asked to believe they are, may I ask you why so many parents consider it far better to send their children to hill schools in Darjeeling and other hill stations, regardless of the fact that maintenance in hill schools means a considerably larger expense than it would be in Calcutta or the plains? These children have to be built up physically, then health has to be considered, and it is well known that many parents, although they are poorly paid, are prepared to sacrifice a great deal in order that they might find the necessary amount of money to meet the extra expense of sending their children to hill schools. We are asked to look at various figures put up by one of the members, and we are asked to look upon these figures as something appalling, something like a wastage of good money. Don't you think this money well spent in keeping those who are working for this Council in good health? There is a considerable amount of enhanced work as a result of the Reforms, is it too much to lay out this amount of money in keeping those who are to do this greater amount of work in good health and in a fit condition to do that work?

One gentleman pointed out that he preferred Bombay to Calcutta, as the best place in India, and when he wanted a change he went home to England. Would you have your officials changed on every occasion when they go away for relaxation or rest, and thus be unable to have a sitting of Council for lack of officers as a result of this continuous change? I do not think this argument carries any weight at all. What I wish to say is that we are asked to deny to the workers a consideration which every employer of labour equally extends to his employees. They realise the fact that their workers need a change if they are to do their work well. We all realise the fact that a few days' change in the hills recoups one to a considerable extent. I myself take a 10 days' change to Darjeeling every year, and return to my work and do it much better. All I wish to ask this Council is to consider the question from the standpoint of finance, as the mover of the resolution has asked us to do, and not to be guilty of supporting a resolution which will mark us as being a body of men unsympathetic and unreasonable and hard-hearted. I oppose the resolution.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I rise to support the resolution. A large number of members have supported the resolution. I have heard the last hon'ble speaker say that a change is wanted because change recruits health. But one thing which I cannot follow is this: well, this principle rather applies to an individual; does it apply to the Government collectively too? Last evening we heard from an hon'ble member that our Government practically consisted of the best brains. So our best brains also require change and relaxation and they must go to the hills every year at the expense of the poor people. We have come here to voice the sufferings of the poor children of the soil who are outside the Council hall, who are ill-fed—I should say who are hungry and are the victims of many diseases. Those people deserve every help. But the Government officials, who are paid princes' salaries, think that after a certain amount of work—I must admit that the work is supposed to be onerous—they require relaxation at the expense of these poor people. Well, if you find that you cannot do any work in the plains, you are welcome to take leave. But is it not curious, so far as our Government is concerned, that for four months without any break we shall have to go on without it? I have heard it said and read in several books that Government exists for the people, but to me it appears that we people exist for the Government. Unless and until this system of exodus to Darjeeling is given up, I believe the latter alternative will be more applicable to us. This system of Government ought not to be tolerated any more. Is it not a fact that because we have not got sufficient voice and authority in our Government that these English people and English Governors are to be brought out from Home? And therefore we have to allow this Government to go out from our touch. If that is our position, I bow down before that; but if we are to really meet on equal terms, then why these best brains have been collected at the head of the Government and are paid princes' salaries when they cannot put up with the climate in the plains, I really cannot follow. In any case, if any individual is a little exhausted, let him go on leave. The Government which is really being controlled by all these gentlemen will, it is natural, find it convenient to make provision for the exodus.

With these few words, I beg to support the resolution.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: I will not detain the House long on this point, but just say a few words on this resolution. I do not think I have the boldness to question Lord Carmichael's opinion in this matter, and no one, I think, before Mr. Barton has ever questioned it. I beg to say that what Lord Carmichael said gave expression to his honest convictions; and if he admitted the strength of the protest and a good part of the case against the annual exodus, I think Sir Henry Wheeler has given the rest of the case away. He says, in reply to the very forcible argument, forcible, of course, from the point of view of the non-official members, that Government by going to Darjeeling do not lose touch with public opinion here, if that is so, I do not understand why he thinks that His Excellency will lose touch with the Executive Council if he goes up alone. That is one point.

Another point of which Sir Henry Wheeler makes much is that the expenditure on the exodus has decreased, and if it has been decreasing, why should we make any noise over it? Under the Reforms the Members of the Government have increased, so necessarily expenditure will increase.

My third point is that under the Reforms the case against the exodus has acquired greater strength. Under the Reforms the volume of work will increase and we shall have to sit during the summer, and hence my point is that the work of the Legislative Council will surely suffer if the exodus continues as before. Now that we have a whole-time President and the Governor will not be required to preside over the Legislative Council, he may very well go to Darjeeling, but the Legislative Council work can be carried on here during the summer if only the other Members of the Government resist the temptation of going to Darjeeling.

Colonel A. J. PUCH: I am going to suggest that we should vote against this resolution on one ground, and that is on the ground of economy. I suggest to you that it will be false economy to vote in favour of this resolution, and my reason for saying so is this. We have listened to all the speeches that have been made both by official and non-official members explaining the exodus. Most of you are under the impression that it costs several lakhs of rupees for this annual exodus every year; we have been told that it only costs about half a lakh of rupees. It has been suggested that because the commercial men of Calcutta are able to stay down here and do their work, therefore the Members of the Government should also stay down here and do their work, but you have forgotten this fact, that several or most of the commercial men after, say three years' hard work, get at least eight months or more away in England, apart from an occasional rest up in the hills, whenever they want it. If you are going to place your Members of Council on the same footing, you will probably have to allow two of the Members and Ministers to go away every year. That, I take it, will cost you more than Rs. 50,000 if you have to pay every member his salary while he is on leave. Therefore you will have very heavy bills running up while they are away on six months' leave, whereas if you keep them here they will work for 12 months in every year; therefore, though you think differently, you will find that it is really false economy to support this resolution. We have been told about the Chairman of the Corporation. I have been in the Corporation for several years and the Chairman, whoever he may be, has frequently been away on leave. You have also been referring to the healthy and fresh appearance of Mr. Bompas, but Mr. Bompas has just returned from long leave in England.

The Hon'ble Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan, even before he was a Member of Council, used to spend a considerable portion of the year, for the recruitment of his health, at Darjeeling, where he has got a house. I believe that the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee would never have been willing to undertake his work as a Minister, if he were not to spend a considerable portion of the year at Darjeeling or Simultala; and it is obvious that the Government cannot go to Simultala, so they must go to Darjeeling.

There is another point with which we all agree, and that is, that the Governor must go to Darjeeling every year. Well, if he goes to Darjeeling and if he does not have any of the Secretaries, Members or Ministers with him, what is he to do there? Will he simply go there to view the snows and not to carry on any work? Under these circumstances, I appeal to you to take this matter into your very serious consideration and judge whether the balance of convenience and the balance of economy is not in favour of voting against this resolution. There are disadvantages. I quite recognise that as well as anybody else. As a matter of fact, when we had the last elections, it caused us the greatest inconvenience, as the officer in charge of the preparation of the rolls was in Darjeeling; and these electoral rolls had to be sent to Darjeeling and nobody knew when they would be received back in Calcutta. As a matter of fact, if we weigh the disadvantages against the advantages, I think we shall find that on the ground of economy or on the ground of general efficiency, we should vote against this resolution.

Babu JOCENDRA NATH ROY: I have pleasure in supporting this resolution. The annual exodus to the hills has always been considered by the people of India to be a costly luxury in which we cannot indulge. The founders of the British Empire in India knew no Simla or Darjeeling or Mussoorie and worked hard in the plains to consolidate an empire which is the envy of the world. It has been urged in defence of the annual exodus that more work is done in the hills than in the plains. But Lord Carmichael exploded this theory, when, in reply to an address presented by the Darjeeling Municipality, he said: "I am afraid I cannot agree with those who profess to think that far more work is done in the hills than in the plains. In Bengal, at any rate, that is certainly not the case. When dealing with these files, from which there is never any escape, I have often wished that Darjeeling were nearer Calcutta so that I might have got the information I needed quickly. I was pleased to move for my enjoyment and for the sake of my health, though I know that if I had been in the plains, I could have done more work. I know, too, that many of my friends, especially, those who seem to me to work hardest, think the same thing, and I cannot see why we should not say so."

If a Governor or a Member of the Executive Council wants to move to the hills for his enjoyment or for the purpose of his health, let him do so, but there is no justification for asking the poor people to pay for it.

Under the circumstances, I see no reason why the annual exodus to the hills should not be discontinued and the money spent on it devoted to useful purposes.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: There is no doubt that Darjeeling is a sanitarium and we must take into consideration the fact that, if the high officials remain a few months in Darjeeling in order to recruit their health and also to get sufficient stamina to cope with the arduous duties which they have to perform, it is a matter which the Council ought to take into consideration. I beg to submit that we must take the whole Council together, the high officials as well as ourselves. The officials are men of temperate climate and it is a consideration which the Council ought to show to people who come from a temperate climate, and Darjeeling has such a climate. That a stay in Darjeeling gives a greater fund of energy to people is known to all of us; and many of us go to Darjeeling to recruit our health. Therefore, I think that when it is a question of expense we consider that expenses should be limited to a minimum which we can afford. That ought to be the main consideration, when the Budget will come up for our consideration; but to say that because we can work in the plains, therefore every one ought to work in the plains, is, I think, a very fallacious argument. Then you see that the Judges of the High Courts have three months in the year for their recess and they go to some temperate regions in order to recruit their health, and they come back refreshed. That is the consideration, I submit, before the Council, and therefore on that ground I want to oppose the resolution moved by Babu Surendra Nath Mullick. But at the same time, as retrenchment is desirable, we ought to cut down the expenses as much as possible.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I beg that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT called upon Babu Surendra Nath Mullick to reply.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I shall be very brief in my reply. In our younger days an eminent Professor Dr. Hoernle—taught us a logical formula, and I shall apply that logical formula to the circumstances of this case. According to that logical formula, all men are liable to make mistakes when judging of things against their own interests. Sir Henry Wheeler is a man, and so he is liable to make such mistakes. All that he has said is nothing new and the sum total of all that he has said is that they want the cool salubrity of the hills. It is an old old argument which has always been urged on previous occasions and it has been considered long long ago and found to be quite invalid.

The Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan has told us that he found me last year at Kurseong taking a "change;" and that what is sauce for the gander is sauce for the goose. Here is a logical fallacy of the "undistributed middle." When I went to Kurseong, where I met the Hon'ble Maharaja, I went there at my own expense and sacrificing my own income, and that makes a world of difference to the situation under review.

Then, as regards Colonel Pugh's argument that the general efficiency of the administration does not suffer, I compare his own opinion with the opinion expressed by his late lamented and respected father, and I gladly accept the opinion of his father in preference to his, as the former is by far the more sensible one. That is all I have to say in my reply.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: To judge by the speeches that have been made in favour of this resolution since I last spoke it seems to me that I must have entirely failed to make clear to the Council what the position of Government in this matter is. We have just been told by Babu Surendra Nath Mullick that I have said nothing new, and we have been repeatedly told by other speakers that we are clinging to the old position in respect of this exodus, regardless of public criticism. What are the facts? May I reiterate our position? We start from the position that it is unreasonable to ask the Governor to spend the whole year in the plains. Assuming that the Governor goes for some months in a year to the hills, we contend that it is absolutely necessary that he should have a free hand in keeping himself in touch with his Members and Ministers. It follows that the maintenance of that touch may, and will, result in Members and Ministers, either individually or collectively, as also Secretaries and Heads of Departments, being for some periods of the year absent from Calcutta. But it is the intention of Government to discontinue the system under which the Secretariat moves as a whole on particular dates from Calcutta, returning to Calcutta on particular dates, and to work the system which I have outlined with the utmost regard to economy and with a view to the curtailment of the period for which the officials concerned are absent from Calcutta. That is a material change in past practice, made solely in deference to the public opinion that has been voiced on various occasions in respect of this matter. That system will not be within the four corners of the resolution and for that reason we are bound to oppose it. But even if the resolution were rejected it is that system which we propose to follow during the ensuing year, with the probable result that money will be saved in comparison with the past, and that the total absence of officials from Calcutta will be materially curtailed.

The motion being put, a division was taken, with the following result:—

Adjournment.

The PRESIDENT: His Excellency the Governor having accepted Mr. Watson-Smyth's resolution, this Council stands adjourned 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council assembled at 3 P.M. on the 9th February, 1921, in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present :

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 116 nominated and elected members.

THE PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! I have pleasure in announcing that I have received a telegram from His Excellency the Governor approving, under section 72C (2) of the Government of India Act, the election of Babu Surendra Nath Ray as Deputy-President of the Bengal Legislative Council. I also take this opportunity of making the following announcement —

“ In accordance with the provisions of rule 3 of the Bengal Legislative Council Rules, 1920, I have nominated the following members of the Council to form a panel of four Chairmen, namely :—

Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri,
Mr R. M. Watson-Smyth,
Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, and
Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq

Unless otherwise arranged, the senior member among them present in the above order will preside over the deliberations of the Council in the absence of the President and the Deputy-President ”

THE PRESIDENT: With the consent of those in whose names the resolutions stand, I would ask Babu Surendra Nath Ray to move his resolution first.

Financial position of Bengal.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: “ This Council recommends to the Government that the Government of India be approached immediately with the request that early effect be given to the following recommendation contained in the Second Report of the Parliamentary Joint Select Committee, et c. : ‘ The Committee desire to add their recognition of the peculiar financial difficulties of the Presidency of Bengal, which they accordingly commend to the special consideration of the Government of India.’ ”

Everyone is aware that the introduction of the Reforms has brought about a complete change in the financial relations between the Central and Provincial Governments. Under the law, as it existed before, all revenues raised in any province from whatever sources it might have been raised belonged to the Government of India and the local Governments got what they were allowed by the Supreme Government. This division of revenue was known as the financial settlement, which in some provinces was settled for periods of five years and in others for lesser periods. This division was at the absolute discretion of the Government of India and every province was allowed so much money only as was supposed in the opinion of the Government of India to be its due. The result showed that there had been great inequalities in the revenues distributed by the Government of India. This would appear from the actual expenditure per head of population which each province was allowed to incur. The figures are for 1917-18.—Bombay, Rs. 5; Madras, Rs. 2-2; United Provinces, Re. 1-15; Bengal, Re. 1-10; Punjab Rs. 3; Burma, Rs. 5-3. The figures of the amount of tax raised in each province per head of population will be interesting; the figures are for the year 1919-20:—Bengal, Rs. 6-14; Madras, Rs. 4-13; United Provinces, Rs. 2-14-6; Bombay, Rs. 13-12. With the first discussions of the Reforms proposals it was inevitable that this system should go, and that each province should be made independent in the matter of finance. With this purpose in view certain proposals were made in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, Chapter VIII, by which certain heads of revenue, e.g., Land Revenue, Irrigation and Excise, were proposed to be made wholly provincial, and certain other heads, e.g., Customs and Income-tax, as Imperial. To meet the deficit in the Budget of the Government of India it was proposed that every province should pay to the Government of India 87 per cent. of the additional revenue which it got under the rearrangement. The distribution of the sources of income was so made that some provinces, e.g., Madras, the United Provinces and the Punjab, which may be described as the lesser taxed provinces but the income of which was derived mainly from agricultural sources, got enormous advantage over the heavier taxed provinces, e.g., Bengal and Bombay. After this distribution is made it is further remarked that Madras and the United Provinces would be paying a disproportionately larger amount of this income to the Supreme Government. Nothing is practically said about the equity of the principle of distribution, but it is assumed that it would be very unfair to the United Provinces and Madras but cannot be to Bengal, and that Bengal had no right to complain because for administrative reasons it was found necessary to permanently settle the land revenue there.

We have no information as to how the joint authors of the report came to this conclusion and whether this was done after full consultation with the local Governments concerned. I have some time ago given notice of a resolution to be moved in this Council, asking the local Government to publish all the correspondence between this Government and the Government of India on the subject, and these, when published, will enlighten the Council on the point. The fact stands, however, that in the financial adjustment proposed, Bengal, which previously had been flowed to expend least, with the consequence that measures to ameliorate the condition of the people have been systematically starved, was flowed not only absolutely the least additional income but also the least expansive revenue, with the inevitable prospect of fresh taxation from the start of the new régime. The proposals made in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report were not approved of by the Joint Select Committee of Parliament on the Government of India Bill, which directed that a specially qualified Commission should be appointed to advise as to the principle and which contributions from the Provincial Governments to the Central Government should in future be adjusted. Before this Commission, known as the Meston Committee, the Finance Committee of the Council proposed that the share of the Government of India in Land Revenue should remain as it was, with the responsibility of that Government regarding famine relief, that duties on exports and revenue from non-judicial stamps be made provincial sources, and that half of the income from income-tax in any particular province should also be made provincial and that the deficit in the Government of India was to be met by proportionate contribution from each province.

The proposals of the Meston Committee practically endorsed the distribution of revenues proposed in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report except that "Non-judicial Stamps" was made provincial. The report also proposed a new proportion regarding the contribution to be paid by each local Government to the Central Government. By this new proposal Bengal, which was most adversely affected by the new adjustment and had to begin with a deficit, was to pay permanently the largest share of the deficit in the income of the Government of India, that is, 19/90, while the provinces which got the most advantage, that is, Madras and the United Provinces, were to pay proportionately a lesser amount, that is, Madras 17/90, United Provinces 18/90, Punjab 9/90. When the proposals of the Committee were published, the Finance Committee of the Council lodged a protest against them, copies of which were also sent to England for circulation among members of the Parliamentary Select Committee. The late Council also passed the following resolutions on the subject:—

- “(1) That this Council is of opinion that the reasons assigned by Lord Meston’s Committee for accepting the principle of division of existing heads of revenue as between the Provincial and the Imperial Governments laid down in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report are not convincing and not based on equity, and
- (2) that this Council urges—
 - (a) that as the basis of division the whole of the total amount of all taxation, including Customs and Income-tax, raised in any particular province should for the present be made provincial, and

- (ii) that in case of doubt as to the proper apportionment of any source of taxation in future, e.g., Customs, steps be taken for ascertaining the facts so that they may be placed before the first Statutory Commission.
- (iii) This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that immediate steps be taken to telegraph to the Government of India, the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India and the Joint Select Committee of Parliament that this Council places on record its protest against the proposed sliding scale of contributions imposing a contribution of 19 per cent of the total deficit of the Government of India in the seventh year, so far as it affects Bengal,—
 - (a) as being opposed to the considerations laid down in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report for maintaining a uniform scale of contributions pending its revision by the Statutory Commission, and
 - (b) the amount being higher than the amount which should be levied from Bengal on any equitable distribution of the burden "

The telegraphic report of the proposals of that Committee gave us hope that Bengal may get one-fourth share of the income from income-tax; it was found to be chimerical when the final proposals, as embodied in the rules, were published. The Committee only made one-fourth of the additional income over and above the income from the year 1920-21 from income-tax provincial. This was certainly no benefit. The Committee, however, recognised the peculiar financial difficulty of Bengal and commended it strongly to the special consideration of the Government of India. The Government of India have, however, not yet thought fit to make any concession on the point, and pending the consideration of the whole question I think it is our duty to press on the Government of India and see what concession is made by them.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: I desire to congratulate the hon'ble mover of this resolution on his sagacity and foresight in placing this resolution before the House at this stage. Babu Surendra Nath Ray was my comrade in arms in the fight before the Meston Committee. With the help of the members of the old Budget Sub-Committee and with the support of some of the important associations of this town—associations which stood for the Reforms—the British Indian Association, the National Liberal League, the Indian Association, the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, the Mahajan Sabha, the Marwari Chamber of Commerce and perhaps one or two other associations, he and I succeeded in inducing the Meston Committee to provincialise revenue from general stamps, which means, roughly speaking, a gross increase of about Rs. 1 crore 10 lakhs to our province. We fought strenuously for further justice to our province but we failed. In this fight we had the whole-hearted support of the old Government and specially of the Finance Department of that Government, and I take this opportunity of acknowledging our gratefulness to the old Government and specially to its Finance Department.

After the award of the Meston Committee the matter was reconsidered by the Joint Parliamentary Select Committee, and that Committee by its second report modified the award of the Meston Committee on certain points. One of the suggested modifications is the subject-matter of this resolution.

Sir, I feel that it is hardly necessary for me to enter into any details to support the justice of our case. The justice of our case has been acknowledged by the highest authority in the British constitution and the recommendation of the Joint Parliamentary Committee sanctioned by the mother of Parliaments is binding on all parties concerned. It is binding on us, it is binding on all the provinces, it is binding on the Government of India and it is binding on the Secretary of State. I refrain therefore from tiring the patience of this House by entering into facts and figures, but I may be permitted to mention that on another occasion I had gone elaborately into those facts and figures and published them before the world. The correctness of those facts and figures so published has not hitherto been challenged either by the other provinces or by the Government of India. But, as I have said, taking my stand as I do on the binding nature of the recommendation of the Joint Parliamentary Committee, it is unnecessary to enter into those facts and figures over again.

But before I proceed further I must say that to my mind the responsibility of the financial injustice to Bengal lies more with the Government of India than the Meston Committee. I may tell this House that as a member of the Budget Sub-Committee I came to know that before the arrival of the Meston Committee in India the Government of India called a conference of Provincial Secretaries, and, after hearing the case of each provincial Government from those Secretaries, fixed upon a certain figure as the legitimate expenses of each province. In that conference, in spite of the strong protest of the representative of our Government, Mr. Payne, the Government of India fixed upon Rs. 7 crores 91 lakhs and 55 thousand as the legitimate expenses of our province. Within about four months from the date of the sitting of the provincial conference and almost about the time when Lord Meston's Committee was holding its sittings, the same Government of India came to the conclusion that Rs. 9 crores and 3 lakhs was our legitimate expense. This they did by accepting the Budget estimate for the year 1920-21. I feel therefore that I cannot blame the Meston Committee so much if they accepted Rs. 7 crores 91 lakhs and 55 thousand as our legitimate provincial expense. But I am afraid, I must say, that in any view of the matter the Government of India was guilty of great inconsistency. Further, during the war period our province played the game and kept down its expense as far as possible. The estimated Budget expenditure of Bombay, with its population of about 18 millions, was accepted in the year 1919-20 at Rs. 40 crores and 52 lakhs. But that of Bengal in the same year was accepted at Rs. 7 crores 77 lakhs and 12 thousand. I feel that I am justified in saying that the responsibility of this injustice lies very greatly with the Government of India.

Now, gentlemen, I have already stated that the recommendations of the Joint Parliamentary Committee is binding on all parties concerned, binding on every authority who derive their power from the British Parliament. As one responsible to the Council, and through the Council to the people of Bengal, I venture to assert once more with the utmost respect that if any authority, however high, tries to ignore or to explain away this binding award, I feel it would be my clear duty and your clear duty too and the clear duty of that section of the public of Bengal who should stand out for the success of the Reforms, to take such steps in the matter as they think proper. I deem that it would be our duty to start a movement to get this injustice remedied by all legitimate means at our command. It will be our duty to go from town to town, from village to village, and to tell our people the story of this injustice and to so arrange matters that Bengal as one man will put forth all its efforts to remedy this injustice. But, let me warn you of one thing, let not our movement degenerate into an agitation. Let us conduct our movement with moderation, with sobriety and with earnestness, and let us remember that the enemies of reform are on the alert. Let us remember in the conduct of our movement that forces of disorder are not wanting. Let us take every care not to add to the volume of bitterness, but let us at the same time proceed with our movement with firmness of purpose and determination of action. Let us represent our case respectfully to the higher authorities, and if we do not succeed, I for one would advise you to arrange for a deputation to England later on to represent our case before the British Parliament and the British public.

The PRESIDENT called upon Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur to speak, and when the Rai Bahadur proceeded to read out his speech Colonel Pugh rose to a point of order.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: Is a member allowed to read written speeches?

The PRESIDENT: I have considered the matter and I think that as the rules stand I cannot prevent members reading their speeches.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY Bahadur: I have great pleasure in supporting this resolution and commending it to the House. I feel that our province has not been justly treated by the financial readjustment as recommended by Lord Meston's Committee. I do not desire to enter into the question as to whether the Government of India or Lord Meston's Committee is responsible for this injustice. It is enough for my present purpose to state that the Joint Parliamentary Committee recognises the peculiar financial difficulties of our province and has made the recommendation quoted in the resolution. That Committee, therefore, has upset the award of Lord Meston's Committee to that extent. I do not propose to discuss the other point on which the award of Lord Meston's Committee has been upset by the Joint Parliamentary Committee, but that the decision of the Joint Parliamentary Committee, as the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter said, is binding on all parties concerned—binding on us, binding on the Government of India and binding on other Indian provinces. We, the people of Bengal, expected prompter action on the part of the Government of India in giving effect to this recommendation. But so far we have been disappointed. I hope and trust the Government of India will not ignore this binding recommendation any longer. The air is thick with forebodings of future financial troubles in Bengal. I do not propose to enter into any detailed examination as to the financial position of my province, for I feel it will be premature on my part to do so. I realise that when the Budget will be placed before us, I shall be in a better position to make useful observations on this question, but assuming for the purposes of my speech that the financial position of my province is not so bad as some enemies of the Reforms try to make out, I feel I am rightly entitled to claim financial justice for my province. It appears from the Civil estimates of 1919-20 that the contributions to the Government of India from our province under the heads of Customs and Income-tax are several times more than those of all the other provinces and higher than that of Bombay. In Customs the contribution of Bengal according to the Budget estimates of 1919-20 was Rs. 8 crores 64 lakhs and odd, of Madras only Rs. 1 crore 33 lakhs and odd, of the United Provinces only Rs. 4 lakhs and 50 thousand, of Bihar and Orissa only Rs. 2 thousand and the Central Provinces only Rs. 7 lakhs, and finally that of Bombay Rs. 7 crores 99 lakhs and odd. In Income-tax and Excess-profits duty the contribution of our province according to the Budget estimates of the same year and on the basis of the Meston Committee's award was Rs. 8 crores 52 lakhs and odd, of Madras Rs. 1 crore 21 lakhs and odd, of the United Provinces Rs. 82 lakhs and odd, of Bihar and Orissa Rs. 27 lakhs and odd, of the Central Provinces Rs. 21 lakhs and odd, and finally that of Bombay Rs. 7 crores 24 lakhs and odd. I realise that it may be said that although these amounts are levied within the limits of the aforesaid provinces, yet a portion of the actual contribution comes indirectly from some of the other provinces and Native States. For example, it is well known that Calcutta is the port not only for our province but also for several other provinces and for a number of Native States as well. The same argument, however, justly applies to the ports of Madras, Bombay or Karachi and various other minor ports we have in India. But if certain well-known facts and available figures relating to local consumption be properly examined—I do not propose to tire the patience of the House by entering into a detailed examination of these facts and figures—it will appear that the duties levied on the local consumption of Bengal, if compared with the local consumption of other provinces, will be much higher than those of the latter.

A similar argument can be put forward with regard to Income-tax and Excess-profits duty. It may be said that the income-tax levied from the head office in Calcutta includes profits partly earned, say, in the coal mines of Bihar or the tea gardens in Assam. The same argument, however, applies equally to places like Bombay, Madras, Nagpur, Karachi or Cawnpore, but I understand from a representation submitted by the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter on behalf of the National Liberal League that if the figures relating to Bengal be examined it will appear that more than 80 per cent. of the total income-tax levied within the province of Bengal is realised solely from local incomes. It will appear, therefore, that the contribution in income-tax in our province is much higher than that of the other provinces.

I feel it is unjust that all the taxes realised from the richer section of our community here should go towards meeting the Imperial necessities and Bengal should be left stranded with taxes realised mainly from the poor. It has been said by some critics that the fault, if any, is of Bengal's, for Bengal is permanently settled, but those critics forget that for the permanent settlement of Bengal the people of Bengal were not responsible. Those critics forget that, but for the permanent settlement of Bengal, perhaps it would have been difficult for the East India Company to bring order out of chaos as regards the rest of India and it would perhaps have been impossible in those early days of unsettled financial conditions to extend British sway over the rest of India. Those critics forget that the highest authority within the British Empire has pledged itself to uphold the permanent settlement. Those critics also forget that during the century and a quarter that has elapsed since Lord Cornwallis took the statesmanlike action with regard to the permanent settlement of Bengal various changes, economic and social, have taken place and, apart from the question of this sacred pledge and apart from the question of disturbing vested interests any attempt to unsettle the permanent settlement will disturb society and the economic condition of Bengal to such a degree that the light-hearted critics themselves will be the first to cry "halt." Those critics also forget that it is perhaps due to the permanent settlement that it has been possible for Bengal to contribute so handsomely in income-tax, in excess-profits duty and in customs duty.

Sir, I feel that the proposition before the House is so just that I need not take up any more time in pleading the cause, and I hope and trust that the whole House will unanimously adopt the resolution which has been placed before it.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): As the Member responsible for the finances of the Government of Bengal I naturally welcome any help that may appear to be forthcoming in the direction of improving the financial position, and I hope that the Council will not think that I am wanting in proper feeling, if I say that I should have been more grateful if this question had been raised after the presentation of the Budget instead of to-day. I say this because I feel very strongly that neither the Council nor the Finance Department are in a position to deal with this important matter adequately and effectively until they know exactly what the financial position of the Presidency is, and that they cannot know it until they have had an opportunity of studying the Budget which will be presented on the 21st February. So far as the Council is concerned, the desire to discuss the matter at once is excused by the very widespread interest which has been aroused both in this Council and outside it. But so far as I am concerned, I am very much hampered in dealing with this question to-day by the fact that our Budget is not ready. I cannot anticipate to-day the Budget Statement which I shall make 10 days hence. Our figures are not yet ready and it will take Mr. Marr and myself all our time to get them ready within the next 10 days. However, we shall do our best and our desire is then to present to the Council a reasoned statement of the financial position, covering not only our annual income from the sources which have been made available to us but also our balances, and most important of all, the new borrowing powers which have been conferred upon us under this Reforms Scheme. That is all that I can say to-day in regard to the Budget position, and I am sure the Council will see that we shall be in a very much stronger position to deal with this matter when the Budget figures have been fully worked out than we are to-day. Owing to the difficulties which I have just described it is impossible for me to say very much on this resolution as it stands, but I hope what I shall say briefly will give a certain amount of comfort to the Council. I will not go into the past history of the case or the action taken by the late Government of Bengal. That has been sufficiently dealt with by the previous speaker and by my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter, and many of the protests which were made by the late Government of Bengal have been published and are familiar to the members of this Council. I would only say that when the present Government came into being on the 3rd of January, the first step they took was to review the financial position. This was discussed by His Excellency with the Members of Council and Ministers, and as a result we submitted a representation to the Government of India about the middle of last month. On that representation the Government of India have not yet passed any orders, and it is therefore impossible for me to go into the details of that subject at present. This resolution, if it is passed by the Council—and I am sure it will be—will help to strengthen the representation which we have already submitted to the Government of India, and from that point of view I need hardly say that I welcome the resolution. We shall take steps to communicate it immediately to the Government of India, so that they may be able to take it into consideration when they are considering the representation which we have already submitted to them. I have no doubt that after the Council sees the Budget figures and becomes aware of the precise financial position, they may be able to strengthen our case and then their help and guidance will be given in a more effective form. I do not think that there is anything more that I can usefully say to-day. I trust that the Council will not feel that in dealing briefly with the matter, as I am doing, I am underrating its importance or underrating the sentiments of the Council on this question. I only feel that both the Council and myself will be in a better position after the Budget is ready to deal with this matter than we are at present.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I rise to support the resolution. Although I am not in a position to supply figures, I can say that financially we are in a worse position than the other presidencies. I am grateful to you, Sir, for allowing us to raise this question in this first sitting of the Council. You have perhaps observed how pressed we are for consideration of financial difficulties and how the members of this Council have been trying to effect retrenchments in several establishments. Though we were very favourably considered by the Joint Committee of both the Houses of Parliament, Lord Meston's Committee upset the whole thing and we are all smarting under a feeling of discontent on account of the unfavourable consideration shown to Bengal in spite of the fact that Bengal contributes to the Imperial exchequer the largest amount.

I take this opportunity of acknowledging my gratefulness to our worthy Minister, the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter, who on this occasion has come forward with valuable advice and co-operation in fighting our battle, if necessary, in England. This is as it should be. In regard to Reserved subjects, our Ministers should be in the position of an ordinary member of the Council and they should take the lead in opposing Government. We require a special concession from the Government of India in respect of our financial position, and without taking up much of the time of the Council I support the movement and I hope that it will be accepted without any dissent.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I desire to associate myself heartily with this resolution. I cannot say that the Government of India has been ungenerous. Probably the Government of India were in a difficult position themselves, but perhaps we are in a worse position, and that being so, the Government of India ought to behave with the generosity which the Supreme Government might be expected to show towards us. The Government of India know fully well our difficulties. They were presented to that Government by our representative, Mr. Payne, many many months ago. At that time the Government of India recognised that our expenditure was Rs. 7 crores and 55 lakhs. Four months afterwards the Government found that our expenditure was Rs. 9 crores and 3 lakhs. Well, our expenditure has grown and that fact has to be borne in mind, and in view of the peculiar financial position of Bengal the Joint Committee recommended that special consideration should be shown to this province. Our contention—the contention of this Legislative Council as well as that of Government and the contention of the people—is that this special consideration has not been shown to us. The Government of India have given us nothing except advice, while we wanted sympathetic consideration.

My hon'ble friend Mr. Mitter pointed to the desirability of sending a deputation to England for the purpose of ventilating this matter before the British Parliament. Well, Sir, I have been associated with four deputations to England ever since 1890. I have been backwards and forwards with these deputations. We may safely place absolute, complete and sure confidence upon the justice-loving instincts of the British democracy and on their representatives—the mother of Parliaments. I do not know whether that is the sense of this Council, but if we could send a properly constituted deputation I have not the slightest doubt in my mind that the fullest measure of justice will be done to us and that effect will be given to the recommendations of the Joint Committee in respect of the special consideration which they asked the Government of India to show to us.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I am grateful to Government for having practically accepted this resolution. We, the members of the old Council as well as this Council, have been fighting over this question for more than a year, but unfortunately we received no just treatment at the hands either of the Meston Committee or the Government of India. But nevertheless we shall carry on our fight, whether it be with the Government of India or in the Council of the Secretary of State. This is all that I have to say in reply.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: I am sorry that I did not make myself clear. The Government have accepted, not practically accepted it, and it will be forwarded to the Government of India for their consideration.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I am thankful to Government for having accepted my resolution.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

Abolition of Commissionerships.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: “This Council recommends to the Government that the posts and offices of the Divisional Commissioners should be abolished and that early steps should be taken to bring about the said abolition."

In view of the resolution which stands in my name, No. 13 in the list, which is more comprehensive, I beg leave to withdraw this resolution for the present because I think spasmodic efforts of retrenchment would not be of much use.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Reduction of Ministers.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "This Council recommends to the Government that His Excellency the Governor be approached to reduce the number of Ministers to two."

I do not think that there is any necessity for making a long speech on this subject, as I have already discussed it in connection with the resolution about the reduction of the number of Executive Councillors. Both are of the same nature and the same principle is involved in them. It is in fact a corollary to the question that has already been decided by this House, namely, that the number of Executive Councillors should be reduced to two. If we take into consideration the work entrusted to the Executive Councillors and the Ministers I do not think the work of the Ministers would be heavier than that of the Executive Councillors. If that be true, then I think the number of Ministers must also be reduced to two. The only ground upon which I press my resolution is that there is not sufficient work for three Ministers. In my analysis of the portfolios I tried to show that the work that used to be done by the Hon'ble Maharajadhiraja Bahadur alone has been now distributed between one Executive Councillor and two Ministers, and I think the Nawab Sahib has got not more than half the work done by Mr. Cumming and afterwards by Sir C. Stevenson-Moore. I maintain that utmost economy is necessary. We require money very badly for making due provision for vocational education, for the rapid spread of primary education, for the development of industry and agriculture and for making proper provision for agricultural education, for making better provision for medical relief, for taking sanitary measures for the restoration of the natural drainage of the country and for providing good drinking water in the rural areas. So we cannot afford to pay much and we cannot spend much over these appointments; we must try to see that the number of appointments made is exactly the number that is absolutely necessary for the discharge of duties entrusted to them.

There is another aspect of the question; we find that as soon as these ministerial appointments are made we lose the services of the Ministers for the popular cause even in case of reserved subjects. They are not in a position to side with us and go against Government when a division is called for. These appointments are made from among the leaders the public and I think their services are more required on the popular side than on the ministerial bench. We saw on two previous days that though the Ministers had some sympathy with us they were obliged to vote for Government. Though under the law there is a provision that they can reserve their votes, they did not do so. That is a thing which we deplore, and I think the more we can keep their services for the popular cause the better for us. If we say that these high-salaried posts, I mean those of the Members, should be reduced, I do not see how we can make a differential treatment in the case of the Ministers. I may be permitted to refer to what has been done in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. If they can manage their work, which is not less than that of Bengal, with two Ministers and two Executive Councillors, I do not understand why Bengal should not be able to do the same. Some alarming note has been sounded that if the number of Ministers be reduced it may be that a certain community may not have an adequate representative in the Government. It has never been my intention or of anybody else in this House that one particular community should take an advantage over another. I may assure the House that I will not be in the least sorry if two Muhammadan members are appointed on the ministerial bench. Men like Sir Abd-ul-Rahim enjoy the confidence of all communities. If any one enjoys the confidence of the House he is entitled to a seat on the ministerial bench whatever community he may belong to. I may assure the House that I have not brought forward this resolution in order to do any injury to any particular individual, but, as I have explained before, it is only for the sake of economy that this question has been raised. I believe that strict obedience to the voice of patriotic conscience should be the guiding principle of the House. The retention of a large number of these high-salaried posts under Government will have a demoralising effect upon our leaders, and on this ground also I am opposed to any delay in the appointment of Ministers. I do not wish to detain the Council any longer, as the various arguments in favour of this resolution are put forward in connection with a resolution which was accepted by the Council the other day by a large majority. I now commend the resolution to the acceptance of the House.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: On the last occasion when my friend moved for reduction in the number of Members of the Executive Council I had the honour to support his motion. Even to-day I would not have hesitated to extend my hand of fellowship to him if I thought that I should be serving the best interests of my country. I fully share the anxiety of my friend to effect substantial reduction in the cost of the administration of the country, and I believe there is no sensible man in the whole of Bengal who would not approve of the principle of economy underlying the proposition before us. But, Sir, I also believe that no sensible man would like for the sake of false economy to impair the efficiency of the administration. Sir, when we take into consideration the history of the various reforms that have been introduced into the country we find that some extra hands are always added and these reforms being of a substantial character it seems to me that the changes effected are also to some extent bigger, and I remember in this very hall the veteran leader of the people, Babu Ambica Charan Mazumdar while criticising the creation of a new province under a Lieutenant-Governor, said that it seemed to be the desire of Government to create a galaxy of Lieutenant-Governors. It is quite possible that some of my countrymen may say also with some justification that what "dazzled and dazed" them in this reform is the galaxy of the Executive Councillors and Ministers. But as I have said, we should remember that as we are on the threshold of obtaining full responsible government we should see that the various complex questions that will arise before us should have persons to guide them through.

So, the immensity of the task set before us demands that we should have persons at the helm who should give their best attention to all matters that have been entrusted to their charge. We know also that while the Members of the Executive Council have been entrusted with certain subjects, the Ministers have been entrusted, to my mind, with more important subjects, and it is on the better working of these subjects that the salvation of the country depends. When you take into consideration the question of agriculture and industry you cannot but come to the conclusion that this part of the duty of Government, which has not been properly attended to, should be taken up immediately and the best attention should be given to it. The Ministers ought to give their devoted attention to the uplifting of the agriculturists, who form the backbone of the country and to the starting of industries, which will enable our countrymen to earn better wages and to live well. If we are able to uplift our countrymen, and if we are able to give free and compulsory education to our people in such a way that they will be in a position within as short a time as possible to feel and to think for themselves and to realise their own rights and responsibilities, certainly we shall have attained the goal that we have set before us. One of the most important departments that have been placed with the Ministers is Local Self-Government, and who would not expect that the Minister in charge of it should so work the Act and so direct the institutions that are entrusted to his charge that we may be able to show even to adverse critics that we are capable of governing ourselves? If we cut down the number of these Ministers, naturally we put greater strain on those who remain and they will not be able to discharge their duties as they ought to and in a way they are expected to. Formerly the Members of the Executive Council and other officials were not responsible to us, but what do you find at the present moment? Ministers are wholly and solely responsible to us and it is to us that they look for success and guidance, and at this stage, when we are on the threshold of attaining much better things, we should be very cautious as to how we modify the present arrangement. The majority of the members here, who have no idea of the details of the administration of the country and do not know how matters are supervised and controlled, would agree that we require a certain amount of time to study these matters to be in a position to decide one way or the other. If my hon'ble friend will look at the agenda paper he will find that a motion stands in the name of Mr. D. C. Ghose, wherein it is proposed that small committees should be formed with respect to all the departments to find out what economy could be effected in them. Should we not wait and see whether economy can be effected in the departments under the Ministers as well? In matters like these when we find that the greatest interest of the country is at stake we should be very cautious in moving onward. I hope my friend who is a gentleman of such mature age and experience will give his consideration to the matter and, if he arrives at the conclusion that it would not be wise to press his resolution immediately, he may wait for some time to enable us to arrive at the conclusion whether we should allow the number of Ministers to stand as it is or cut it down to two. We are here certainly in order to do what is right and we ought to do what is right. There is an old proverb that what is done in haste is repented at leisure, so I hope my friend will not ask us to do things in haste.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: As regards this resolution, which has been moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, I feel it incumbent upon us to speak out what we actually feel. Only the day before yesterday, barely 48 hours ago, on the motion of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri this Council by a large majority has accepted a resolution, which must be vividly in the memory of all of us. I was one of those who supported that resolution, and that resolution emphatically put it down that the number of Executive Councillors should be reduced to two. Sir, what I feel and some of my friends also do feel, is that after the passing of that resolution it is incumbent upon us to say what our opinion is about the number of Ministers. It is only proper that the same mover has brought before us this proposal for the reduction of the Ministers to two. I feel that it is eminently proper and reasonable. The mover has very aptly pointed out how the present resolution is a corollary to the one already passed. It is certainly a corollary to that. We have here now four Executive Councillors and when they are conjointly sitting with three Ministers and the Governor, the question of majority and minority need not be very seriously discussed, for there would be three Europeans, taking the Governor, and the rest Indians. But when our resolution just passed, is given effect to, and I presume it will be, what would be the result? Very likely, Sir, if I have understood correctly, the four Executive Councillors will be reduced to two—one would be an Indian and another a European. That being so, what would be the proportion of Indians and Europeans in the Executive Council conjointly with the Ministers? If the proposal now before us be given effect to, then there will be on the side of the Ministers two Indians and on the side of the Executive Council two Europeans, including the Governor and one Indian. That will make three Indians against two Europeans. Sir, I am one of those certainly who would be very happy if the whole administration is run by my own countrymen, but that is no reason why we should not remember that we must do justice to others also. If we want that the number of Executive Councillors should be reduced, it is only fair that we shall be satisfied with a less number of Ministers also. I feel, Sir, that if we are to seek justice, we cannot stand before the public or Government or any body in the world and say that these Ministers must continue but the Executive Councillors must be reduced. It has been said here that there would not be sufficient work for these Ministers. I have come to the Council only recently, and I am not very familiar with the details of the Government administration, but after hearing what has been said by the mover of the resolution I am disposed to think that, if the number of Ministers be reduced to two, there is no likelihood of work suffering. Our Ministers are new men, but they are all intelligent men. They have been selected from amongst 113 men who have been returned here from different parts of Bengal, and the Government in making the selection have certainly selected the best of the lot. I do not think anybody can take the slightest exception to the selection of Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee. Then my friend, Mr. P. C. Mitter, for whom I have the highest respect—

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! We are not discussing the individual merits of the Ministers.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I would only say that the present selection has satisfied us all, but the point is whether we are to reduce the number from three to two or not. What strikes me is that, if Government have made the wisest selection from amongst those who have been elected and if the two best men are selected, then the work will not suffer. That is the reason, Sir, why I say that if we are to do justice to all and to be fair and consistent, we must be reducing also the number of Ministers so that it may not be said that these elected members are selfish. If we reduce the number of Executive Councillors we must reduce that of Ministers also.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I am sorry I have to oppose this resolution. Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri has told us that it is after due deliberation that he has sent in this resolution to the Council, but I see that he could not have done so. It is in an inauspicious moment that he sent in this resolution. This is like one of those resolutions in the last Council which was withdrawn, and another gentleman took it up, and when we are going to have an Act introduced in Calcutta,

It was on the lines of this resolution, he only saw the error of his ways after sending in his resolution. He must know that the more people are associated with the Government of the country, the better for the country and the better for us. We have now only three Ministers; he forgets, as well as his supporter, Dr. Hardhan Dutt, that in future there will be no Member of the Executive Council, and that we shall have more Ministers and there will not be any European element. Others may come in as Ministers but not as Members of the Executive Council, and the Executive Council will be a thing of the past. The portfolios in charge of the Ministers are very important portfolios—Local Self-Government, Medical and Sanitation, etc.; all these are in the hands of one man, and are sufficient for one man. Then we have got education and Registration in the hands of another Minister; the third Minister, my friend the Hon'ble Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, is in charge of very important departments; he is in charge of Industries, Engineering and other departments, and Agriculture. All these Ministers are in charge of very important departments and have very great powers, and it is absolutely necessary that the work of the administration should be carried on by the leaders of the people and not by the officials. My contention is that if instead of having three Ministers we have four Ministers and one Member of the Executive Council, that would have been far better. My friend, Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, has just said that we ought not to be supporters of false economy, that is exactly so, because that will impair the efficiency of the administration. The work will have to be done satisfactorily. There is no logic in the argument that because the number of the Executive Council has been reduced we should reduce the number of Ministers.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I extremely regret that in spite of my hearty sympathy with the objects that Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri has in view, I cannot bring myself to support this resolution. My regret is all the greater that I find myself in opposition to one whose ardent patriotism and sober judgment I have always admired, but whose decision in bringing forward this particular topic for discussion I cannot but sincerely deplore.

Sir, as a survivor of the old Council that has now ceased to be, I hope my colleagues will grant me a little indulgence if I try to put before the House certain matters for consideration which must not be lost sight of in arriving at a decision on the very important question before us. I know there are many in this House who have worked in various spheres of public activity, but I hope they will pardon me if I say that they are new to the surroundings of this House and the work that now lies before them, and, if I venture to speak to them somewhat like an old navigator who may claim to know something of the troubles of navigation in unknown waters, and to be able to point a finger of caution at unseen dangers that may lie ahead.

Sir, I will proceed to state very briefly the reasons which have led me to oppose this resolution. First and foremost we ought always to remember that there is a fundamental difference between a Member of the Executive Council and a popular Minister. This point has been emphasised by the Ministers themselves in several of their public addresses, and I do not think I ought to labour the point. It will be remembered that whereas a Member of the Executive Council is a permanent official, a popular Minister is not. The Member of the Executive Council is not responsible to us, he is responsible to the Secretary of State; the popular Minister is responsible to the Legislative Council; therefore it follows that, if we have been serious in recommending that the number of the Members of the Executive Council should be reduced, it is all to our advantage that there should be a large number of popular Ministers, so that the members of Government who are responsible to this Council may be in a very substantial majority.

Secondly, Sir, we have to remember the onerous duties which have been thrown upon the Ministers. I do not for a moment question their fitness to face the duties that have been entrusted to them, but I can say without any disrespect to them they are new to the duties of their office. All other things being equal, a Member of the Executive Council has got at least this advantage, that he has got a number of years' training which enables him to get through his work far more quickly and far more effectively than a popular Minister, who enters upon his duties without practically any previous experience. If that is so, if the number of subjects that have been reserved be equal to the number of subjects transferred, I would say that if the number of Executive Councillors be two, the number of popular Ministers ought to be greater.

Thirdly, we have to remember that in England the subjects are equal in number or of equal importance. Here the fact is quite the other way. The departments that have been transferred to popular control are amongst the most important of the departments of the administration. Take the case of Local Self-Government, Education, Agriculture, Co-operative Credit. Not to speak of the intricacies and details of the administration, each of these subjects wants, almost at least, limitless expansion. We have therefore to remember that the popular Ministers have really got far more important work to do than the Members of the Executive Council.

Then there is the question of effecting economy. Now, there is a consensus of opinion among the majority of the members of this House that the salaries of the Ministers ought to be reduced. We have not considered this question yet, but, as far as I have been able to gather, the majority seem to be of opinion that the salary is too high—

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! We are not discussing that question now.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: Well, Sir, I was merely touching that point by way of remark. I was only making a passing reference. However, I will not refer to it. If there is a reduction in the salary, we can really utilise the amount saved in retaining the services of another Minister.

Lastly, there comes a question which I think I ought to refer to before I sit down, and it is this: The expansion of the Legislative Council has also added to the work that will be ordinarily thrown on the popular Ministers. We are not considering the case of the Members of the other half of the Government, but so far as the Ministers are concerned, their case ought to be considered as a special one. In the former Council, I remember that the Members of the Executive Council had to keep themselves back from their ordinary work to attend Council work which interfered very much with the ordinary work of the administration. In the present Council of 101 members, if all of us try to put forth our activities and send in resolutions on an average of two per head, allowing two hours for each resolution it will amount to 404 hours, and taking six working hours a day, it will take us two or three months to finish. But I do not know whether this contingency will ever arise, but that has got to be remembered. All things considered, it is therefore apparent that the burden thrown upon the popular Ministers is not at all light, and if this is so, I am not at all sure whether the number now is at all sufficient for the purpose of efficient administration. I am rather of opinion that, if possible and if economy can be effected, the number might be usefully increased.

There is another point. There are three gentlemen now occupying the position of Minister. If one is removed, the question may arise— who is to go? We should not now consider whether we should allow the present Ministers to continue in the next elected Council. We ought consider when the next Council is formed whether the number should be reduced by one or increased by one. Very regretfully, Sir, I feel constrained to oppose this resolution.

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): The arguments which I have to put forward are rather analogous to those which I laid before the Council only a day or so ago, and I do not propose to speak at length in connection with the present resolution. This is not because I attach less importance to the number of Ministers than to the matter of the number of Executive Councillors. Far from it; both questions are of equal and paramount importance to the Government as a whole, but I may possibly, having already spoken on this similar subject before, be able to take for granted some of the arguments which I then elaborated.

There is, however, one particular aspect of this resolution upon which it is incumbent upon me to speak, and that is that under section

52 of the Government of India Act, the appointment of Ministers is the personal act of the Governor, and unfortunately, as this Council is now constituted, we have not the advantage of hearing the Governor in defence of his own actions. In his absence it is perhaps more incumbent upon me to say a word or two in respect of anything which has been done by him individually.

Now, Sir, as in the case of the Members of the Executive Council, my general point is that this matter of the number of Ministers was equally not decided on the votes of prejudiced persons, but was the outcome of protracted deliberations and the decision of the highest authority which dealt with the whole question of reforms. It will be remembered that, particularly in connection with the recent reforms, the desire was expressed in many quarters that far more matters of detail should be pronounced upon by the British Parliament than had been the case in connection with previous changes. In accordance with that wish, many matters of detail were laid before Parliament through the medium of the Joint Committee; that being so, it is somewhat inconsistent to cavil at the decision of the final authority which was selected in response to the wishes of so many. In respect to Ministers the pronouncement of the Joint Committee was that "the committee are of opinion that in no province should the number of Ministers be less than two; in some provinces more will be required" "Some provinces" are, obviously, the more important provinces. We are all here agreed that Bengal is the most important province in India, though to soothe the susceptibilities of our neighbours, we may say it is among the most important provinces in India. That being so, that is how we derived the figure 3 which was fixed upon by the Governor as the number he would appoint under the powers given to him.

Apart from that general argument of the weight attaching to high authority, there is the subsidiary argument as to whether in the light of the work to be done this total of three is justified. The Council is aware of the important departments which have been entrusted to the Ministers. Can anybody question that the Minister who will deal with the report of the University Commission, that the Minister who will deal with the question of the public health of the province and the new constitution of the Calcutta Corporation, that the Minister who will deal with stimulating of the Departments of Agriculture and Industries is going to have his time fully occupied?

Another point which I have referred to before and which Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq has referred to again is the necessary and inevitable advantage which an official has over a non-official in dealing quickly with official business. But in the case of Ministers there is another factor. It is obvious that the longer an individual is in office the more he becomes conversant with the work placed before him. A Minister holds his appointment for three years in one term, although if he is re-elected—as we hope will be the case with those who have been so well chosen in the first instance—the appointment may be for three years longer. But even that is far shorter than an official life-time. A local newspaper in a recent issue has further been pleased to call the office of a Minister precarious. It is precarious to the extent that his tenure lacks the continuity of the tenure of a Member of the Executive Council, therefore in so far as the term of office of a Minister may be shorter, it is not reasonable to expect from him the same outturn of work which might have been expected from a Member.

It was of interest to hear the arguments in favour of the resolution, but I must confess that I have been at some loss to appreciate what these are. We have had the old cry of economy, but the chief argument which seems to weigh with some speakers seems to be a desire for artistic symmetry in the number of Members of the Executive Council and the number of Ministers. The idea seems to be that since a resolution was moved the day before yesterday, that the number of the Executive Council should be two, therefore by symmetry, the Ministers also should number two. But that argument of symmetry and numerical equality has never been applied in respect of the past Government and does not apply even now. The appropriate total on either side should be judged on the work to be done and not on the argument of equality and symmetrical balance. I would ask the Council to reject the present proposal.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea): I find myself in some what difficult position as the resolution affects the ministerial bench and I am a Minister. We have an old English proverb which says, "A man who pleads his own cause has a fool for his client."

But I venture to assert that the resolution will not affect me or my colleagues on the ministerial bench, it will affect our successors, and I am glad that I am able to plead the cause of future Ministers. I am proud that I am pleading the cause of responsible Government, for I feel that upon the efficiency of ministerial responsibility and ministerial work the whole future of responsible Government depends.

I desire to remind my friends, the elected members of this Council, who are keen for the success of responsible Government, that 10 years hence a Parliamentary Commission will sit to make an enquiry into the measure of our success or our unsuccess. If we come successfully out of that ordeal, the whole measure of responsible Government that has been promised will be given to us. If we fail, we will be sent back to where we were. Our only hope lies in the successful working of the Reforms Act. The Reforms Act provides that if in the course of the next 10 years a transferred subject is mismanaged, it will be open to the Governor to transfer it to the reserved side; therefore I venture to assert, with all the emphasis I can command, that we should do all we can to see that the utmost efficiency is attained. That is a position which my friends, the elected members of this Council, should not lose sight of. I venture to think that if the number of Ministers is reduced to two, it will strike at the very root of efficiency, and if efficiency is destroyed the establishment of a full measure of responsible Government will not be effected. That is the proposition which I venture to lay down for your adoption.

My friend Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, has asserted that the work of the Members of the Executive Council is much heavier than the work of the Ministers. That may or may not be so. I can speak for myself and my colleagues that we are hard-worked enough. If I were to let you into the secrets of my prison house, I would say this. My friend on the left works from 7 in the morning right away till 11 at night. I myself am not strong or young enough to do that; I can only work from 7 in the morning till 7 in the evening. Is not that hard and strenuous work? If you add to the measure of that work you impair its efficiency. My friend says that we have not got the same quantity of work as the Members of the Executive Council; to that I would say that we are leading a sufficiently strenuous life.

The next point is that there is not sufficient work for us, and therefore some of us should be dismissed. Well, Sir, this is really a question of the reduction of establishment. I have been connected with administrative matters in various capacities for many years; I have been associated with the management of one of the greatest educational institutions in the country, I have been associated with the management of one of the biggest presses in Calcutta, and whenever the question of a reduction of establishment was brought before me, I instituted an inquiry to find out whether it was possible to make a reduction; but here without any investigation or inquiry this proposition is laid before us. We are told that we are to reduce the number of Ministers from three to two. I would say that there ought to be an inquiry before a proposition of this kind is brought forward for the acceptance of this House. But as a matter of fact, is there any ground so far, if you look at the question carefully, for reducing the number of Ministers from three to two? I hold in my hand a statement of the departments which have been made over to us. I find there are 19 departments divided among us. Five are given to me; six to my friend to the left and eight to the most junior member. And what are these departments? They are progressive departments which have to be developed and elaborated, and upon which the future of the country rests. Let me mention some of these departments. They are the Department of Local Self-Government, the Departments of Industries and Co-operative Credit, Education, Sanitation, Public Health, Public Works and others. In England, there is only one Minister for Local Self-Government. There is one Minister for Education only. But I may point out that I am in charge of three departments, two of which are Medical and Public Health, and another Local Self-Government. I have, roughly speaking, about 150 municipalities and 25 district boards to control. And as if that is not enough, we have got Bills and projects of law, all of the first magnitude, to consider, which will be laid before this Council in due course. For instance, yesterday or the day before, I had the opportunity of referring to the proposed amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act, this has been before us for a period of two years; we have promised to take it up. The Bengal Municipal Act has also to be amended; it was first passed in 1884 and amended in 1894. Then we have got the Local Self-Government Act, which must also be amended. Does my friend the mover think that all this will not tax the energy and the strength of the Minister in charge of the department? Above all that I have got the Public Health Department, and there we have got the great problem of problems of Bengal—malarial fever, the ravages of which must be minimised. The beginnings of these great anti-malarial operations have been started under the fostering care of His Excellency the Governor. I am sure that my friends in the mutassal will feel the urgency and the magnitude of the task. Does it not need thought; does it not need careful elaboration?

Then, Sir, I have got the Medical Department. It seems to me, being in charge of these responsible departments, that if one Minister were to be reduced, some of the work would have to be divided between the other two. If I am reduced, then my friend will have to do some of the work. But it is absolutely impossible to add to the work of the portfolios which have been entrusted to us. Take, for example, the case of my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter. He has got Education and Registration and other important departments, to which I need not refer at present. Education itself is a vast problem, and it will become a great department when the changes recommended in the Report of the Calcutta University Commission are given effect to, and a Bill will have to be introduced. Further, the education problem is of enormous importance in view of recent events to which I need not refer.

Then, as regards my friend, the Hon'ble Nawab Sahib, he is entrusted with Industries, Agriculture, Excise, Fisheries and so on; and we have got these nation-building departments and all these have been entrusted to the Ministers; and, mind you, that if the Ministers prove successful and equal to the task, you will ask after five years that more departments should be made over to them. Therefore, it seems to me, Sir, that it would be extremely unwise to reduce the number of Ministers to two; and this reduction will hamper them in their work and will also impair the efficiency of the administration upon which the prosperity, the happiness, and the contentment of this large province so largely depends.

Sir, I have been told by my friend, Babu Kishore Mohan Chaudhuri, that it is desirable to reduce the number of Ministers to two, because the Ministers are really taken away from public life. Well, Sir, if that is so, that ought to be an argument in favour of the abolition of the whole ministerial establishment, all of us having been taken away from public life. If that is so, this ministerial system ought to disappear altogether. I desire to tell my friends that we, as Ministers, are still in the front rank of public life, if I may say so without arrogance. We are not divorced from public life. I am the President of the Liberal League and the Secretary of the Indian Association. My friends also hold similar offices.

Sir, we have been told that this resolution is a corollary to the other proposition which was carried the other day. Well, it is a corollary in the sense that we would add to the work of the Executive Councillors by reducing the number to two, and to the work of the Ministers by reducing their number. You will overburden them and impair their efficiency. In that sense, it is a complete corollary as it will lead to the ruination of this great experiment.

One word more and I am done. I desire to say this: that we have been clamouring for the last 40 years for the highest appointments being thrown open to Indians, and for adding to the number of these appointments. Here three of the highest appointments have been given to us, and we say that we shall have only two. I ask you, is that consistent with the traditions which we have been accustomed to respect and even to honour? We have been clamouring to be associated with the administration of the country in its highest spheres and you now want to curtail the sphere of our activities in that direction. Therefore, I say, it would be fatal, it would be inconsistent with our traditions, it would be inconsistent with those patriotic sentiments which, I am perfectly certain, inspire the elected members of this Council, and I hope and trust that the Council will not accept this resolution.

Mr. H. A. STARK: I have nothing to add to what has been said by the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee and I would ask that a closure be now put.

Mr. H. BARTON: I am glad to notice a distinct change of attitude on the part of those members who so forcibly supported the resolution for a reduction in the number of the Executive Councillors. I do not think I am wrong in concluding that it is with the object of compensating for an error which they discovered too late and that if given the opportunities they would gladly retract from their first decision.

Sir, if there is one feature that stands out pre-eminently in the desire of the people for self-government it is the feeling that under old conditions, it was lacking those essentials which make for sound organisation and good government. From the very moment this Council has taken up the various resolutions, we have had flung at us the considerations of economy in a manner which indicates that we should blind our eyes to the large question of effective government. We have had very clearly put before the House, not only by those who voted on the first question for a reduction in the number of Executive Councillors, but by those who supported this resolution, that the duties that will fall upon the Ministers will be very considerable, and I think that they have very forcibly put before the House what the ultimate position must be if we agree to the reduction of the number of Ministers. I beg to say that having put through the first resolution a very serious blunder has been committed, and if we put through the second one it will be a greater blunder and it would be murdering the Government instead of good government. I therefore oppose this resolution.

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: I regret that I cannot support the resolution. In doing so, I would request you to pause and consider why in the case of the appointment of Executive Councillors four members were appointed, and three on the side of Ministers. I do not know whether that is a cogent reason or not, but some of my friends have led me to believe that because Government was nervous that it might be outvoted by the Ministers, it thought fit to appoint four Executive Councillors. If that be the motive of the Government, what is it our duty to do? Is it by reduction or by addition that we do our duty? If it were in my hand, I would have the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur on the left of the presidential chair, and I am sure he would have headed the list of the Ministers and would have led them in a right direction. We also know that the onerous duties that the Ministers have to perform could not be performed if the number were reduced to two. I have been associated with some District Board work and I know something of Local Self-Government. In addition to the arduous duties which the non-official Chairmen of District Boards have to perform, other works are going to be added. The Sanitary Department has been opened and the improvement of public health is pending legislation. Many other things are coming up. I do not know whether we ourselves and the Minister in charge of Local Self-Government will be equal to the task. We know something of Agriculture and we know something of Education. Primary education has to be expanded. Several brains would have to be put together; and it is a problem now how the education of the masses may be expanded. So, on these various grounds, there is no necessity for reduction.

My friend, the mover, has said that we have lost our popular leaders by their taking up ministerial posts. It is true that we have lost them for a time. But they will have some experience in the innermost recesses of the administration, and we hope that after having gained greater experience they will come back to us and will be able to lead us. On these grounds, Sir, I oppose the motion.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I move that the question be now put. (Cries of "No," "No.")

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: I rise to support this motion. Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri supported his motion by various arguments; but none of these arguments have been met by my friends who opposed it. The first gentleman who opposed this motion said: "The other day I supported the motion for the reduction of number of Executive Councillors, but I cannot extend my helping hand to-day." The reason put forward was that we should have some experience of this Council before we vote one way or the other. Then are we to understand that when he gave his vote for the reduction of number of the Executive Councillors he had some experience and within these 48 hours he has lost that experience? Sir, is that a reasonable ground for the non-reduction of the number of Ministers?

Then, Sir, we have heard with astonishment the speech of the President of the Provincial Conference held at Midnapore, who in his speech challenged the Government to show how reduction could be effected, and that gentleman in a very polite manner told us that not only there should be three Ministers but as many Ministers as possible. What are we to understand from that? We all know that when a boy passes the B.A. or the M.A. Examination his parents think that he will either be one day a Deputy Magistrate, or a Munsif or a Subordinate Judge, or will one day adorn a seat on the honourable bench of the High Court. I think that every one of us hopes that one day we may adorn the ministerial seats on the left hand of the Hon'ble the President.

We have heard Babu Surendra Nath Ray, who in opposing the motion put forward his reasons that our Ministers are new and that they ought to learn business properly, after which this question may be taken up. Then are we to understand that the Ministers are now serving the periods of their apprenticeship and after that period is over we may take up the question? But the term of a Minister's office is only three years, and before they are supposed to serve their period of apprenticeship out, their term of office will be over.

We have also heard the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee. He was pleased to oppose this motion on the ground that this sort of change should not be made without inquiry, as practically this is a question of retrenchment, but I beg to submit, Sir, that there is the patent fact that the work which used to be done by three Executive Councillors will be done by two Executive Councillors and two Ministers, and therefore the work of three officers will be divided amongst four.

Maulvi SHAH ABDUR RAUF: I cannot conscientiously support this resolution. I beg to remind you, Sir, and through you the members of this Council, that we are handling a very dangerous new machinery of government and the success of this new machinery depends on the success of the work of the Ministers; and this success is sure to bring better days in the administration of the country. Then, Sir, he responsible and heavy task with which our Ministers are at present saddled, if not discharged properly, to the satisfaction of the people and to the satisfaction of the Government, will wreck the new machinery. I wonder, Sir, how can we expect better days in the future if the work of the Ministers be not successful? The position of the Ministers is quite peculiar; they are responsible to the people as well as to the Government. Greater attention and greater energy will have to be spent by them to administer the various departments with which they have been entrusted. Much has been said on the question of the reduction of the number of the Members of the Executive Council. But there is no reason why we should be led by that to request the Government to reduce the number of the Ministers. What we should have always in view is the better administration of the country; the betterment of the people whose representatives we profess ourselves to be. I think it will be simply suicidal to hinder the work of the Ministers, by asking two of them to perform the duties which are being at present done by three. On these grounds, I strongly oppose this motion, and I would ask my brother councillors to oppose the resolution, and I would ask the mover to withdraw it before it is set at naught by the whole House.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: I do not like to be a silent spectator in this debate, but I feel it my duty to say a few words as regards this resolution. I have carefully read the resolution and it seems to convey to my mind this fact, that at the present moment the Government have got the power of reducing the number of Ministers to two. The wording of the resolution is to the effect that the Government be approached to reduce the number of Ministers to two. If that be the object of the resolution, and if any vacancy arises on account of the resignation by any of the Ministers, and this resolution be at once given effect to by the Government, then I think that it will be a suicidal policy. No doubt, the other day we passed a resolution recommending the reduction of the number of the Executive Councillors to two, but that was a pious wish. The Government have got no hand in the matter, and under the Statute, we cannot do it. Therefore, Sir, supposing that pious wish be not given effect to by the Secretary of State and a vacancy immediately arises on account of the resignation of one of the Ministers and the Government give effect to this resolution, what would be the position? We would have four Executive Councillors and two Ministers, instead of three. Therefore, as a matter of practical politics—and it is not a question of mere academic interest—we should not think of accepting this resolution. It is only when we would be sure that the Secretary of State would give effect to our pious wish, then we should move for the reduction of the number of Ministers to two.

Then, Sir, one of my friends strongly contended before the House that this resolution is a necessary corollary to the resolution which we passed the other day. On the other hand, I contend that the necessary corollary of that resolution is that the number of Ministers should be retained. The very principle of the Reforms Scheme is that the voice of the people must have effect upon the Government and that it must predominate. When we wanted to reduce the number of the Executive Councillors to two, on the ground of economy, we had also in view the fact that the number of the high officials ought to be reduced, because their appointments do not depend upon our desire but upon the desire of somebody else, but if we follow the principle that the people of the country must have a predominant voice in the government of the country, then we must have as many Ministers as we possibly can; and we would have more of us adorning those seats in the front and we would have a cabinet consisting of those who represent the people. Now, Sir, it is not a case where there is any conflict of interests between certain communities. Certainly, the Europeans are as much interested in the administration of the country as the non-Europeans are. What we desire is that the Europeans should never identify their interests with those of the officials; but that they should identify their interests with those people, and the Ministers should be called their representatives. As I have said, I think that unless and until we are sure that the Secretary of State and the Government be pleased to reduce the number of Executive Councillors to two, we should not approach Government to reduce the number of Ministers to two on the ground of economy; otherwise it would be false economy to do so at the present stage.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: We have been asking for very many years for an effective and predominant voice in the administration of the country, and now that we have got some voice, I oppose this resolution. We have now three Ministers; and I think that we ought to have more in course of time.

A charge of selfishness has been brought against us by a learned member of the Council. I candidly confess that it is from a feeling of selfishness that I am opposing this resolution; and I hope that the time will shortly come when we shall be able to congratulate ourselves that we have proved ourselves extremely selfish. Selfishness, to my mind, is another term for self-assertion; and I hope that we should be able to assert ourselves. We belong to the country and may I not add also, that the country belongs to us? The way in which this matter has been brought forward has been correctly stated by Sir Henry Wheeler, and it is very possible that, from a sense of symmetry, my friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, has brought it forward. What we want is a clear dominant voice in the government of this country; and therefore my position is that we ought to oppose this resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: Although the matter has been discussed very fully, I think it right that, in the interests of our successors, at any rate, I should add what I feel about this matter. The first point which strikes me is: why is this hurry? Why should my friend at the first meeting of the Council bring forward a resolution of such importance as this? We are all new—I do not exclude the Ministers—and we do not know yet what the volume of work will be. The resolution means either of two things, as Mr. Nasim Ali has pointed out. It may mean an expression of opinion to be given effect to when the occasion arises; or it may mean an expression of opinion that will be given effect to immediately. Either way, it is unfortunate. If it is to be given effect to immediately, it means dislocation of business at the very inauguration of the Reforms. If it means that it should be given effect to later on, then I ask—why is this hurry? Could not the mover wait? I do not think that I need touch the argument of my friend that we, the Ministers, are lost to the public. Our venerable leader, Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee, has already dealt with it, but may I point out to the House the position of the Ministers in countries we are trying to imitate? Are not the Ministers in Great Britain, America, or for the matter of that in any country where the democratic form of government prevails, leaders of public opinion? Have we not to do our best in placing our views in all matters of importance to our province? I do not really criticise the mover for the view he has taken. Well, Sir, the experiment is a new one and some people will take time to realise what the position of the Ministers ought to be. Although the Ministers are servants of the Crown, they are the representatives of the people. The sooner we realise this, the better. I may add that the enemies of reforms, in their press and platform, have been persistently preaching the doctrine that the Ministers are officials. So I can appreciate how the mover has fallen into an error.

Sir, there is another point which has been raised by some of the speakers who spoke in support of this motion, viz., economy. I have already said in the course of another debate, and let me repeat it to the House once again, that movements for economy have my cordial support and I have no doubt they will have the cordial support of my colleagues on the official side. But there is one point which I should like this House to consider. Before you bring forward movements for economy, you should take the trouble to see that the point you desire to put forward, is well considered. Are we—I say “we,” deliberately including the Ministers,—are we really in a position within the few days that we have been called in to help the Reforms to formulate well-thought-out schemes of retrenchment?

The PRESIDENT: I wish to tell the Muhammadan members that they need not be impatient and that time will be given to them to say their evening prayers when the proper time comes.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: On the question of economy, is it not wise and proper that we should know how the land lies, that we should know something about the Budget, that we should know something about the Public Services, that we should know something about the just demands of administration, that we should know something of the just demands of the nation-building departments, that is, the Departments of Local Self-Government, of Public Health of Education, and when we are in a position to know what the real position is, then the time will come to formulate schemes of economy? I feel that I ought to tell the House that they ought to discharge their great responsibilities to their electors by acting more thoughtfully—I mean no disrespect—and so I make this appeal. While I appreciate the object of my friend the mover of this resolution, I cannot ignore the fact that he has been hasty in formulating cut-and-dried schemes of economy. I can truly and properly say that the House to-day is not in a position to make helpful suggestions towards economy.

Sir, a good deal has been said about the point that the Ministers will not have sufficient work and—on this point I have often heard the argument repeated that, while in the old days one Lieutenant-Governor was quite enough to govern two provinces, we had a few months ago one Governor and three Members of the Executive Council for our province only, and now we want one Governor, four Members of the Executive Council and three Ministers to administer the province. But, Sir, were we satisfied with the old state of things? Were the people of the old province satisfied with one Lieutenant-Governor? Why has this change come? Has not the change come because of our insistent demands? And now that the change has come, it is somewhat curious and somewhat amusing to my mind, to see that the very men who tried their best to bring about this change have now become enemies of the change. It is interesting to analyse the psychology of a position like this. After giving the matter careful consideration, I have come to the conclusion that these gentlemen have been carried away by cheap and plausible arguments of a certain section of the press. The arguments may be catching, but not sound. They preach, with what object I cannot say, that the proper working of the Reforms would not lead to efficiency. They constantly preach that while formerly one Lieutenant-Governor was enough, now we have an expensive and wasteful administration with no compensating advantage for the public. But I would ask the members of the House—and they would not be here if they had no faith in the Reforms—to analyse the position in their own mind and not be led away by cheap and plausible arguments.

About the work of the Members and the Ministers, I would ask you to remember one point. In the old Council we had only twenty-eight non-official members, and now we have got more than a hundred. Formerly twenty-eight members used to put questions and resolutions; now more than a hundred would do so, and that means more work for us if you want us to consider them carefully.

Now, gentlemen, with your permission, may I state very briefly -- for the benefit of my successor, not so much for myself -- that the work of the department of which I am in charge occupies a great deal of my time? It may be due to the fact that I am very slow, but it is nothing but a fact -- and I may tell you that if some of the problems -- take, for instance, the problem of primary education for the whole province -- are to be tackled seriously, they are enough to occupy the time of a Minister very fully. Take University education. For instance, if the recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission are to be given effect to, they alone will occupy a Minister's time fully. Take the new University at Dacca. That, again, is a problem of prime importance. But, gentlemen, I do not desire to tire your patience by any further enumeration, but I wanted to give you certain facts, so that you might judge for yourself.

Babu Nitya Dhon Mukherjee has said that certain gentlemen have changed their mind within 48 hours -- that while they voted for reduction in the number of Executive Councillors 48 hours ago, from four to two, they do not find their way to reduce the number of Ministers from three to two. May I tell him that a Minister, if he is really anxious to do his work, has to keep in touch with the public? This aspect of the question does not affect the case of the Executive Councillors. They are responsible to the Secretary of State, while we are responsible to you. And that means we have additional duties in keeping ourselves in touch with you.

Mr. C. MORCAN moved for a closure.

The PRESIDENT: I want to adjourn now for the Muhammadan members -- who want to say their prayers, for quarter of an hour.

The Council re-assembled at 6-15 P.M.

Mr. C. MORCAN: I move that the question be now put.

The motion that the question be now put was then put and agreed to.

The main question was then put and a division was taken with the following result:—

Retrenchments in Expenditure.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: "This Council recommends to the Government that a committee be formed consisting of 12 elected members, 4 nominated members and 4 official members of the Council, to report within six months what retrenchments in expenditure in the various departments of the Government can be safely and usefully made."

I confess that this is a very comprehensive resolution. It is based on the idea of securing economy, but certainly not at the cost of efficiency. I do not want to divorce one from the other. My resolution demands a survey of all the various departments of Government—the whole of the administrative machinery—with a view to find out what parts are old and archaic which ought to be removed and what new parts are mere useless accretions. This is the idea, but I am free to confess that this cannot be done by merely suggesting one or two instances where retrenchments can be made offhand or in an isolated form. It is therefore necessary that there should be a survey of the various departments of Government. Unfortunately for me—never having had any close touch with the Government—I am not in a position to suggest what possible retrenchments could be made, and therefore my submission to the House is that a committee be formed to consider the whole question with the aid of the departmental officers. I am not wedded to the idea that there must be retrenchments, but retrenchments will be and should be made only where it is possible. I am not one of those who believe that retrenchments must be made under any circumstances. But all the same I am one of those who believe that the present Government is a top-heavy one. I am one of those who believe that we must have money and more money for the greatest necessities of the country, namely, sanitation, compulsory primary education and technical education. For sanitation we must have more money, for we cannot exist without sanitation. The country must have extensive anti-malarial campaigns and we require a lot of money. I am sorry to say that almost nothing has been done by Government in this direction, and so far as compulsory primary education is concerned, we know that Government never took it up. Under these circumstances, gentlemen, I think that there ought to be a committee of inquiry and that is my resolution.

There is one thing that I may tell that, so far as the present Government is concerned, I mean the Government in its present shape, we want a democratic government it is true and it is also true that a democratic government is a very costly form of government, but for a strange irony of fate we have been given only the costliness of the democratic government without its responsibility. However, we have got to go on, and in view of that the time has come when we must, if we can, usefully and safely make retrenchments. I do not desire, as I have said, to suggest what retrenchments could be made, and if I were to suggest, then I would begin with the Board of Revenue and the Behala Sub-Registry office. We must have a principle to guide us and we cannot arrive at a principle until we have made a proper survey of the whole situation and learned to apply the knife with advantage. Therefore I respectfully submit to this House that there should be a committee and that they should accept my proposition. As I have already said, and I want to repeat it again, the whole of this undertaking depends on the attitude that the officials will show. If they are sympathetic, then and not till then we shall be successful in the survey, and I hope, Sir, that the officials will co-operate with us in this matter and try to find out where it is possible to make these retrenchments.

I do not think, Sir, that a speech is necessary or even possible on a subject like this. But what I felt all my life is this: that in this country all the ointment that is meant for the painful part of the patient is being largely absorbed in the big bold hands of the nurse. However good and kind the nurses might be, I do not question that they have got very big bold hands, and it is those hands that are absorbing all the ointment which is meant for the poor patient. The nurse will be kind but the hands must be smaller, and more ointment must be left for being applied to the painful part of the patient, and that cannot be done unless there is genuine co-operation of the officials with us. We are not in the Secretariat and we cannot possibly detect everything on a mere superficial inspection, and it is only possible if the officers tell us candidly and frankly, which is co-operating with us. If they really co-operate with us in this matter, then we shall certainly say that they really mean the Reforms to be a success. I therefore suggest that there should be a committee consisting of 12 elected members, 4 nominated members and 4 official members of the Council, to report within six months what retrenchments in expenditure in the various departments of Government can be safely and usefully made. The proportion of elected members is only 12 out of 20. That is not much, because I know we, the elected members, by ourselves cannot do much in this line. We require to be taught many things in this matter, and therefore there must be assistance coming forward from those who are in charge of these departments and who alone can help us in this endeavour. Of course, it will take time, and therefore I have put six months. I have some doubt as to whether a committee of 20 members can possibly work this out, and it seems to me that it is far more desirable that there should be small committees to inspect each of these departments. As I started by saying that I do not possess the necessary knowledge, I speak without sufficient knowledge. I think that a small committee must take up bigger departments of Government and after that we will go to the smaller departments. At any rate we must begin with a view to making a thorough survey to find out if there is room for retrenchment compatible with efficiency. This is all that I have to say, and I do not think that there will be any objection to this, from the officials at any rate.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE moved, by way of amendment, to the resolution of Babu Surendra Nath Mullick regarding the formation of a committee to consider retrenchments in expenditure "that this Council recommends to the Government that small committees appointed by the Government and consisting of elected members of the Bengal Legislative Council be attached to the important departments of the Government with a view to studying the working of the said departments and to make a report to the Government within one year as to what retrenchments in their opinion can safely and usefully be effected."

The House has listened to so many speeches to-night that I think it will be a welcome relief to it, if I am very brief in my remarks, and a long speech is not necessary either, because the mover of the resolution has given his case away by saying that his suggestions are thoroughly impractical. Well, Sir, when I saw his resolution I also came to the same conclusion and therefore gave notice of my amendment. I quite realise that the financial position of this presidency is such that there is a natural desire in our minds to effect retrenchments in every direction. By all means have retrenchments, but, before you cut down expenditure, study the machinery carefully and then come to the conclusion what are the superfluous parts that can be got rid of. Therefore, I say it requires a very patient and a very thorough study, and a committee of the sort which the mover suggests, cannot do the work. You will never get elected members of this Council to work from day to day for the purpose of studying the working of the Government machinery and then making their recommendations. From what I know of meetings of the Corporation, I am certain that, if you ask members to devote their whole time to a particular work, you will never get that work done. Therefore what I suggest is this. I ask Government to appoint small committees consisting of elected members of the Council, whose first business will be to study very carefully and very efficiently the working of the important departments of Government and then come to the conclusion what are the superfluous parts of the machinery that can safely be got rid of. This is my amendment and I commend it to the acceptance of this House.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: Considering the strong current of public feeling now running high in the country on the question of wasteful expenditure, I should say that the resolution has not been brought before the House a moment too soon. Rightly or wrongly, the public do hold the view that there is a considerable amount of unnecessary and wasteful expenditure of public money in the various departments of the Government, and it is honestly and sincerely believed by many that much of this wastage can be stopped and the savings thus made can be very usefully utilised. As representatives of the people we cannot ignore this feeling. On the other hand, it is our duty to see that there is peace and tranquillity in the public mind. We must make every effort to remove all public grievances, whether they are due to real or imaginary causes. As we find the situation at present, we cannot but advise the Government to take at once some such action as is recommended in this resolution.

The success of the Reforms would lie, to a large extent, in the manner in which we could administer the important departments which have been transferred to popular control. But we all know that the grants allotted to these departments in the past would not now meet their growing demands, even if they are most judiciously and economically administered. We must require money and more money to cope with the vast amount of uphill work which lies before us in some of these departments, specially in the departments of Agriculture, Sanitation and Primary Education. Of course the money has got to be found, and, if necessary, we must submit to fresh taxation. But we would only court disaster and add to the ever-growing disaffection, if we talk of taxation when the public, rightly or wrongly, are convinced that there is a good deal of unnecessary expenditure in almost all the departments of the Government which could very well be stopped.

It is, therefore, even for the success of the Reforms, imperative that we should make a careful examination of how we spend our money at present. If any retrenchment in expenditure is possible, we must make it; but if no retrenchment be possible, we would at least be able to remove a false impression from the public mind and in addition have public opinion in our favour when we have to impose new taxes. Considering all these, I am in full sympathy with the resolution moved by Babu Surendra Nath Mullick and would heartily welcome the appointment of a committee on the lines suggested by him.

Babu JOCEMDRA NATH ROY: We desire to make the administration less costly and to devote more money to works of public utility. Education and sanitation demand our urgent attention; and they require huge sums of money. We cannot impose fresh taxes. The burden of the tax-payers is already heavy and it should not be made heavier, till their material condition is improved. The Reforms have resulted in enhancing expenses in administration; and we, in this Council, have been passing resolutions to curtail surplus appointments. The whole question of retrenchment should be carefully considered and means devised to minimise expenditure consistently with efficiency. This work can be usefully accomplished only by a committee ready to devote time for the work.

Under the circumstances, we should use the pruning knife carefully. I have, therefore, very great pleasure in supporting the resolution proposed by my friend.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: Let me at the outset say that I am in favour of the amendment. The resolution as well as the amendment, to my mind, are very nearly one and the same, with this difference, that the amendment makes for more efficient looking into the work than the resolution itself does. If these 20 persons are to be allowed to look into the details of the departments, I am of opinion that it will not at all be physically possible for them to do so. But a small committee will be able to go into the minutest details and arrive at a proper conclusion.

Mr. H. BARTON: I realise that in this resolution we are up against a very big question. I do not know whether the object of the resolution is against those who are receiving large salaries or against those who are very much underpaid. Consequently I view the resolution with a great deal of fear. From my experience I have found that whenever committees had been appointed to cut down expenditure it has always been more specially the poorest paid class of workers who were generally attacked and cut off. Gentlemen, let me tell you that a committee such as this is not likely to go in any other direction than that followed by its predecessors, and let me also press upon you that those who form the workers of those departments are members of your community or mine. We know that the subordinates in almost every Government department are overworked and underpaid. We have seen very recently that Government thought fit to appoint a committee to inquire into the condition of pay in the various departments of Government. These men have been crying out against the economic strain brought about by the increased cost of living, and, although Government has been graciously pleased to grant them some little increase, we find that even here those, who are in receipt of the largest salary, have received the largest increase while those who receive a miserable pittance have received almost nothing. Gentlemen, those who have suffered as a result of this decision are those who belong to the poor Indian community and to my own community - I mean the Anglo-Indian. Therefore I say that I view this resolution with a great deal of fear of consequences. May I also tell you that in giving effect to a resolution of this sort you are likely to place Government in a very awkward position? We all know that these poor workers to-day, who were afraid by reason of official oppression or otherwise to raise their voice against the conditions of their service, have now formed into strong organisations—labour organisations—which are determined to defend their interest. May I also tell you that it is the principle of all such organisations to co-operate sympathetically with one another in their efforts to defend their interests, and is it the desire of this Council to go to war with labour? I do not think it is. And we must inevitably have to do so, if we allow this investigation by a committee.

So, if we decide that this committee should also look into the conditions of service and pay of the subordinates in the various departments, I am fearful of the obvious consequences. So I am not in favour of this resolution. If I am assured otherwise I may perhaps be disposed to support it, but I do feel that we are embarking on a very dangerous venture, because a large majority of the workers, who will come under the consideration of this committee, will be those who are being most worked and those will be your people or my people. Again, in an inquiry of this nature we are likely to intrude upon their rights as workers, and because I am fearful of the consequences, I do not feel that those who will sit on this committee will do a fair thing always. Somehow it has always been the case that the poorest paid man has always suffered as a result of such inquiry. For these reasons I am not prepared to support this resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: I need hardly say that the Finance Department are in full sympathy with the object of the mover of this resolution and the mover of the amendment in so far as their desire to effect economy in the administration of Government is concerned. It is the constant business of the Finance Department to enforce economy on the other departments and we incur a certain amount of unpopularity on that account. If we get a committee to help us in our task and share our unpopularity no one would be more pleased than I should be. But my fear regarding committees of this nature is that they often have entirely unexpected results. Mr. Barton has hinted at some of the possible consequences, namely, that the lower paid Government officials in these days of organisation might be able to enforce their views on a committee, and that Government thereby would be placed in a difficult position. That, I think, is one of the possible consequences which the Council will do well to consider very carefully before they launch out on this scheme of inquiries by committees. I can imagine a committee of this kind calling upon Mr. Hornell and asking him if he has any economy to suggest in connection with the department under him. Mr. Hornell, I have no doubt, after recovering from the first shock of surprise, would proceed to give the committee a serious shock, and in the course of a few sittings he would be able to convince them that his grants should not be reduced but that they ought to be doubled. Similarly, in the case of the Surgeon-General, the committee would find that the medical needs of the Presidency demand a considerably larger grant than now. The Surgeon-General has prepared some excellent schemes not only for the improvement of the medical services but for the removal of human pain and suffering; and we have been obliged to cut out all these schemes simply because we have no money. I think that the Surgeon-General would soon convince the committee that he should have a very considerably larger grant. I gather that the mover of the resolution would not object to a result of this kind, but I can assure him that the demands for increased grants come not merely from the popular departments but from other departments of Government also and my fear is that the committee in their report would suggest proposals which, far from effecting economy in expenditure, would put pressure upon Government to increase the normal expenditure of the various departments. I need not go into the objections which have occurred to me about the size of the committee proposed in the main resolution, because I understand from the mover's speech that he has practically thrown over his own suggestion in favour of that of Mr. D. C. Ghose. But my main objection about this committee is that it is premature for this Council to suggest on the third day on which it has sat that the best way of effecting economy in Government departments is to set up a series of committees. The mover of the resolution has asked the Government officials not to be obstructive; but I can assure him that officials have no intention of obstructing. We should indeed be very foolish to be obstructive. The Council has been given very large powers of financial and other control over the proceedings of the departments, and is much more likely to exercise that power of control wisely if we give the members of the Council full opportunities of acquainting themselves with the circumstances of the various departments instead of leaving them to launch their attacks and criticisms in ignorance or at random. Our policy, therefore, is not to conceal anything but to explain everything, and it would be foolish to adopt any other policy. Holding these views, I am quite entitled to ask the Council to consider whether it is really wise to start a series of inquiries by committees. The Council, as I have said, has only sat for two days and many of the members are new to Council work, a very large number of them, as the mover himself said, have no practical experience of the working of the Government departments, but that state of ignorance is not going to continue very long. We are not going to spend our time in Council in discussing variegated resolutions as we have hitherto been doing. On the 21st of this month the Budget statement will be presented to the Council, and that will give to the Council a comprehensive view of the resources and liabilities of the Government, and I suggest that, until the Council has that general view, it is unable to say what the standard of economy or what the standard of expenditure ought to be. Only a couple of hours ago, the Council has sent up a representation to the Government of India asking them for more liberal treatment in the matter of increasing our income. Our standard of expenditure depends to a considerable extent on what our resources will be, and until we know what our resources are going to be, we cannot set up any standard of inquiry by which committees of this kind would be guided in their deliberations. After the Budget has been presented on the 21st of February, the Council will have time to study it till the 28th, when they will begin a general discussion on the financial position in the course of which members will have an opportunity of raising any points on which they require further information or which they consider to be unsatisfactory; and we will endeavour to reply to those points to the best of our ability. The third stage of the Budget will take place from the 14th March. In the 12 days after the 14th the Council will consider and vote the demands of the various departments. It will have an opportunity of challenging the expenditure proposals of all the departments either as regards the total or as regards individual details; and the Members and Ministers in charge of the various departments will in turn have an opportunity of justifying their policy, both generally and in points of detail. By the end of March, the Council will have a very good general idea of the financial position and of the circumstances, views and policy of the different departments. If they then require any further information on any details, they will have opportunities of gaining it by means of motions or resolutions or questions in this Council; or by reference to the authorities in charge of the different departments, and I hope that members will take full advantage of those opportunities. We should see a good deal of them in the next six weeks and we shall be glad to see members either here or in office, to discuss with them any matters they wish to raise and give them any explanation or information that can properly be given. I am authorised to make this announcement in Council not only for my own department but for all the other Members of the Executive Council and the Ministers. I suggest to the members of this Council that, if they take advantage of the various opportunities which I mentioned, they will have a very good general idea of the financial position, and any further information they want, they will get either here or from the Budget. It may be said that a committee of this kind would help the Council in dealing with the Budget, but obviously the committee would not have time to produce their report within the next six weeks. I suggest therefore that the Council will do well to postpone this matter for a couple of months. Then the Council will be able to say exactly what they want, and if they still desire inquiry by committees, to give to the committees definite instructions as to what they are to enquire into and what sort of report the Council wants from them. As I have said before, I think that the committee system is rather a dangerous method of procedure, particularly from the point of view of economy, but if two months hence the Council still want committees to inquire into any definite question in any particular department, Government will be prepared to consider the matter further, and if committees are appointed to give them all information and facilities they require for carrying out their duties. But I would ask the Council to consider very seriously the grave objections to setting up committees with the very vague and general instructions contained in the resolution and in the amendment to the resolution. As I have said before, we have no desire to place obstructions in the way of the Council, and we have every desire to give the fullest information they require about the working of the different departments. We realise the Council's claims in this respect, but I would ask the Council in return to remember that the Secretaries and Heads of Departments are hard-worked officers and, if a committee sitting in Writers' Buildings with general instructions to inquire into the working of the departments require their presence for days together, there will be a waste of their time to a considerable and unnecessary extent. So I would urge the mover of the resolution and the mover of the amendment to consider whether their purposes will not be equally well served by waiting until the conclusion of the Budget debate and then considering what further information they want in order to get an insight into the working of the departments; they can tell us their requirements and we will see what we can do to meet them. At the present time I think it would be undesirable to set up these committees with vague and general instructions, and I hope therefore that these proposals will not be pressed.

The PRESIDENT: At this stage I would ask the mover of the resolution if he has anything to say.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I am indeed thankful to the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr for his kind promise of help in this matter. After what has fallen from him about the advisability of postponing this matter, I am perfectly willing to wait for two months. If we then find that such a committee is necessary, we shall come up again with a proposal of some shape. So far as I am concerned, I accept the suggestion of Mr. Kerr and withdraw my resolution for the next two months.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I am also willing that the consideration of this question should be postponed for two months.

The PRESIDENT: I wish to communicate to you that the Hon'ble Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan desires to invite all the members of this Council to a Garden Party on the 21st February to meet His Excellency the Viceroy. This was communicated to His Excellency the Governor, and the Secretary has received this telegram:—

“Sitting of 21st. Am willing to call sitting for 11 a.m. on that day if substantial number of members desire it and to restrict business to Government business.”

It is obvious that if the Council meets at 3 o'clock on the 21st it is difficult for any one to attend the Garden Party. If by 4 o'clock to-morrow I do not receive any objection from the members, I will take it that they agree to this change.

Adjournment.

The PRESIDENT: The Council is now adjourned to 3 o'clock to-morrow in this Chamber.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

The Council assembled at 3 p.m. on the 10th February, 1921, in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 112 nominated and elected members.

Jute mills idle.

Mr. J. CAMPBELL FORRESTER: Is the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Department of Commerce aware that to-day there are two jute mills standing idle, and at least half a dozen more will be idle before Monday if coal is not supplied.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): Government are aware that the position is serious. They have been in communication with the Government of India and their officers regarding the matter.

Export of rice from India.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "This Council recommends to the Government that the Government of India be moved to take such immediate steps as may be necessary to put a stop to the export of rice from India beyond such surplus quantity as may remain after meeting the demands of the country."

I do not know whether the resolution demands a lengthy speech. It really aims at the early acceptance of one of the several recommendations of the High Prices Committee. Their report has been submitted to Government and we understand it is now under the consideration of Government. Government's action is dilatory, and, moreover, in this case there are several questions for serious consideration. I urge now that one of the recommendations as regards rice should be taken up at once and my excuse is that this is the season when large purchases of rice are going to be made, probably for foreign countries; and if any precautionary measure is necessary, I think it ought to be taken now. I am aware, Sir, that in this Council there are several members, at least some of whom who are interested in the rice trade, and there are their supporters. It may be that I may be again accused of bringing up this matter in an unguarded moment, without taking due care to ascertain whether there is any special necessity for doing so, or I may be accused of doing it for some motive. Sir, whatever may be said, I am not sorry in the least. I know, and men who have some knowledge of the ordinary tactics in the legal profession know, that when one is to support a cause for which he has got no weighty arguments or which is very weak, he generally adopts the tactics of abusing his adversary, so that the real point at issue may be lost sight of. I am also aware, Sir, that there is the inherent tendency in some of my friends, especially in Calcutta, to think that all the common sense and intelligence is confined inside the Mahratta ditch. I make this reference only because I may be deprived of the privilege of replying to my adversaries as was done yesterday. My Calcutta friends are anxious not to consider many subjects and I do not know what to do with them. They are opposed to an early sitting because it interferes with their profession or touches their pockets, and I noticed yesterday that at about 7 only they were very anxious and were tired, probably as dinner time was approaching. Sir, I may be pardoned for this little digression.

To turn to the point— the real thing is that some measure is necessary.

There is an indication that the price of rice is likely to go high. Of course I do not know the reason. From the official announcements we have learnt that in some districts the rice outturn is below the average, and much below normal. This may be on account of the shortage of rain, and the cultivators as well as many of us know that when there is a partial failure of rain the outturn is very low. This rise, again, may also be due to the great demand for export to foreign countries. There is no export duty on food-stuffs in India excepting only rice, and rice only gives 3 annas a maund, so far as I know, for export duty; so really the Imperial exchequer is not benefited by this trade. Indians have got no commercial enterprise outside India, so whatever profit is derived from it goes to the foreigner. I do not grudge it, and if the producers are benefited by the shortage of rice I should rather encourage it. But my object is that our own needs ought to be ascertained first, and if there is any real surplus, that may go outside India. I may cite an instance especially given in the report of the High Prices Committee. There was a conference in August, 1918, at Nagpur of all the provincial Directors of Civil Supplies and other Government representatives under the presidency of Sir Claude Hill. One Mr. Beadel, who was the Director of Civil Supplies in Bengal then, attended the Nagpur Conference and represented that in Bengal the prospects were very good and the total output in Bengal could be estimated at 3 lakhs of tons. Thus Bengal was declared a surplus province in regard to rice, and there was a heavy run on the rice stocks of Bengal which produced a tension in the rice situation in the whole of India. Government informed us that this information was supplied on insufficient data. This was done upon some private inquiries made by Mr. Beadel from some of the rice merchants—some interested persons, and the result was that Bengal was denuded of its stock in 1919 and the people were reduced to the brink of starvation. Similarly, I think, if there is any deficiency of stock, or if there is any surplus, we should not encourage export trade. Of course I would like to see my country prosperous and commanding a large export trade in rice, but I wish that heavier export duty be imposed upon rice and other food-grains. As Burma has got the monopoly of rice supplies in India, so I wish that Bengal especially may do so. But I think before we can do that, we must see that the outturn is increased. Several remedies have been suggested by the High Prices Committee, and I hope Government will take notice of them and take remedial measures at an early date. It is for the immediate future that something ought to be done, and in that view I have brought forward this resolution. I do not know, Sir, whether this high price at all benefits the producers. They are, most of them, very poor. It may be convenient to the rice dealers, I mean to the country dealers, it may be convenient to the well-to-do cultivators, but I do not know whether the high price is at all convenient to the ordinary cultivators, the real producers, who are very illiterate and extravagant. Experience has shown that whenever they get sufficient money, they spend it recklessly in the fish market or on ceremonial occasions. Some of them are in the hands of the mahajans. They sell everything they have for paying off their zamindars' dues and meeting other demands, and during the cultivating season they are obliged to go to the mahajans for their daily supplies and even for their food-stuffs. We know that the jute cultivators were very prosperous for some years. Could they amass any money? Recently they were in difficulty, not being able to get a market for their jute, and the result was that they were on the brink of starvation, which was partly due, I think, to the shortage of food-grains. If that is so, I would ask the House to consider whether this high price really benefits the producers. A large proportion of the Indian people depends upon the supply of the producers, and for their benefit it is necessary that sufficient stocks should be preserved in the country. Is it at all reasonable to allow the heavy export to go on for the benefit of a few well-to-do cultivators?

There is a notice of an amendment for substituting "Bengal" for "India," but I request my friends not to take up this question; it is an inter-provincial question and should not be raised now. At present my request is that something ought to be done for retaining sufficient stocks for consumption in the country. I think that can be done, if we know what the needs of the country are. In the Famine Code there is some provision, that question has also been dealt with at length in the report of the High Prices Committee, and it can also be done by calculation; district officers' reports can also be consulted; in those reports they prepare an estimate, and upon that estimate at least we can proceed to arrive at a definite conclusion. If we can know something about the annual outturn, we can easily calculate what would be the annual consumption. We can also easily ascertain the annual demand. I will not detain the House any longer over this matter, and with these few words I commend the resolution for the acceptance of the House.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I beg to move an amendment to the resolution of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri regarding the export of rice. The amended resolution will run thus:

“ This Council recommends to the Government that the Government of India be moved to take such immediate steps as may be necessary to put a stop to the export of rice from Bengal beyond such surplus quantity as may remain after meeting the demands of the province ”

I am in general agreement with the main resolution proposed by my friend on the left, but I am afraid it is too broad to serve the purpose of Bengal. I am anxious to have something definite and limited in scope, which is likely to pave the way towards bringing down the high price of the staple food of the people of Bengal. The objects, with which Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri has moved his resolution, are the same as those of my amendment, viz., to keep sufficient food stuffs in the country and to bring down prices, but I want to make certain that the people of Bengal may first be sure of cheap food before I can think of the other provinces of India. A restriction on export from India does not very much affect inter-provincial movements of rice and may not at all lower the prices in Bengal. If there is scarcity and high price of rice in Bengal, it will be small consolation to the people to be told that the trouble is due to export to one of the other provinces of India and not to some foreign country. I am conscious, Sir, that I lay myself open to the charge of parochial or provincial patriotism as against Indian patriotism, but in the matter of the prime necessity of life, I would welcome this accusation, if, by so doing, I could be certain that even the poorest Bengali would not be in danger of starvation for want of sufficient rice in the province. Protection, like charity, must begin at home, and I prefer to think of Bengal first, in this matter at any rate. I do not deny the importance of the whole-India question, but I know, Sir, that there are other bodies who can think of India; it would be well enough if this Council thinks of Bengal just at present.

It has been stated that if we do not allow free export of rice to the other provinces, they might retaliate by stopping export of pulse and other produce to Bengal. Even if this argument were true, we should not mind at all, because rice is to us a greater necessity than pulse and other things and it is imperative to keep sufficient rice in the province. But then, the argument is fallacious, because the other provinces do not send their goods to us in exchange for our rice, but because they find a better market here. Burma does not send rice to us because she loves us, but because she has a surplus quantity, which it is to her interest to send out. I have been told by a friend in this Council, Babu Amulya Dhone Addy, that Java will not send her sugar nor England her piece-goods, if we do not send out our rice to them. I, for one, shall be glad if this happens. Perhaps it is not known to many in this Council that 150 years ago, Bengal not only produced her own sugar but also exported. As for piece-goods, it would be a happy day for Bengal if she could manufacture her own requirements. To come now to the main point of my proposal. There is no difference of opinion that the price of rice has gone up very high, and threatens to continue so. This has been so well recognised that only in July last, a Prices Inquiry Committee was appointed by the Bengal Legislative Council to consider the question of high prices and to suggest remedies. Their report has been published, and their conclusions regarding the connection of export with high price has not been challenged by the Government or any other body, and I may take it that as far as the question of export of rice is concerned, their suggestions are substantially correct. They have suggested many other remedies, but the main remedy that affects my point is this, "that (a) export of rice overseas be stopped altogether until the yield is increased sufficiently to create a real and substantial surplus, and (b) inter-provincial export of rice be stopped when there has not been good harvest in Bengal."

I should go further than this recommendation and suggest that export from Bengal should be stopped until there is a sufficient surplus, and my reasons for doing so are these.

We have to look at this matter mainly in the light of two questions:—

First—Does free export of rice tend to increase the price of rice?

Secondly—Is the high price of rice good for the majority of the people of Bengal?

There are other minor points which may be taken up when we have been able to solve these two questions. To take the first question first, whatever free-trade economists may say, I think the answer to this question must be in the affirmative. I believe, it is well known to this Council, that the price of rice generally reaches the lowest level, when the new aman rice is out in January. For days together I have watched country markets in one of the best rice-growing parts of Bengal, and I have always found that the price invariably goes up as soon as an exporter arrives in the market. From evidence gathered by the Prices Committee, they assert that "it is a well-known fact that whenever there has been a rumour that export of rice will be allowed, the price of rice has risen . . . whenever export has been stopped there has been, as if by a mechanical process, a reduction in the price." Mr. Rushbrook Williams, who was placed on special duty in the Home Department of the Government of India, came to the conclusion, in his paper "India in 1919," that a carefully organised system of Government control and restrictions imposed on exports by the deliberate action of the Government have partially protected India from the world rise of prices.

I shall now take up the second and more debatable question whether the high price of rice is good for the majority of the people of Bengal. There are some people who give an affirmative answer to this question, assuming that the large majority of the people of Bengal are agriculturists and hence the high price of their produce must bring them in money. This might have been true if all the agriculturists had been able to grow more rice than was necessary for their own consumption and sell the surplus. But, what are the facts? I am afraid, statistics are not available, but I know from personal inquiry in my part of the country, that this is not the case. I believe that not more than 25 per cent. of the agriculturists can grow sufficient rice for their own consumption. The rest of the people have to buy, even if for a few months in the year. And they have invariably to buy at the dearest markets;—their stock generally runs short during the months of July to September, when the prices reach the highest limit. For the last few years, the prices have reached the extraordinary limit of Rs. 9 to Rs. 10 per maund at this season of the year. The agriculturist who has to pay this price for his staple food cannot bless the system which causes this high price and spells utter ruination for him and his like. Then, what about the large number of day labourers, who have always to purchase? Is high price good for them? It is, however, an economic fact that the continued high price of the necessities of life tends to raise the general level of prices, and the general rise affects nearly all articles of daily use, and this increase in prices goes on in a vicious circle.

So much for the agriculturist; but what about the middle classes? I know, Sir, that their number is not as large as that of the agriculturists; but mere numbers are not the criterion of the importance of a community. The middle classes are the brains of this country. We cannot neglect them; nay, it is they who take the most important share in the affairs of the country. The way the high price of rice has affected them is most pitiable. I have some intimate connection with a bank whose business is to lend money to this class of people; and from experience I venture to throw out this challenge to the Government that nearly 75 per cent. of the middle class people have to borrow money every year. The life of the middle class bhadralok is one long-drawn sigh from month's end to month's end. It is the duty of this Council to afford them what relief can be given by helping to keep down the price of the chief food-stuff of the province.

I do not deny that the rise in the price of rice may benefit some people, especially the profiteering merchants; but I hope that I have been able to convince this Council that the majority of the people are at a disadvantage when the price of rice is at a high level. It is well to remember in this connection that in times of free export, the profit obtained by the agriculturists is hopelessly out of proportion to the enormous profits made by the exporting merchants and middlemen.

Now comes the question of ways and means and the quantity that may safely be exported. There are several people who are of opinion that export of rice should never be allowed at all. This is too extreme a view to take, because if there is really a surplus stock in the province, the price of rice may go down to such an extent that the agriculturists may be tempted to diminish the area under rice cultivation, and grow other crops which may be more paying. This would be a real danger to the country, as the supersession of jute on rice lands has proved to be in many parts of Northern and Eastern Bengal. Then, again, there are some qualities of rice which are not, I am told, consumed by the people of Bengal. I am not quite sure of this, but if it is a fact, these fine qualities may be regarded as surplus, as they are not needed for the requirements of the province and may be allowed to be exported.

As regards the method of finding what is the surplus and what quantity may safely be exported, my friend, the mover of the original resolution, has suggested a course, and I think that it is not difficult for the Government, if they really take pains, to find that out, they can do it on the basis of 10 chittacks per head per day and come safely to a figure as to what quantity has been produced and what surplus can safely be exported. I think that only surplus rice may be allowed to be exported; but this brings us to the question as to whether we have any surplus in Bengal just now. Many people have said that there is a good crop in Bengal and there is surely going to be a surplus, but one good rice crop does not bring in a surplus, as one swallow does not make a summer. I think that Sir Edward MacLagan's Committee on Co-operation have said that in India it has been found by experience that one good year is followed by two indifferent years and one bad year, and so possibly we cannot expect one good year in more than four years, and we cannot therefore be sure of the surplus always. So for some years to come, I am afraid we cannot expect any surplus, because during the last two years of scarcity, the reserve stock, if there was any in Bengal, has dwindled down. If we have some good years to come, and if the agriculturists utilise more lands for rice, we may have some surplus, but until then, it is imperative that the export of rice from Bengal must be stopped. There is no danger of price falling too low, as Mr. Rushbrook Williams, of whom I spoke before and who has studied the question fully, says, "the reserve stocks must now be so low that it will probably be a long time before grain becomes really cheap."

Some people suggest that if the export of rice from Bengal brings in a shortage, Burma rice can be imported to meet the situation. As Bengal rice is better in quality, this will fetch a higher price to the agriculturist who may purchase Burma rice and have some balance in hand. Experience has shown us that people will not touch Burma rice unless it is very much cheaper, say Re. 1-8 to Rs. 2 per maund, and unless the people are absolutely compelled to take it for want of Bengal rice. Burma rice does not suit the health of Bengal, and a continued use of it causes deterioration in health, and it would be adding the last straw to make the Bengalis take to Burma rice instead of their own rice.

As regards the way in which the Government have viewed this question, whatever may have been their attitude in the past, it appears from the quotations which have been made from the report of the Prices Inquiry Committee, that the Bengal Government took up an attitude of continuing restrictions on inter-provincial movements, even up to March last. But the Government of India, in spite of repeated protests, removed all restrictions.

From reports received from the mufassal markets I find that the price of rice has gone up to about Rs. 6-8 a maund this year, when the harvest, as has been already reported, is good. This is a tolerably high price at this time of the year, and I am afraid that it will tend to go up unless some sort of check is put on export. I hope that the Bengal Government have not changed their mind, and I appeal to this Council to recommend to the Government first to find out what surplus there is in Bengal, and then, if there is no surplus, to go up to the Government of India to put a stop to export. This may be done temporarily. I do not say that it should be done permanently. Let us put a stop to export and see what results it brings in and if it really reduces the price to an abnormally low figure, then, of course, these restrictions may be removed. With these words, I commend my amendment to the acceptance of this Council.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I thank Mr. Chaudhuri and Mr. Dutta for their anxiety for the relief of the people of Bengal, but I am sorry to find that the resolution which has been moved by Mr. Chaudhuri is vague and unworkable. It has already been admitted to be vague by the mover of the amendment, Mr. Dutta. Mr. Dutta has stated that the original resolution is too broad. I call the original resolution a vague one, because it has not been defined in the resolution as to whether India is British India or not; as to whether the mover of the resolution has excluded Burma or not. Sir, he has stated that the surplus quantity of rice may be allowed to be exported; but how can we ascertain the surplus quantity? In ascertaining the surplus quantity of rice we must ascertain the population of India, the production and the consumption of rice in India. Unless and until we do that, we shall not be in a position to ascertain what would be the surplus quantity of rice in India. Sir, I gave notice of a question in connection with rice, but I was informed that this Council had no jurisdiction in the matter. This question rests with the Imperial Council and the Government of India. Therefore, Sir, in accordance with the ruling laid down by your honour, I beg to submit that this Council has no jurisdiction over this question. The mover of the resolution first of all has abused the Calcutta members of this Council, and in supporting the resolution he has stated that the Calcutta members are anxious to have the sittings of the Council at 3 o'clock instead of at 11 in the morning. But that is no reason, Sir, as to why his resolution should be supported. He has stated that the rice crop this year is not a good one because of the untimely rainfall; but I beg to submit that in Bengal we had a timely rainfall in the month of September, and that is the reason why the rice crop of Bengal, or rather of India, is a very good one generally. As a matter of fact we have had a good crop in Bengal and in the adjoining provinces. It will appear from the second rice forecast that in the province of Bihar and Orissa the crop is 80 per cent. - in Orissa itself it is much more than that; in Bengal it is 90 per cent. of the normal crop, in Burma it is 95 per cent.; in the Madras Presidency it is 99 per cent., and in Burma, Sir, we have a bumper crop. It is estimated that the surplus of rice in Burma would be about 3 million tons, corresponding to 80 lakhs of maunds last year, when export was allowed to foreign countries though under restrictions. Still the net surplus of rice in Burma is half a million, corresponding to 136 lakhs of maunds. Sir, I beg to submit that unless there are special reasons to the contrary, there should not be any interference with the trade. That is the opinion which has been expressed by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, the Burma Chamber of Commerce, and as well as the Bombay Chamber of Commerce. I beg to submit that the Government were quite justified in prohibiting the export of rice during the great war, I should also say that Government were quite justified in continuing the prohibition of the export of rice during the last famine. Rice was allowed to be exported by the Government even after the outbreak of the famine; but, Sir, I, though a rice merchant and so interested in the rice trade, raised my voice as a member of the Calcutta Corporation against the export, and I am grateful to the Government that on the suggestion of the Calcutta Corporation the Government of India were pleased to prohibit the export of rice altogether from India. But circumstances have materially altered since then; and, as I have already stated, there is a good rice crop in Bengal and in the adjoining provinces and there is a bumper rice crop in Burma. Assuming, Sir, for argument's sake, that there is no surplus rice crop in Bengal, still the Government of India have already ordered the import of one million tons of rice from Burma into India; certainly Bengal will get a certain quantity of Burma rice and that will be regarded as surplus for Bengal. Sir, my friends have been under the impression that a very heavy quantity of rice would be exported. I beg to submit that even in normal years before the outbreak of the war and the famine not more than 5 per cent. of the total outturn of rice was exported from India to foreign countries. It may be said that in the case of wheat it was 20 per cent but in the case of rice and other food-grains it was not more than 5 per cent.

Then, Sir, there is a sort of rice called table rice, for which there is no demand in Bengal or, I may say, in India. The district of the 24 Parganas is the only district which produces it. It produces this sort of rice not for its own consumption but simply for export to foreign countries, and there has been a surplus of 20 thousand tons of this rice in Bengal and 50 thousand tons of this sort of rice is manufactured every year in this district. So, Sir, there can be no objection to the export of this quantity of rice, specially on the ground that it is not consumed generally in India.

Sir, with regard to the price of rice it may be said that it has materially come down and it is sure to come down further. I may mention that the price of balam rice, that is, the rice grown in the district of Bakarganj, which is the granary of Bengal, went up in 1919 to Rs. 10 per maund and that was the price of the rice of average quality. Last year it was from Rs. 8-8 to Rs. 9 per maund. It has come down to Rs. 7 per maund; and owing to the stagnation of rice in the district of Bakarganj as well as Calcutta I may be allowed to say that the price is sure to come down further. Then, Sir, in the case of Burma rice, last year its price in Calcutta was Rs. 7, but this year it has come down to Rs. 5 per maund, and this very morning it has come down to Rs. 4-12 per maund. It appears from the Calcutta Gazette, as well as from information I have received from the mufassal, that in seven districts of Bengal coarse rice is being sold at 7 seers per rupee and it is expected to come down further. Sir, if the export of rice is not allowed from India to foreign countries, the result will be disastrous, because the cultivators will decline to cultivate rice and will give preference to the cultivation of jute and other commercial products. It will appear from page 64 of the Government report on the inquiry of the rise of prices in India by Mr. K. L. Dutt, that the area of cultivation of jute has gone up from 1 to 1-4 per cent, but the area of cultivation of rice and other food-grains has come down from 81-3 to 78-2 per cent. And if, Sir, the prohibition of the export of rice be continued further, I am sure that will end in making a further reduction in the area of cultivation and the price of rice after a year or so would be prohibitive. Sir, if this state of things be continued, the trade in rice in India is sure to be diverted to other countries. Sir, India is not the only country in the world which produces rice; Siam is one of the countries, which produces a very heavy quantity of rice. There was a famine last year and the French Government were quite justified in prohibiting the export of rice from Siam to foreign countries. But this year, owing to there being a good crop, though not so much as in Bengal and not to speak of Burma, the French Government have been pleased to allow the export of rice from Siam to foreign countries. It appears also from official papers that 750,000 tons of rice are expected to be exported this year from Siam to foreign countries. Similarly in the case of Saigon last year 1,300,000 tons of rice was allowed to be exported; and this year, as it appears from the report of the Director of Publicity, Burma, double the quantity is expected to be exported. Thus, Sir, there will come a time, if the export is not resumed, when the trade of India would be diverted to a great extent to other rice-producing countries. And we shall have a very bad result, because foreigners will be habituated to the use of Siam and Saigon rice instead of the Bengal rice.

Sir, my friend is under the impression—and that is the general impression of the public—that if the export of rice is resumed, its price will be prohibitive and a very heavy quantity of rice will be exported. That is, Sir, a very difficult question, I admit; but on inquiry I find that there are two things which stand in its way: I mean the credit of foreign countries and good crops in the other rice-producing countries of the world—and specially the rate of freight from Calcutta to foreign countries.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): You have exceeded the time-limit.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I ask for your special permission to go on, as it is an important subject.

The PRESIDENT: I am sorry I cannot go on allowing an infringement of the time-limit rule.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: We have listened to three speeches from three distinct points of view and it will probably save the time of the Council if I intervene at this stage and explain what the attitude of Government is. In the first place, it is important to remember, as Babu Amulya Dhone Addy has pointed out, that this is a matter entirely for the decision of the Government of India. It is a central subject as it is technically called in the rules in connection with the Reforms Scheme, and all we can do with regard to the matter is to suggest or to recommend. That being so, it is rather surprising to me that none of the members who have spoken to-day have referred to the very important pronouncement of policy which was made by the Government of India on the 4th of December last. I do not complain of this omission; I know that there has necessarily been a great deal of ignorance and misapprehension as to the policy of the Government of India in regard to the rice trade. That policy has varied from time to time during the last three years; as conditions have changed, the orders on the subject have been altered; and it is not surprising that the general public and the members of this Council are not fully cognisant of what the policy of the Government of India for the time being is. I welcome this opportunity, therefore, of dispelling the misapprehensions which exist on the subject.

In the press communiqué of the 4th December last, to which I have already referred, the Government of India explain that in view of the recent heavy fall in the world prices of rice, it has been decided to modify considerably the system of control over the export of Burma rice to foreign countries—that is, the export overseas, with which the main resolution deals. They then discuss certain details regarding the prices of Burma rice, with which we are not concerned to-day, and go on to estimate that the total surplus rice available for export from Burma during the current year—1921—will amount approximately to 2,100,000 tons. They then say that the average amount of Burma rice taken by India previous to the introduction of control was about 850,000 tons annually; but, to be on the safe side, they estimate the needs of India at a maximum of 1,100,000 tons; that leaves a balance of 1,000,000 tons which has been allotted to export to foreign countries, subject to license from the Rice Commissioner in Burma. The important point to note about these orders is that they apply only to the export of rice from Burma. The Government of India clearly say that the existing prohibition on the export of rice from India proper to foreign countries will be retained, and that they believe that these measures will suffice to conserve adequate supplies for the consumer, both in India and in Burma, while ensuring that these supplies shall be available at reasonably cheap prices. I submit, therefore, that the action taken by the Government of India is in precise accord with what the mover of the resolution proposes. They have prohibited the export of rice from India altogether, but they have allowed the export of 1,000,000 tons from Burma, after taking care to see that the needs of Burma and of India are satisfied. I do not see what more the Government of India could have done, even if they had my friend at their elbow while they were formulating their policy.

I will now turn to the point of view advocated by Babu Amulva Dhone Addy that the time has come for the abolition of all restrictions on the export of rice from India overseas. He has practical acquaintance with the rice trade which I cannot claim to possess; and his views, which I believe are shared by many other members of this Council, are entitled to every respect. But, here again, we are up against the fact that this is an all-India question, and we are bound to carry out the orders of the Government of India on this subject; they have of course a much wider knowledge of all-India requirements and of the world requirements at large, than any provincial Government can possibly have. I have little doubt that the Government of India are anxious to get rid of control as soon as they feel that they can do so without undue risk to the interests of the rice consumer in India. But, Sir, from their recent declaration of policy, it would appear that they are of opinion that the time for doing away with the existing prohibition on the export of rice has not yet come. They will decide for themselves when the times comes. All that we can do at present is to submit to them the views which have been expressed in this Council on the subject, and that we will do.

I now turn to the amendment, which asks the local Government to take steps immediately to put a stop to the export of rice from Bengal beyond such surplus quantity as may remain after meeting the demands of the province. This, of course, is a very different matter to the main resolution. The amendment raises the question of the control of inter-provincial rice exports. That is a subject with a long and complicated history behind it, but I am afraid I must go into that history because most of the members are unacquainted with it, but I will endeavour to make my remarks as brief as possible. In the autumn of 1918, the food situation was causing anxiety throughout the greater part of India. There were apparent reasons for apprehending a serious shortage of food in some provinces, due partly to the dislocation of trade caused by the long-drawn-out war but principally and to an even more important degree due to the shortage of the harvests in various parts of India. The Government of India therefore determined to meet the crisis which had arisen, by the institution of a system of control of inter-provincial rice exports. At that time, these measures were received with some alarm in Bengal, which had a bountiful harvest with a yield exceeding 8,000,000 tons during each of the years 1915, 1916 and 1917. The feeling of alarm in Bengal was voiced in the Imperial Legislative Council by the Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manendra Chandra Nandi of Cossimbazar, who asked what measures Government proposed to take for finding adequate markets for the overstocked province of Bengal. In reply, the Government of India stated that the surplus of the Bengal stocks would be wanted for other provinces; and, as a matter of fact, at that time, they treated Bengal as a surplus province. The Prices Inquiry Committee, to which reference has been made in the course of the debate, found fault with the Government of India's treatment of Bengal during the autumn of 1918, and have complained that the result of that action was to denude Bengal of its rice stock and to reduce the people to the brink of starvation. That is one of the disadvantages of control—that any action you take must be taken on incomplete information and that it will result in injury to someone or other and will naturally cause the injured person to develop a sense of grievance. This is the difficulty which Babu Amulya Dhone Addy has mentioned—the difficulty of ascertaining, for the purposes of this amendment, or even of the main resolution, the surplus quantity, after meeting the demands of the province or of the country. I am not going now to enter into any defence of the action taken by the Government of India. That will be done when we publish our resolution on the report of the Prices Inquiry Committee. I will go on with the history. The system of controlled export of the assumed Bengal rice surplus—if the members prefer that term—to other provinces which began in the autumn of 1918 was followed by a rapid rise in the price of rice in Bengal itself. It may be observed that I say that the institution of control over exports, was followed by a rise in price, because I do not admit that this system was the sole or even the main cause of the rise in price. A more important factor in the situation was probably, that the outturn of the 1918 rice crop in Bengal was less than 7,000,000 tons as compared with 8,000,000 tons in the three preceding years. However this may be, between January and August, 1919, the mean provincial price of rice in Bengal rose from Rs. 5-8 per maund to Rs. 10 per maund; and as most members of the Council will remember, there was during the rains of 1919 much perturbation throughout Bengal, amounting almost to a panic. The Government of India were approached and asked to restrict rice exports from Bengal, and in June, 1919, the Government of India reduced the allotments of Bengal rice for export to other provinces and arranged for the import of considerable quantities of Burma rice into Bengal. As a result the situation in Bengal improved considerably and prices between August and December, 1919, fell rapidly from Rs. 10 to Rs. 7 per maund; here again the situation was probably relieved to a great extent by the fact that the 1919 rice harvest was again a good one, the outturn again rising to about 8,000,000 tons. When prices began to improve in Bengal the Government of India suggested in October, 1919, that the control over rice exports from Bengal should be removed, but the Bengal Government objected and pressed for retention of the control until February, 1920, when the rice from the 1919 harvest would have come on to the market. In January, 1920, the Government of India again pressed for the removal of inter-provincial control; but the Bengal Government urged that, if this action were taken, there would be a considerable risk that the fall in prices would be arrested, and pointed out that in the conditions of the market as they then existed, the psychological effect of the removal of rice control would be out of proportion to the volume of export. In March, 1920, the Government of India raised the question for the third time and again asked the local Government to abolish the control, but the Bengal Government again urged that the situation was just beginning to show signs of stability and deprecated any change, unless it could be alleged that the conservation of supplies in Bengal was doing harm to the rest of India. The Government of India were not, however, moved from their purpose; and at the end of March, 1920, all restrictions on inter-provincial movements of rice were removed, and there have been no restrictions since. The amendment that we are now considering, asks us to move the Government of India to reimpose restrictions on the inter-provincial movements of rice, and we cannot hope to move the Government of India successfully in this matter unless we can show them that the removal of restrictions in March, 1920, was followed by disastrous results over the province, or that we have reason to believe that such disastrous results are likely to arise in the near future. I will, therefore, proceed with the history of events subsequent to the removal of control in March, 1920. First with regard to the question of price. The price of rice rose slowly and fairly steadily from Rs. 7 a maund at the end of March, 1920, to nearly Rs. 9 a maund in September. But a very large part of this rise must be ascribed, not to the removal of control, but to the ordinary seasonal increase in the price of rice which usually occurs during the hot weather and the early part of the rains, after the harvest of the previous season has been disposed of, and before the prospects of the coming harvest can be properly estimated. Even more important than the question of prices, is the question of the actual exports of rice from Bengal which took place after the removal of control. During the six months following March, 1920, the total exports both by rail and river from Bengal amounted to only 97,832 tons, out of a total harvest of over 8 million tons. We may very fairly say, therefore, that the quantity exported on the removal of restrictions was negligible; and both in respect of prices, and in respect of export, the action taken by the Government of India in March, 1920, against the wishes of the Bengal Government must be held to have justified itself, and the gloomy forebodings were not justified. Since September last, the price of rice has fallen steadily from Rs. 9 a maund to rather less than Rs. 7 per maund. I believe it is now about Rs. 6-8. The price is not as low as we should like to see it, of course; it is not as low as it was before the war; but the Council are well aware that India is not the only country in which prices have increased to a very large extent since the war; and the latest statement prepared by the Director of Statistics of the prices of necessaries of life in the different countries of the world, shows that the rise in prices in India is very much less than what has occurred in any other country. In Belgium, prices have gone up by 353 per cent., in France by 273 per cent.; in Great Britain by 164 per cent.; in the United States of America by 86 per cent.; while in India they have gone up by only 66 per cent. I think we must admit, therefore, that India has suffered less from the dislocation of business caused by the war than any other country; and that the state of affairs in India, regrettable though it is, as pressing hardly on the poorer masses of the population, cannot be described as such as to justify extraordinary measures of interference with the normal flow of trade.

Another factor in our favour is that the 1920 rice harvest has again been a good one, amounting to over 8 million tons; we have no reason to anticipate any serious rise in price in the near future—certainly not a rise approaching the panic price which prevailed in 1919. I submit, therefore, that we have no case on any grounds for asking the Government of India to reinstitute measures of control over the inter-provincial export of rice. I need not weary the Council by recounting in detail what the theoretical objections to control are. They will be found in any handbook of Political Economy. I will only mention a few facts which are on record as to the serious disadvantages which we found in the matter of control. There were constant complaints, while control was in force, that its interference with the normal channels of trade conduced to deficiency in supplies in areas where they were most needed, and that the difficulties and delay attendant on the opening of new channels inevitably conduced to a rise in prices. The delay involved in obtaining priority certificates intensified the difficulty of obtaining supplies, at least temporarily, while it was a frequent cause of complaint that merchants after obtaining priority certificates did not use them, and that supplies which were expected or required in a particular locality never reached that locality. It is certain that restrictions on traffic created an artificial shortage of supplies and an artificial high level of prices in many areas, although it may have had benefits in other areas, which to some extent counterbalanced the disadvantages of the system. We need not attempt to-day to decide whether the measures which were taken in 1918 and 1919 were justified by the results. I think we may take it as certain that control of the rice trade or any other trade is an evil in itself and that we ought not to impose such an evil unless we are reasonably certain that it will enable us to counteract greater evils. That is not the case to-day. The evils which exist from the present scale of prices are not sufficient to justify the dislocation of trade which would be caused by the reimposition of measures of control, and it is by no means certain that control would have the result of bringing down prices faster than they will come down of themselves if they are left to take their normal course. At any rate, the local Government feel that they have no sufficient justification for asking the Government of India to reimpose control on the inter-provincial movements of rice in India itself. If there was any justification, the local Government would not hesitate to move the Government of India on the subject. The history, which I have given, shows that the Bengal Government have never hesitated to ask the Government of India to impose, or to continue measures of control, even when such action was against the policy and the wishes of the Government of India. But at present the Bengal Government feel that they have no ground to move the Government of India to take such action. The Bengal Government's attitude in regard to this question may therefore be summed up as follows. We have no objection to the main resolution of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri because it merely describes what is at present the declared policy of the Government of India in regard to the exportation of rice from India overseas. We are not, however, prepared to accept the amendment or ask the Government of India to take action in accordance with the proposal contained in it. The record of this discussion will, however, as I have said before, be submitted to the Government of India for consideration.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: It is in response to a call of duty, not only to myself but to the country, that I rise to accord my unhesitating support to the resolution which has just been placed before the House by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. It is a fact which may not be known to many of us that it is India (which includes Burma), as well as Indo-China and Siam, which supplies the necessities of the rest of the world. In the year 1913—I have got figures to show—these three countries between themselves supplied 94·1 per cent. The actual quantity was 24½ lakhs of tons. The three countries to which India sent out her rice were the United Kingdom, Ceylon and the Straits Settlements. While Ceylon consumed the whole of it, it is significant that the United Kingdom re-exported a large quantity of what she took. The same remark applies to the Straits Settlements also. I do not, as a matter of principle, oppose exports from India of any commodities whatever, but the question is whether or not the time has come when the Government should impose restrictions upon export of rice. Sir John Kerr has told us that such a course was called for in 1918 and that course was adopted with the sanction of the Government of India on the recommendation of the Government of Bengal. That shows undoubtedly that the Government of Bengal is solicitous of the welfare of the people and that they are sympathetic. Hon'ble Mr. Kerr now says that there is no occasion whatsoever for making this recommendation to the Government of India. Sir, we should remember one fact, and that is this. There has been a bumper crop this year all over Bengal. That is the report. My friend, Babu Amulya Dhone Addy, has said so, and I do not differ from him in this respect. May I ask then, Sir, if there is such a bumper crop, which is admitted on all hands, why is it that the prices do not come down? What is the reason? Last year the prices ranged between Rs. 6-8 and Rs. 7-2 at the producing centre. I refer to Bakarganj. That is my information. But this year, Sir, the prices in the producing centre are ranging between Rs. 7 and Rs. 7-2. Why is this so? The reason is not far to seek. It is because large quantities are being sent out of the country and large quantities are being held by persons for the foreign market—by profiteers as my friend on the left puts it into my mouth. They are holding this immense stock and all this is meant for the foreign market. I think the time has come for us to make some recommendation to the Government of India, and unless this is done, can you imagine what will happen in June and July when the prices invariably go up? there is a difference—a normal difference—of Re. 1-8 per maund between the prices in the season time and in June and July. It is Rs. 7 now in the producing centre and in Calcutta Rs. 9-8 or Rs. 10. I hold in my hands at the present moment a comparative statement showing the price which ruled in December, 1919, and in December, 1920. It is this. The price in 1919 was Rs. 8 per maund, whereas it was as high as Rs. 8-8 to Rs. 9 per maund in December, 1920. And, Sir, we apprehend a further increase in the price of rice in future. Provision should be made against that. I sound the tocsin of alarm. I ask the Government to take time by the forelock and I am glad that assurances have been given to us by Hon'ble Mr. Kerr that, if the occasion demands, such a recommendation would be made by this Government to the Government of India. I hope that the contingency will not arise. But I apprehend that there will be a serious rise in price if export is not prohibited and the inter-provincial restrictions are not re-imposed from now. I plead for the poor. It is the sacred duty of the Government to save the lives of millions of people which are entrusted to their care. Last year, we were sorry to note, at least seven persons died of sheer starvation or committed suicide in my own district because they could not get food. I hold in my hands a document which gives the details. This report is for September, 1920. It is a Government report and it shows that death in one case was due to poverty, in another case to poverty and illness, in another case, partly on account of illness and partly on account of starvation, and so on. These are of course isolated cases and they do not mean much. I admit that. But are these reports full enough, are they comprehensive enough, having regard to the fact that they are generally gathered from the village chaukidars?

It is my earnest prayer to Government that they should give us this assurance that, if necessary, the restrictions on the inter-provincial export of rice should be re-imposed. I can give this House an idea of the actual quantity of rice which passed out of Calcutta during the nine months from April, 1919, to January, 1920. This shows that during this period the exports were 42 lakhs of maunds. In the year 1919-20 it was 22 lakhs, but this report is not conclusive because it merely shows the exports by sea, foreign and coastways. Unfortunately we have no statistics whatsoever for showing what quantities actually passed out of Calcutta by rail, by boat and by canal. If they were available we could have certainly shown that the exports from Calcutta very much exceeded 22 lakhs. There is another fact: the Government statistics—the statistics of the Government of India—have given us some figures of the exports, but unfortunately those statistics do not show what quantities were actually purchased by Government and sent out of the country by their chartered vessels. That is the position of the rice trade in Bengal. While Bengal produces rice, which is the principal food-stuff of the country, in such huge quantities, I cannot understand why her people should die of starvation. This is a question which I have not been able to understand, that in a country which produces the food-stuff and sends out millions of tons to different countries, how is it that in that very country the people should die of starvation and pay fancy and famine prices for their food-grains? I therefore venture to say with confidence that our Government will agree with us that it is absolutely necessary to keep down the prices within a reasonable limit, so that the people may not die of starvation. There is no denying the fact that the people of Bengal are poor. We have the considered opinion of no less an authority than His Excellency the Viceroy and the present Secretary of State. What we do want is that the poor people who are already feeling the pinch of poverty may not die of starvation. Whether this can be achieved by the imposition of restrictions upon exports from province to province or by the adoption of some other like measure does not matter. It ought to be remembered that 208 millions of people of India live on cultivation; they are poor. If the price of rice is Rs. 8 per maund a man requires 5 maunds for his own use, which means Rs. 40 in rice alone. And what is the average income of one individual in our poor country? I believe I do not use any language of exaggeration when I say that it does not very much exceed Rs. 40 a year, and apart from that, how much tax has he got to pay? That is the reason why I pray that all of us should unite in our demand for a sheer act of justice. It is the duty of Government to see that none of His Majesty's subjects in our country perished from hunger and that the prices of food-stuffs were kept down within reasonable limits. I do not suggest for a moment that the export should be completely stopped and that rice should not be allowed to go out. Let the rice be sent out by all means, but let sufficient stocks be kept in our country for feeding the people who are tilling the fields and producing rice.

At this stage the member, having reached the time-limit, had to resume his seat.

Mr. C. W. RHODES: After hearing the lucid statement of the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, I should have not have wished to intervene in the debate but for the fact that at the close of the debate I heard Mr. Kerr say that a record of this discussion will be forwarded to Delhi and under such circumstances I think it is necessary to state the views of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on the subject of control.

In the first instance, may I congratulate the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr on the Knighthood bestowed upon him by the last speaker? I am sure he only anticipates His Majesty's action by a very short space of time. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr in his trenchant speech draws attention to the fact that we are only holding this discussion by the courtesy of His Excellency the Governor. Under Rule 17 of the Devolution Rules this is an Imperial subject and not a provincial one. Ample justification for this is to be found in the amendment which has been moved. It is obviously the desire of Mr. Dutta to build a commercial wall around Bengal in order that we may enjoy the harvest produced in the province while our neighbours in the Central Provinces, where I believe there is a shortage, are left to their fate. I can assure the Council that the commercial community are heartily sick both of high prices and of control. We want to get back to normal trading, and we believe that it is in the interest of the people themselves that we should do so as soon as possible. After the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr's statement I am quite prepared to acquiesce in the resolution, but I would strongly urge that control should not continue a single hour longer than is absolutely necessary. So long as control exists and so long as trade is hampered, there is no hope of resumption of pre-war conditions. In other words, there is no hope of removing the present burden of high prices which admittedly presses so heavily on the people. I do not wish to enter deeply into the thorny question of exchange. The effect of placing restrictions on the export of rice and wheat causes the people of this country to pay more for their cloth and for everything else they import. The last speaker has mentioned sad cases of suicide, owing to poverty. This poverty, we were told two years ago, caused suicide because the people could not clothe themselves. In other words, what the people will gain in rice purchase they will lose in buying their cloth. Mr. Dutta would not care, he tells us, whether all the import or export trade is abolished. He would like India to produce its own cloth. He probably does not realise that the Bombay mills were working almost up to the fullest pressure last year, and yet Bengal for its requirements had to import 40 crores worth of cloth from Japan and Europe. I am quite willing to support the resolution, but the commercial community here strongly urge the Government of India to relax all control at the earliest possible date, not only in the interest of commerce but chiefly in the interest of the people.

Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: I am sorry I have to oppose the resolution proposed by my friend. The question of the prohibition of the export of rice even in famine times was carefully gone into by Lord Northbrook in 1873, and it was not found advisable to impose any restriction on the free flow of export and import even in times of scarcity and famine. During the war, the export of rice was controlled, and I have personal knowledge of the inconveniences of restriction. It does not bring down prices; but on the other hand, it makes a free and full supply difficult. Moreover, it will be extremely difficult to arrive at the exact figure in calculating what amount will be required for consumption and what surplus will be left for exportation. Then there is a large Indian population in Ceylon, Natal and the West Indies who use Indian rice; and if a free supply is denied them they will be very much inconvenienced and result in a loss to India. Any restriction on the free export of rice will be a source of loss to the bulk of the population who are agriculturists and their interest should on no account be overlooked. We know about 90 per cent. of the people of Bengal depend on agriculture and they will have to accept lower prices for rice if export is restricted, while they will have to pay high prices for other necessities of life.

Under the circumstances, I cannot help opposing the resolution which, if accepted, will seriously interfere with trade.

Rai ABINASH CHANDRA BANERJEE Bahadur: After hearing the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr's speech on the subject, all that I should like to say is that as Government are willing to take action in accordance with the resolution of the mover, I think the mover of the amendment should withdraw it and the resolution be passed by the House.

Raja MANIOLL SINCH ROY: The policy of the mover provides the surest means of frustrating his object.

Nothing stimulates home production like export trade. What is it which stimulates the manufacture of cotton goods in Lancashire and the cultivation of jute in Bengal? If we borrow our political institutions from England, why should we not study the economic history of England, and see whether England's experience is of any use to us?

Four hundred years ago in the reign of King Henry VIII, when Babar was the Emperor at Delhi, conditions in England were compatible in some respects with those now prevailing in Bengal. Prices were rising, and wages, as is usual, were not rising as rapidly as prices, and there was industrial unrest. The demand of Europe for English wool caused a tendency in England to substitute sheep farming for wheat growing, even as the world's demand for jute has led many cultivators in Bengal to grow jute to their profit in place of rice. King Henry VIII tried in two ways to meet this situation. He first tried to restrict sheep farming, as some people wish to restrict jute growing. In this attempt he failed altogether, for the simple reason that nothing has ever prevented the cultivator from growing the crop which pays him best. Later he adopted the policy of encouraging the export of wheat, and he and his successors actually gave bounties on exported wheat, and by this means he encouraged farmers to grow wheat with the knowledge that if there was a bumper crop and a surplus they would nevertheless get a good price for their produce.

If effect be given to this resolution, then 10 per cent. of the people of the province who are non-agriculturists will be benefited no doubt. But in Bengal 90 per cent. of the people are agriculturists and they will suffer by it. If we do not always hear a great outcry amongst the masses for the high price of cloth and other everyday necessities of life, it is for the reason of their getting a better price for rice, the produce of their lands. If the price of rice only is reduced, leaving other things as they are, then it will be very hard on the said 90 per cent., and as a rural representative I oppose the resolution.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I wish very much that my friend, the mover of the resolution, had waited for the publication of the Government resolution on the report of the High Prices Inquiry Committee, which sat in pursuance of a resolution of the old Council in the months of August, September, October and November. I was the Chairman of that committee and my friend, Babu Kishori Mohan

Chaudhuri, was one of its members. For four months we took evidence and went into the question as thoroughly as could be done in the circumstances. It appears that the high prices of all food-stuffs, which now prevail in the country, are intimately connected with the export of food-stuffs overseas and also inter-provincially. That was the conclusion at which we arrived. We as members of the old Council moved resolution after resolution in the year 1919 and in the year 1920 for the Government to take such steps as might be necessary to reduce the price of food-stuffs and other necessities of life. So far as we are aware and as the evidence before us disclosed, the Government of India were not very sympathetic towards Bengal. In fact, last year in spite of the protest of the Government of Bengal, the Government of India removed the restrictions on the inter-provincial export of rice. My friend, Babu Amulya Dhone Addy, has said that we cannot ascertain what the surplus quantity of rice in the country is and we must do away with all restrictions as to the export of rice. Well, it is a well-known fact, which has been established by statisticians and others in this country, that we require in normal times 50 millions of tons of food-stuffs for the people of this country, and 15 millions of tons of food-stuffs for the cattle, i.e., we require 65 millions of tons of food-stuffs for human consumption and for cattle. We can very well ascertain what the produce of the country is. If that can be done and if we are convinced, and if the Government are convinced also that we have got not only 65 millions of tons of food-stuffs in the country but also excess quantity, then of course Government can remove all restrictions on the export of rice or any other food-stuffs. We also know that we must guard against eventualities. We hear of famines once in three or four years, and unless there be not only surplus crops but reserve stocks for the people of this country we ought not to allow indiscriminate export of rice from the country. I said in 1919 in moving a resolution about the high prices of food-stuffs that, whenever the produce of the country exceeds the wants of the people, the surplus could be freely exported, that is to say, any food-stuffs in excess of the requirements of the people could be exported to any foreign country that was in need of such food-stuffs. It is not only the people of Bengal but also the Darjeeling tea planters who raised the tocsin of alarm in the year 1919. They said, I mean the Darjeeling Planters' Association, in the year 1919 in a petition which they submitted to the Government that the export of rice from Bengal ought to be stopped at once on the principle that the people must have sufficient to feed them before any Government would allow any exportation, and that measures should be taken for the import of Burma rice to this country. So it appears that in a country where we have got at least such a stock as is sufficient to maintain the people of this country the people starve and the people have to purchase rice at famine prices. Formerly in this country when the price of rice rose to Rs. 6 it was considered as famine price. Now, however, what do we find? Rupees 8-8 for coarse balam rice! In this year when we hear that there is a bumper crop all round the country and in all the provinces, what do we find? I hear from Mr. Tarit Bhushan Roy, who is probably an authority on the subject, that in the field the price is Rs. 7-8. In the last week of December I heard that in the Diamond Harbour subdivision of the 24-Parganas district the price of rice was Rs. 5, but within a very short time the price rose to Rs. 7 and Rs. 7-8, a price which is much more than famine price. It is the duty and solemn duty of Government to take all possible steps to ameliorate the condition of the people and to take such steps as may be necessary to place the staple article of food of all of us within the means of the people.

In July, 1920, in moving a resolution about the high prices of food, I said that the Government which carries on the administration of the country, ought to know the exact reason for this abnormal rise in price. It was then stated that the high price was due to speculative trading with a view to export. When, however, it was notified by Government that free export would not be allowed, the price of rice declined to a certain extent. So you will be pleased to see that the high price of our food-stuffs is intimately connected with export, i.e., if you prohibit export then there is a certain fall in the price of our food-stuffs. That being the case, I hope the Government will take such steps as may be necessary to prohibit the export of rice. In fact, that is also one of the recommendations of our committee. We see that during the progress of the war export of rice from Bengal declined from 1916 to 1918, leading to a lowering of price. After the armistice with the increase in shipping facilities the export increased, and consequently the price of rice in Bengal went up. Under these circumstances I support the resolution of my friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: As so many members in this Council have spoken on the resolution, silence on the part of the representative of the landholders of Bengal might be misunderstood by the House. I therefore rise to oppose the resolution as well as the amendment. The Government took an extraordinary measure in stopping the export of rice only to meet an extraordinary situation brought about by the war and the failure of the rice crop in several parts of India. But, Sir, circumstances are quite different now, and the Government of India were quite justified in removing the restrictions from India proper. We have no objection to a judicious regulation of export, but to stop the export of rice altogether, as suggested by the mover of the resolution, is a most serious affair and would only result in a considerable fall in the price of rice. This, Sir, in turn will greatly affect the interests of the cultivators, whose main source of income is the price which they obtain by selling their surplus produce. The zamindars would also suffer in consequence; but the stoppage of export will not help our countrymen much, as my esteemed friend seems to think. The Bengal cultivators, who form the bulk of the population, are clever enough to keep sufficient stock in hand. They only sell what they grow in excess of their requirements and this enables them to pay their rent and meet other expenses. The only section of the public who would be benefited by this measure is a small section of landless people, but these people have other sources of income, and the general rise in wages has placed them nowadays in a much better position than the raiyats of the country. It would be most improper to help these people at the cost of the cultivators and, I may say, zamindars. I therefore oppose the resolution as well as the amendment.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I rise to support whole-heartedly the resolution moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. It is with a very laudable object that this resolution has been brought before the House. I think the resolution wants to supply the cultivators of Bengal with their necessities of life and to save them from the various diseases which they are subject to. I think no other measure would be so beneficial to the peasantry of Bengal as this one. Last year we heard that there were many suicides on account of the scarcity of rice, but this year I find that some members suggest that it would be detrimental to the interests of the peasantry of Bengal if the export is going to be stopped. The cultivators who produce rice generally live from hand to mouth; they do not require more than a small piece of cloth round their loins in this warm climate, but they cannot live without food. As they have to labour very hard under the scorching sun they must have food in sufficient quantity. I do not agree with the gentlemen who say that it would be detrimental to the interests of the peasantry if rice be made cheap. Our first duty is to consider how we can ensure two full meals for the cultivators every day, but we do not want to stop the export of any surplus quantity. It is said that this year there is a prospect of a good crop in Bengal, but the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has said it is not a bumper crop. I beg to remind the House that the scarcity of last year was due to the export of paddy from this land, so we should not be so improvident now because there is a prospect of a good crop. There are places where on account of the early rains or rain when it was not wanted, the yield of crop has not been as it should have been; the outturn is really very poor. Therefore I say that it behoves us to make such provision as is necessary for the peasantry of Bengal. It is said that Java would not supply us with sugar if we did not supply paddy to them. I submit our peasantry is not very fond of sugar, but they care more for a better quality of rice than that which comes from Burma. They consider the Burma rice most unpalatable, and it is only at the time of famine they take Burma rice though most reluctantly. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has said that the stoppage of export is a matter for the consideration of the Government of India, but in this resolution we also ask that the Government of India be approached on the subject. Since the High Prices Committee, which was formed by Government, have suggested (according to the statement of our Deputy-President) that the surplus export should be stopped, I do think we ought to support them. It is very shortsighted policy to suggest that because some people have surplus paddy they must be allowed to export. The resolution aims at conferring the greatest good on the greatest number. We must take into consideration the interests of the peasantry of Bengal and not of a few paddy dealers. I therefore whole-heartedly support the resolution of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri.

I beg to submit that I cannot support the amendment moved by my friend, Mr. Dutta. Bengal is bounded by Bihar, Assam, Burma and other provinces. If there is a stoppage of export from Bengal the Biharis will resent it. Purnea is the bordering district of Dinajpur. When there is scarcity of crop in Dinajpur people go to Purnea or Malda. If you are going to stop export from Dinajpur to Purnea they may in turn do so, so there will be recrimination, which is not desirable. We must stop the export to foreign countries only and not to other provinces. I therefore oppose the amendment.

SECRETARY to GOVERNMENT, COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

(Mr. A. Marr): I only wish to point out to the Council that the resolution moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri has already been accepted by Government and accurately represents the position taken up by the Government of India. Therefore it seems to be rather a waste of the time of the Council to discuss this resolution at all. I think the discussion might well be confined to the question of restriction of inter-provincial export of rice as moved in the amendment of Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta.

The PRESIDENT: I now call on the mover of the amendment to reply if he chooses.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: First of all, as regards the question of jurisdiction that has been raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, I should like to say that when this resolution and the amendment have been allowed by the President I think we have enough jurisdiction to bring it here and discuss it as much as possible. Moreover, when we find that the people of Bengal are suffering on account of high prices of rice, it is the duty of every member of this Council to bring up the subject and send their representation to the Bengal Government for approaching the Government of India. This is a very small matter, and I do not wish to say much. Sir, the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has pointed out that three times the Government of India approached the Government of Bengal to take away the restrictions on inter-provincial movement of rice and the Bengal Government refused to listen twice, but on the third occasion they were overruled. I should like to know the reason why three times the Bengal Government refused to remove restrictions; they must have had good reasons. Mr. Kerr has asked whether the removal of the restrictions in March, 1920, has been followed by anything extraordinary in Bengal to justify us in going up to the Government of India to impose restrictions again. I have got a piece of paper—a supplement to the Calcutta Gazette of 29th December, 1920, a month and half ago—which contains information about six cases of death due to privation and starvation. Is it not enough to take up this question seriously? I think that if there is one death which is due to high prices, that is enough for any civilised Government to take steps to prevent such privations. I think there is enough justification to induce the Government of Bengal to go up to the Government of India again to impose restrictions on the inter-provincial movement of rice.

Sir, Babu Anulva Dhone Addy has said that the area under cultivation of rice is already going down, and, if we lower the price of rice, it will go down more and more, but I am afraid he has not looked into the facts as far as Bengal is concerned. I find that in 1911-12 the area under cultivation was 20 million acres and in 1918-19 it was 21,330,000 acres. That does not show diminution, but that it is going up, and I hope it will go up gradually, especially when we find that the price of rice is going down year after year. I have said what I have got to say. Many members who have been pleased to support the resolution of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri have suggested that our first duty is to see that prices in Bengal go down. I should like to ask them, will stoppage of export from India serve that purpose? Unless this question of inter-provincial movement is taken up separately, the price of rice will not go down, so I request the members to consider this question favourably and vote in favour of my amendment.

Mr. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: As this is a very important resolution I think it would be an infringement of the right of reasonable debate if I put the closure now.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I do not think that any reply is necessary as the Government is going to accept my resolution. I do not say that all the other recommendations of the High Prices Committee should be rejected, but I say that, pending the consideration of those questions, this main proposal of mine should be considered first and the export from India over and above the surplus quantity should be stopped.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I propose that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: The Council stands adjourned till 6-5 p.m.

The Council re-assembled at 6-5 p.m. Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta's amendment was then put and lost. The original motion was then put.

The PRESIDENT: I think that the Ayes have it.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: If it is your decision that the Aye have it, I will not press for a division.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY Bahadur: I press for a division.

Raja MANILOLL SINGH ROY: I support this.

Supply of Gazettes, etc.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "This Council recommends to the Government that steps be taken by the local Government to arrange for a regular supply free of cost to the members of the Bengal Legislative Council of the Calcutta Gazette and other Bengal Government publications, and the legislative portion and the portion containing the proceedings of the Legislatures of the India Gazette and all other provincial Gazettes."

Without taking up time I simply submit this resolution for the consideration of the House. If we are to do any legislative work, if we are to render any help to the Legislature, I think we should be well informed. Economy and efficiency must go hand in hand. As I understand that my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr is going to make a statement on behalf of the Government in this matter, I think no speech on my part is necessary.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): This is a comparatively simple matter, but it touches the convenience of all the members of this House. It will be convenient if I say at once what Government propose to do about it.

In the old Legislative Council there were definite rules about the supply of official literature to members. These rules, so far as we know, worked satisfactorily and we propose to continue them, and to modify them later, if experience shows this to be necessary. So far as the publications of the Bengal Government are concerned, each member will receive a copy of the Calcutta Gazette which is published weekly, a copy of the Bengal Civil List which is published quarterly, and a copy of the proceedings of this Council as soon as they are printed.

As regards the other publications of the Bengal Government there are a considerable number of them. The Book Depot issues a monthly list of the publications published during the month. A copy of this list will be sent to each member of the Council, and he will be asked to mark on the list any publication which he wants to possess, and a copy will then be sent to him. I have here a copy of the latest list which was issued by the Book Depot. It includes the "Annual Return of the Lunatic Asylums in Bengal," the "Administration Report on the Bengal Jails," the "Triennial Report on the Registration Department" and the Report of the Committee which manages the Calcutta Zoo. (Laughter.)

I think very few members of this Council will desire to possess all of these publications; some members may not want to see them at all. Anyhow, I think it will be a convenient arrangement if members will be good enough to mark on the list the publications they want. So far as to the publications of the Bengal Government.

The resolution asks us, so far as I understand it, to supply each member, each individual member of this Council, with a complete set of the proceedings of all the other legislative bodies in India. This is rather a large order, larger perhaps than Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri realises. There are seven provincial Legislative Councils in India, excluding the Bengal Legislative Council, and there are two Imperial legislative bodies, the Council of State and the Indian Legislative Assembly. I do not know what the annual cost of the proceedings of these bodies will be, but if we assume that they will sit for 50 days a year on the average and issue their proceedings at the low cost of 8 annas a day, it will cost over Rs. 30,000 to supply each member of this Council with a complete set of these proceedings. I think the Council will agree with me that this would be an unnecessarily extravagant arrangement. Many of these proceedings will have no interest whatever for Bengal, and many Bengal members, I am sure, would consider it a nuisance rather than otherwise, to be supplied with mounds of literature in this way. What we propose to do, however, is to subscribe for a complete set of the publications of these legislative bodies. This set will be kept in the Council library here for reference. If we find that one set is insufficient, we shall subscribe for an additional set. We fully recognise, of course, that the increased activities of this Council will probably lead to an increased demand for official literature of various kinds, and if the demand arises, we will do our best to meet it as far as we reasonably can, but I think the Council will agree with me that things had better start in this way and develop as experience may show to be necessary instead of launching at once on the rather extravagant proposal contained in this resolution. I would therefore suggest to the member that he should withdraw his resolution on the understanding that arrangements will be made for the present on the lines which I have described, and that they will be developed as the need for development becomes apparent.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: After what has fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, I shall not press my resolution. The arrangement now proposed to be made will satisfy us for the present, and hereafter, if the activities of the Council increase, and we see any difficulty, we shall again approach the Government. I beg leave to withdraw the resolution.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Motions under section 52(1) of the Government of India Act.

Salaries of Ministers.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur moved "that the salary of a Minister be fixed at the amount of the salary of the Under-Secretary of State for India, i.e., at £1,500 a year."

It is rather hard for a man of a weak constitution like me to be called upon to speak at such a late hour of the day as half past six; but, Sir, I shall do my work.

I beg to move that the salary of a Minister be fixed at the amount of the salary of the Under-Secretary of State for India, i.e., at £1,500 a year. I have put the figure £1,500 not because I love pounds more than rupees, but I have put it just to point out that that is the salary of the Under-Secretary of State for India, that is, the salary which Lord Sinha got while he was in England. It is for that reason that I have put it in pounds. To me, Sir, there is no option left in this matter. This was the plank upon which I sought election from the graduates of Bengal and I cannot now recede from that position. Sir, the voice of the country has been expressed in unequivocal terms in a hundred public meetings. There have been public meetings in every district calling upon their representatives to vote for this resolution. Whether they will do their duty or not is not for me to see. There has been a meeting at Burdwan, the city of the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan, where they settled that the salary should be Rs. 1,000 a month. There has been a meeting at Krishnagar, the city of the Maharaja of Krishnagar, who sits in my front. But what these gentlemen will do now, I cannot say. Their duties are clear.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: May I rise to a point of order, Sir? I may be the Maharaja of Burdwan, but I am here as a Member of Government and I have nothing to do with public meetings at Burdwan.

The PRESIDENT: Yes, the speaker should make no personal reference to any member, direct or indirect.

Raj JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: The people of India are the poorest among the nations of the earth. They are so poor and consequently despised that the white settlers of Canada, Australia and South Africa refuse them admission on the ground of their lower standard of living. Now, Sir, let us see what these countries, proud of their wealth and high standard of living, pay to their Ministers. I find that in Canada the Prime Minister gets less than Rs. 3,000 a month. All the other high Ministers get less than Rs. 1,000 a month. In Australia, in New South Wales, there are 12 Chief Ministers, including the Prime Minister, who all together get £11,040, i.e., most of them get £800 a year each. In South Australia, £5,000 is allotted to the Prime Minister and five other Ministers, and six Ministers get about £810 a year each. In Queensland, the Premier and the Vice-President of the Executive Council get £1,300 each and the other Ministers get £1,000 a year each. In Tasmania, the Prime Minister gets £950 a year and the other Members of the Executive Council get £750 a year. In Western Australia, the Prime Minister gets £1,500 and the other Members of the Executive Council get £1,300 a year. In New Zealand, the Prime Minister gets £1,600 a year and the other Ministers and the Members of the Executive Council get £1,000 a year each. In South Africa, the Members of the Executive Council of the Governor-General, whose status and functions are analogous to those of the Governor-General of India, each gets £2,500 a year. In Japan—an Asiatic Empire—one of the greatest powers on earth, who conquered the Russians and founded the empire which is dreaded by the British themselves—so dreaded that they have sought an alliance with it for the protection of India—in that country what does the Prime Minister get? He gets Rs. 1,750 a month. Other Cabinet Ministers get about Rs. 1,200 a month each. In the United States, the Ministers get about Rs. 2,500 a month each. You must remember the United States is the richest country on earth—the creditor of Great Britain and France—whose debts Britain and France are finding it very difficult to pay. The Presidents of the Legislative Councils in Australia get about £750 a year. Sir, the duty of the representatives of the people is clear. They are to look to the interests of their countrymen first. But in this country we are guided by motives other than patriotic. We, being a subject race, always look to the men in power, and the men of wealth and men enjoying high salaries are our patrons and we are always anxious to go to their tea-parties, to dance attendance upon them and to vote just as they desire.

Sir, I have been pressed with many arguments, and even the threat of a dissolution of this House has been levelled at me. I cannot be guided by these considerations—hopes and fears should not influence the action of a man who wants to do his duty. Now, Sir, let us consider the objections to the reduction of salaries one by one. The first objection is that the Ministers require Rs. 64,000 because they will have to entertain their friends and high officials as the Members of the Council. But I do not desire that any entertainments should be given at the public expense. The objection has no weight with me. The second objection is that there should be a loss of prestige. Now, gentlemen, you all know that Mr. Hughes, Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Prime Ministers of Canada and Australia, whom the Sovereign delights to honour, and who are among the greatest statesmen in the British Empire, all get less than £2,000 a year. Has there been in their case a loss of prestige? Now, gentlemen, you all know that Count Ito got Rs. 1,706 a month. Was he on that account less revered than the greatest statesmen of Europe? Remember that Marshal Neogi, the conqueror of the Russians, whose commands 3 millions of Japanese soldiers regarded as the commands of God, and at whose command they rushed to fill up the ditches with their dead bodies, got only Rs. 1,000 a month.

Now, Sir, let us come to India. You have all heard about Chanakya, the great Kautilya, the exterminator of the Nandas of the Chandragupta. It was he who exterminated the great Imperial House of the Nandas, at the fame of whose power, the Greek soldiers under Alexander the Great recoiled in fear. These Nandas were exterminated by a poor Brahmin, Chanakya. And, you all know how he defeated the Greek invader, Seleucus the Great, and obtained for his master the daughter of the great Greek King for wife. But you have not heard of his boast that he, the exterminator of the Nandas, was descended from an ancient family of Rishis and that he took no remuneration from his master, the greatest Emperor of his time, whom he raised to power by his own efforts. He was poor in the world's riches, but was endowed beyond the common with the heritage of the learning of his ancestors.

Coming to later times, Vijnaneswara—many of you here have read his book, the Mitalshara—conquered for his master, Vikramaditya the Sixth of Kalyana, all the country from the snow-clad Himalayas to the seas in the south. He, the most learned among the jurists of India, was a mere Vaishnava Yogee who took nothing for himself. Coming to more modern times we come to Madhava—those of you who have read the Stories of Nations must have seen the picture of two poor young men, Bukka Roy and Harihar, who became the greatest kings of the south of India. Do you know by whom they were made kings? They were made kings by this Madhava—a poor Brahmin more learned than any man of his time, who took no salary whatsoever.

The PRESIDENT: I do not think that all what Madhava did, and so on, has anything to do with the resolution. You want indirectly to show that the Ministers of the present day in comparison with these persons are not half as good. I do not think that these arguments have any relevancy to the matter under discussion.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I am glad, however, that you stopped me when I finished the examples.

What I was going to tell you is this: that in ancient times in India the wealth of the country was with the Vaisyas and the Bannas and high salaries were never considered as a ground for prestige and honour. Prestige and honour were only conferred on learning and power. The argument based on prestige has therefore no weight with me, whose mind, fortunately or unfortunately, is steeped in the old ideas.

Next, we are told that there will be a difference in status, because of the difference in salary of an Executive Councillor and that of a Minister. When I gave notice of this motion, I also gave notice of a motion that this Council should recommend to the Supreme Government that the salary of an Executive Councillor should also be reduced. My motion was disallowed and thus we are helpless. But, what is in our power we ought to do. Mr. Dadabhai Naorji said 35 years ago in burning words that the high salaries consequent on a foreign government are the cause of the poverty of the people.

The PRESIDENT: You must face the President while addressing.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I am addressing you, but I have sometimes to change my posture.

The PRESIDENT: But you turned your back to the chair. If you do not listen, I shall have to stop you.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I shall be only too glad if you do so. (Cries of "Order," "Order.")

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I was telling you that Mr. Dadabhai said 35 years ago that the high salaries consequent on a foreign Government, if not remedied, would lead ultimately to a bloody revolution. Now, that it has been placed in our power by the beneficent Government to order our own house according to our means, we should rise to the occasion and reduce the salary according to the circumstances of the poor country.

Next, it should be remembered that once we reduce the salaries of the Ministers, all other high salaries are bound to be reduced in time.

I have to make an appeal to the European members of the Council. The report of the proceedings of the Joint Committee tells us that that Committee was of opinion that the salaries of the Ministers were too high and that they should be less than the salaries of the Executive Councillors. I understand that Mr. Bhupendra Nath Bose, who had the largest share in the framing of these regulations, at first proposed that the salary of Ministers should be only Rs. 3,000 a month. But there was an agitation; and what did the Joint Committee do? They did not fix the salary at the same amount as that of the Members of the Executive Council, but they were wise enough to leave to the elected members of the new Council to decide whether they should reduce these salaries or not. That stage has now come. And if we, the elected members of the new Council, consider that, in view of the stringency of the finances, it is desirable to fix the salary of Ministers at a figure not higher than that of the Prime Minister of Japan, should you by your votes defeat the object of the majority of the elected members?

At this stage the speaker, having reached the time-limit, had to resume his seat.

The PRESIDENT: There are certain amendments to all the resolutions regarding the salary of Ministers. But I think that now that the first resolution has been moved, it is better that before any discussion takes place, those who have given notice of the adjournment of the question be given an opportunity to move the amendments. I therefore call upon Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta to move his amendment.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS CUPTA: Before I move the amendment, may I be permitted to ask whether you have received a notice of an amendment to be moved by my friend, Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq, to-day with regard to the appointment of a committee of this House to go into this question? If it is allowed, then it may not be necessary to move my amendment, and if you decide not to allow it, or if the House rejects it, then I may be permitted to move this amendment?

The PRESIDENT: I cannot allow you to withdraw it conditionally. You have either to withdraw it or go on.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS CUPTA moved by way of amendment to each of the motions in regard to the salaries of Ministers moved under section 52 (1) of the Government of India Act "that the question of the salaries of the Ministers be adjourned for consideration till after the presentation of the annual Budget."

I beg to move the amendment to the motions which stand in the names of several members of this Council. My amendment is that the question of the salaries of the Ministers be adjourned for consideration till after the presentation of the annual Budget. My position is that the discussion of this question in this Council should be free from all personal or party feelings. The question should be looked at very dispassionately and so, Sir, in proposing this amendment, I beg to point out that there is no necessity for any indecent haste in discussing this question. We should like to know where and how we stand financially. That is the most important thing, because the reduction of salary that has been proposed is from the point of view of retrenchment and, Sir, before we apply the pruning knife it is eminently desirable to know how we stand financially.

With regard to some other resolutions which were discussed in this House, the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr on behalf of Government asked us to wait till the presentation of the Budget, which would be a reasoned statement of the Bengal position, including the borrowing power. So, Sir, my position is this, that for us it is absolutely necessary to know what is our revenue and what is our expenditure and how we stand financially. If we look at the question from other points of view, there is no doubt that our Ministers should receive the same salary as the Executive Councillors and should have the same status, but these resolutions have been moved on the ground that we are working at a deficit which tells heavily upon the people of this country. Now, my position is this, that with regard to that matter, we should have facts and figures before us before we can decide finally what ought to be done. There are some other considerations which should guide us. From a legal point of view, if we look to section 52 (1) of the Government of India Act, it will strike you that under the Act if we fix a salary to-day off-hand, without taking into consideration all the aspects of the question, we do it for good—at least for 10 years. That is my view of the legal position—I may be wrong—I am subject to correction—but with your permission I will read the section:—

The Governor of a Governor's province may, by notification, appoint Ministers, not being Members of his Executive Council or other officials, to administer transferred subjects, and any Ministers so appointed shall hold office during his pleasure.

There may be paid to any Ministers so appointed in any province the same salary as is payable to a Member of the Executive Council in that province unless a smaller salary is provided by vote of the Legislative Council of the province.

If we decide that question by our vote to-day, I think we finish our powers and the question will never be open to us for consideration. Another thing is this. I may also refer conveniently to another section of the Act, that is, section 72, with regard to the presentation of the Budget. There it is said under clause (2) that "the estimated annual expenditure and revenue of the province shall be laid in the form of a statement before the Council in each year, and the proposals of the local Government for the appropriation of provincial revenues and other moneys in any year shall be submitted to the vote of the Council in the form of demands for grants. The Council may assent, or refuse its assent, to a demand, or may reduce the amount therein referred to either by a reduction of the whole grant or by the omission or reduction of any of the items of expenditure of which the grant is composed." So my position is this, that under this section we have every right or privilege of refusing any grant which may be demanded from the Executive Government with regard to the pay of the Ministers. The question would be open to us. After we have gone into the financial statement, if our position is so miserable, if we are so encircumstanced that we cannot pay Rs. 64,000 a year for our Ministers, we may give a less amount and the Ministers themselves may come forward to accept a less amount. So my position with regard to the question is this, that there would be no harm in waiting till we have before us a reasoned statement, as promised by Mr. Kerr, and know the extent of our revenue and expenditure and also our borrowing capacity. That is a most important thing. Without having facts and figures before us we shall not be able to argue. Some speakers, particularly my friend Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, said that we should not sacrifice efficiency to an idea of false economy. So I think the whole House will agree with me that there is some harm in this debate and I think we should not be in an indecent hurry to divide the House on this question, and I am confident that my colleagues in this House, who are all experienced men—men connected with the management of public affairs,—know it full well that in order to fix the salaries of the officers it is necessary to know our present financial condition. That is to say, we must go into the facts and figures, master them, study them, and before considering all this it is simply a waste of time to decide about the question, and it is a question of prudence too, and that is what I plead for, and that is why I move my amendment. I hope that the question will be postponed till the presentation of the Budget to this House.

The PRESIDENT: Before I call upon Mr Dharendra Chandra Ghose to move his amendment I will explain what procedure I am going to adopt to-day. There are several amendments regarding the salary of Ministers. There are amendments to the effect that the consideration of the matter be postponed for the present and that a committee be appointed, and so forth. What I propose to do is to call upon movers of amendments to move and then to have a general discussion on the original motion moved by Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, and on the amendments. If any one of the amendments be carried, it would not be necessary to take up other amendments.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I beg to withdraw the amendment standing in my name.

The amendment was then, by leave of the President, withdrawn.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: May I inquire whether, if I were to submit to you a point of order, you will allow me to explain my point?

The PRESIDENT: What is your point?

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: My point is that section 52 (1) does not give this Council a distinct statutory right. Section 72 (d) says—

The PRESIDENT: I cannot follow your arguments. What is the point of order?

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: My point is that we cannot take up the consideration of this question here. It is ultra vires.

The PRESIDENT: I rule that the question is not ultra vires.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA moved by way of amendment to each of the motions in regard to the salaries of Ministers moved under section 52 (1) of the Government of India Act "that the salaries of the Ministers be reduced to such an amount as may be decided by this Council after considering the recommendation of a committee consisting of the following members:—

Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, Sri Ashutosh Chaudhuri,
 Dr. A. Suhrawardy,
 Rai Nalinaksha Basu Bahadur,
 Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri,
 Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. Afzal,
 Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur,

Mr. D. J. Cohen,
Babū Annada Charan Dutta, Babu Nirode Behary Mullick, and the Mover."

My proposal consists practically of two points: first, that there should be a reduction in the salaries of the Ministers, and secondly, that a committee should be appointed to recommend to this Council what the exact amount of reduction should be. The question of reduction is already before the House and several figures have been proposed or some of them are going to be proposed; there would have been no necessity of bringing in my amendment, if different rates of salaries had not been suggested. It seems to me that it would be almost inconvenient and futile to ask the House to vote on so many different rates, and hence I beg to suggest that a committee of 11 members might consider these and other rates in all their bearings and recommend a definite amount for the consideration of this House.

As for the reasons why there should be a reduction at all, much has been said on the subject by my friend, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, and he has given a lot of figures—comparative figures—and I do not like to go into this question again. I should, however, like, with your permission, Sir, just to mention a few broad aspects of the case.

First of all, I must make my position clear about one thing. I have heard it said by many members of this Council outside that a vote for reduction of salaries implies a want of confidence in the Ministers. I can assure you, Sir, that my proposal has no such object in view and is not at all a personal question. My resolution does not aim against the three hon'ble gentlemen, who are now in charge of Ministers' portfolios. It is a question of principle; that principle is to protest against the high cost of administration, especially in the salaries of the higher Government officials, and at the same time to give our Ministers an opportunity of showing an example of economy. This Council, Sir, as far as lies in its power, is, I believe, the trustee of the taxpayer's money, and its first duty is to see that in the cost of administration, a maximum limit is placed on the salary of the highest officials, so that the salaries of the other officials of the province may in time be adjusted accordingly. The Ministers and Executive Councillors are our highest officials. They perform the most responsible work of the Government, and it is in their salaries that the standard should be fixed. If this Council had it in its power, I should certainly have included the salaries of the Executive Councillors in my proposal; but unfortunately, the Council has no such power now, and the only way to protest against the high cost of administration is to see that the Ministers, who are said to be our own men, may show an example of economy—an example, which will be better than a thousand precepts and which will bring sufficient moral pressure, in time, to bear upon the authorities to reduce the salaries of all other highly paid Government officials. I submit that a beginning must be made somewhere, and where can we make a better beginning than with our own representatives?

A comparison between the salaries paid to Government officials in India and consequently in Bengal and those paid in other countries has already been made. I should only like to point out the great disparity that exists here between the salaries of the highest and the lowest officials. Let me compare the salaries paid to Ministers with those paid to the lowest schoolmaster in Bengal, America and Japan. I take the case of the schoolmaster because he is the lowest paid of all the educated Government officials, and hence I am taking this standard. In America, the Cabinet Minister gets 16 times that of the lowest schoolmaster, in Japan about 15 times, and in Bengal more than 130 times. Why is this tremendous disparity? By reducing the pay of the Ministers, this Council will not only reduce this great disparity, but set the highest standard of salary in this country, according to which the salary of all the lower officials will be adjusted. This is a great responsibility, and I earnestly appeal to this Council to say that this standard must be fixed at a moderate figure now, once for all.

I have heard it argued that the reduction in the salary of the Minister, without a similar reduction in that of the Executive Councillor, will suggest an unhealthy difference of salary between Indian and European officers, and should, on no account, be tolerated. The case of the Indian and European Judges of the High Court has been cited as an example—

The PRESIDENT: Europeans and Indians have nothing to do with the discussion. Your motion is that the matter be referred to a committee.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I have also heard it said that a reduction in salary will mean a reduction in status and position. I confess, Sir, that I do not understand this. Status in whose eyes? In the eyes of the Government, the status must remain the same, because the Government has already recognised the status of the Minister as equal to that of the Executive Councillor. As for status in the eyes of the public, I can assure the Ministers that if they take a smaller salary and thus effect a saving in the tax-payer's money, by whatever small an amount it be, their status, instead of diminishing, will be raised a hundredfold. The public will appreciate their noble example, and will bring such pressure to bear that, in time, the high salaries of the other officials will have to be reduced also. If money is to be the criterion of one's status, the sooner we do away with such a pernicious standard, the better for the country. Then again, I have heard it stated that it would not be possible to get first class men on any less amount. I am mortified to hear such a statement, and cannot believe that patriotism in Bengal has fallen to such a low ebb. If good men can be had in all other countries, it is surprising that in poor Bengal we should have to tempt Ministers with such large salaries.

I beg to make an appeal to the Ministers. This Council has been assembled to work out the Reforms Scheme and give it a fair trial; it is desirable that there should be no discord at the very outset to jeopardise its success. The opinion of the country is well-nigh unanimous that there should be a reduction, not only as a protest against the high cost of administration, but, as I have said before, to set the maximum limit of the highest salary in the province.

A suggestion has been made to postpone the question and take it up when the Budget comes. But, Sir, the two things are quite different. Under section 52 (1) the Council has to fix the standard of salary, and the salaries of the Ministers, whereas in the Budget, we may vote a reduction for a particular year. Even if we take action under section 52 (1) we are not debarred to take action under section 72 (d).

The PRESIDENT: You need not discuss that, I have already given my ruling on the point.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Before I sit down I have just one word to say. Yesterday the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter said that the report of the Joint Committee is binding on this Council. In that report it is stated: "They advise that the status of the Minister should be similar to that of the Members of the Executive Council, but that their salaries should be fixed by the Legislative Council." I appeal to the Members of this Council not to shirk this great responsibility, but to take up this matter at once and appoint the committee that I have mentioned to look and decide what exact figure ought to be the salary of the Ministers.

Adjournment.

The Council stood adjourned till Friday, the 11th February, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council assembled at 3 P.M. on the 11th February, 1921, in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present :

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 112 nominated and elected members.

Affirmation of Allegiance.

Rai Upendra Lal Ray Bahadur made an affirmation of his allegiance to the Crown.

Coal Transportation.

Rai ABINASH CHANDRA BANERJEE Bahadur: I wish to ask the Hon'ble Member in charge of Commerce whether it is a fact that from the 29th January, 1921, to the 9th February, 1921, so many as 2,080 wagons were supplied for public coal for downward destinations and that the jute mills or any other consumer was at liberty to purchase this coal to stop the mills from being closed.

MEMBER in charge of the DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Korr: The control of coal transportation is regulated by the Government of India, and the Government of Bengal have no information on the subject-matter of the question.

Motions in regard to section 52 (1) of the Government of India Act.

Salaries of Ministers.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: Under Rule 77 of the Bengal Legislative Council Manual Rules, I pray for leave to move an amendment to the resolutions on the question of salaries of Ministers. I have given a copy of this amendment to the Secretary to the Legislative Council, and, I understand, copies have already been circulated to members. I pray for leave to move this amendment.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): As notice of the amendment has not been given seven days before, I shall have to consider whether permission should be given or not. If no one in this Council objects to your amendment being moved, you can move it. I believe there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT: Permission is given to the member to move his amendment.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ moved "that the question of the reduction of the salaries of Ministers be referred to a committee of nine members to be elected by the Council, for report to the Council, the election to be conducted on the basis of the single transferable vote and in the manner indicated at page 204 of the Council Manual."

Last night Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta also moved an amendment that the consideration of this question be referred to a committee, and I therefore crave the indulgence of this House to say a few words as to why I am also putting forward a suggestion of a somewhat similar character. We have to remember in the first place that this question involves two definite matters to be considered. First, whether the salaries should be reduced at all, and secondly, if there is to be any reduction, what ought to be the amount of the reduced salary. Now, Sir, a reference to the wording of the resolution moved by Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta will show that, so far as one of these questions is concerned, the resolution takes it for granted that there must be a reduction, and the only point for consideration ought to be the amount of the reduced salary. I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by discussing whether the salaries should be reduced or not, but in my humble opinion I think it is much better that all aspects of the question should be threshed out before a smaller committee than at a meeting of the whole House, and that after we have considered the arguments for and against, we may come to a decision on both these questions. Secondly, it will be seen on a reference to the resolution itself that the proposer has suggested 12 names as members of the committee. I do not object to 12 members, although I think a smaller committee can work more efficiently than a bigger one, but my principal objection to the form of the resolution lies in this, that the mover has taken upon himself the task of selecting the members who are to form the committee. In my humble judgment, it is much better that the entire House should consider the question and select the personnel of the committee. If the whole House comes to vote and selects the members, it can be claimed that the committee is really representative of the entire House, but if the members are selected by one individual, it may be said that the committee may be representative of the opinions held by that particular member but not necessarily representative of the opinions entertained by the whole House. It is for this reason that I suggest that, irrespective of any considerations, let the whole House record their votes and select the personnel of the committee.

Sir, in the form in which I have put forward my suggestion, I do not think it is necessary that I should go into the merits of the question at all. If I do so it would be pre-judging the issues. I would rather like, if my suggestion is accepted, to leave the consideration of these two questions to the members of the committee themselves. When they assemble they will be able to take into consideration all facts and circumstances, they will be able to decide after taking into account the volume of public opinion in this matter as also the financial position and various other matters, whether the salaries of the Ministers should be reduced or not. Once they come to the conclusion that there ought to be a reduction, they will be in a better position, by bringing a calm and cool judgment to bear upon the subject, to determine what the amount of the reduced salary will be. Members will also be pleased to see that in my resolution I have recommended that after the committee has considered this question, a report is to be submitted to this Council, and that report will be before the members of the House and the members will be quite at liberty to accept the report of the committee or to reject it. Of course a recommendation made by the committee will necessarily carry a good deal of weight with this House. The committee will take upon itself the labour and anxious deliberation that is necessary to come to a sound conclusion on such an important subject.

Lastly, I wish to say a word or two as regards the method of election. I have mentioned that the method of election should be as indicated at page 204 of the Council Manual. Briefly stated, the method is this:—that the Secretary will intimate to the members a certain date within which members who are willing to serve on the committee are to send out their names. These names will be printed and circulated to all the members, a date will be fixed, and on that day members will assemble and record their votes for nine members; those for whom the largest number of votes would be recorded would be elected members of the committee. The process may seem to be somewhat cumbrous, but at the same time it has the merit of being able to record an impartial vote.

Sir, for all these reasons I commend this amendment to acceptance by this House, and I hope that this suggestion will be accepted and we will all be able to arrive at a definite and satisfactory conclusion with regard to this very important matter—satisfactory not merely to the Ministers but also to ourselves and to the larger public outside, to whose opinion we should always defer in all our deliberations in this Council.

The PRESIDENT: On reconsideration, I think that all the amendments standing in the names of the different members should be moved one after the other. I would therefore now ask Shah Syed Emdadul Haq to move the amendment that stands in his name.

SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ moved in Bengali by way of amendment to the motion by Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur in regard to the salaries of Ministers “that for the words and figures

' the amount of the salary of the Under-Secretary of State for India, i.e., at £1,500 a year ' the following be substituted, namely:— ' Rs. 1,000 a month.' "

[He delivered his speech in Bengali in support of his amendment.]

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA moved " that the salary of any of the Ministers do not exceed Rs. 2,500 per month."

We have heard many times here the word " reduction " being used in connection with this question before the House. To my mind that is a misnomer. If we read section 52 of the Government of India Act, it is clear that this House has got to fix the pay of the Indian Ministers. We know the history of how that section came to be enacted, and the apologetic word " may " in the section clearly shows that primarily it is the duty of this House to fix the salary of the Indian Ministers, and unless that is done, then the Ministers are to be paid the maximum pay. It was never intended to be ever read in the sense that the maximum pay should be paid to the Ministers at the outset. Therefore I take it that the intention of the Legislature is that we should fix the salary, and before we have done it, how the question of reduction or salary arises, I for myself fail to see. It is a duty of ours, and we should not shirk the responsibility for any reason whatsoever. It will be seen from the wording of the resolutions of the first mover, the second mover and those who come after me that it is only in regard to the figure that we differ. On principle we do not.

Sir, the underlying principle of my resolution is a sound financial policy, a policy which should govern our administration, especially the popular half, over which it is stated that we have got control and we are therefore responsible for the administration of that half, and it is also stated that our leaders, the Ministers, are responsible to the Legislature and to the people in general ultimately because their salary has to be voted by this Council. If there is any meaning in these propositions, certainly it is our duty to fix the salary exactly as it will be in accord with our financial position. Last evening a mover of one of the amendments stated to you that we do not know as yet what our actual financial position is, and before the reasoned statement, which the Hon'ble Member in charge of Finance has promised to present before us on the 21st of this month, it is not possible for us to have the requisite data to proceed with the question now before the House. I was a little surprised at that. Well, any experienced and clever hand may manipulate statistics and figures in any way, and I believe the Hon'ble Member in charge of Finance will try to present it in the best possible light honestly and as becomes his high position, consistent with what he thinks would be beneficial to the people in general, but all the same a fact cannot be absolutely ignored, absolutely nullified by any array of figures. The official statistics do not really in the least concern us when we are trying ourselves for the solution of the problem before us. What really concerns us is the pay which we are going to allow to our Ministers. I look upon the Ministers as one of us and as our leaders, who have gone from us and who will have to return to us. I therefore lay special emphasis on the point that we are to fix the salaries of our own Ministers, of our own people, and therefore we ought to apply a businesslike standard. I am glad to see that the importance of the business people here is so much valued that we have changed practically the time of the sitting of this Council, and let us follow the procedure which is adopted in the management of their own affairs. Do they really pay so much to their Managers as their business cannot afford to pay? Why should we pay a pice more than we can afford to pay, or more than what is sufficient, to Ministers with a sufficient amount of ability and practical knowledge of the departments which they have to manage? Therefore the only thing to be seen is what is the state of our resources, and without waiting for the special figures which we expect to get from the Hon'ble the Finance Member, we now come to the fountain-head, from which all the money of the State really comes. Is it not the people at the outset from whom money will have to be collected? And what is the condition of our people? Those whose lives are spent in towns—or who only go into the interior on a holiday or occasional visits—are not likely to realise the amount of poverty of our people. The townspeople, who generally live in towns, have not the direct knowledge and they come away with only superficial impressions rendered still more superficial by the natural anxiety of our people to conceal their misery from guests and visitors. It is no longer distress or extreme distress which now and then ripples upon the surface—but it is now an appalling, destructive poverty. If I speak of my Division of Chittagong—and conditions elsewhere are no better—50 per cent of the people, of whatever rank and social status they may be, do not know what a proper meal a day is and cannot give proper clothing to their own children. If you go into the interior you will see that the young wives in the houses of so-called bhadralog classes have to go long distances, clad in almost rags, in order to fetch a pitcher of water. Can you not find from that at once what is the real misery and what is the appalling and dire poverty that is ruining the whole country? Money comes from that source, and with money coming from that source we cannot indulge in the luxury of entertaining highly paid officers. Therefore, considering the extreme poverty of the people, a pice saved will be a pice going to alleviate the misery of the people. In this silver chamber in comfortable spring chairs under electric fans we may sometimes feel inclined to forget where we have come from, where we shall have to return to, and how our brethren in the country are toiling exposed to the sun and the rain, and how we force them to pay by way of taxes the best and the most they obtain by sweat of their brow and shivering of their nude or ill-clad backs. Therefore, gentlemen, I appeal to you to once realise this dire poverty in your country.

Add to that another factor which you can no longer ignore, and that is the growing civic consciousness of the people in general. It is no longer a handful of a certain section called "intelligentsia" whom you have to count with. For various reasons the great mass have awakened—they are no longer blind or ignorant as before—they have grown fully alive to their condition and are seriously thinking about the causes that have led them to this state of helplessness.

It is very difficult to ignite a wet match stick, but a pile of dry fuel would catch fire at once. I am referring to this allegorically, but people who have ears to hear and eyes to see will know that our people have come to such a desperate plight that they will accept anything which they come across as an offer of a solution of the present difficulty. If this is not a sufficient eye-opener to us, I do not know what will be. We may try to shelve this question, but I tell you, Sir, that the present civic consciousness of the people of Bengal will never spare you. They will never lose a moment in finding out why you are trying to shelve, by an amendment, a quite reasonable proposal and why you are trying to shirk it in this way or that. If you feel justified in thinking that your resources are of an unlimited nature I shall be the last person to ask you not to vote for the full amount of salary to the Ministers permissible under the law. You should not shut your eyes to the actual state of your finances as a frog under a few inches of water does, and, while it thinks that it is safe, it allows itself to be captured by the first bird of prey. I must tell the members of this Council that this sort of thing will never do in the future. That being so, the extreme poverty of the people plus their growing civic consciousness should be the fundamental principle which should regulate the settlement of the pay of our Ministers. There should not be any comparison with the pay on the other side of Government. I am not going to attack or defend the high salary that is being given to them. So long as you cannot do without them, you must put up with them. Therefore you cannot help the amount of money you are paying for an imported agency. Time will no doubt come, and time is fast approaching, when we shall have a good opportunity of doing without imported agency for our administration. So far as our popular government is concerned, control over some departments has been given to us. After 10 years we shall stand at the bar of the two Houses of Parliament, and when we shall be asked, "Powers were given to you: what have you done?" what answer will you give then? If you want to retrench expenditure in the name of economy, if you cry yourself hoarse over the poverty of your people, you will be met with one curt reply: "Well, your own people were called upon to discharge some responsible functions and they have been paid the same amount of money as the Executive Councillors: then why should you grudge the appointment of men on the same pay from overseas?" The maximum salary of an Executive Councillor should not therefore be the standard of the pay of Ministers.

I would rather put to the Council a reverse proposition. I mean that the Ministers, who are undoubtedly our leaders and who have got to be appointed from amongst us, should not forget that they are of us. They should certainly remember that they are Suruchi's sons and not Suniti's and gladly give away the sweets that have been put into the former's hands by their father and must not look at them with longing eyes; and thus show an example of self-sacrifice. When an opportunity occurs I hope and trust that the kingdom of heaven will certainly be open to them. I do not know why in this country, where the lesson of plain living and high thinking has come down from posterity and where even now in these days of irreverence the tallest and the proudest man does obeisance to the poor Maulvis and Hindu savants, we should consider high pay as the only criterion of status and position; certainly we should not. Are the status and pay so bound up together that we cannot do without either and that they are in their practical aspects identical? It is a pity that such a proposition has got to be refuted. I do not wish to labour it further. I shall only refer to a statement made by one of our present Ministers in the Indian National Congress. As President of the Poona Congress in 1891 he said that the high salary paid to the high officials was really a financial problem and was intimately connected with the misery of the people. I do not know why after about 30 years he now changes the whole principle of economy enunciated by himself. Now that the angle of vision (a phrase of which everybody seems to be fond) has changed, are we to take exactly the converse of the proposition laid down by the President of the Poona Congress in 1891? I believe I have been able to convince the House that we, as protectors of the interests of our constituencies, to whom we are responsible for our actions, must join hands and try to find out the amount we can conscientiously afford to pay to our representatives on the Ministerial bench. Personal questions and personal equation do not count in this matter at all. You must remember that the old order will change, yielding place to new, and that one day some of you may occupy one of the seats on the Ministerial bench now occupied by our present Ministers. It is no doubt incumbent on us to see that a decent salary compatible with our resources and their position as Ministers is voted for. Sir, I believe I have been able to make out a strong case for giving the Ministers a salary consistently with our means. The figure I have proposed is Rs. 2,500 a month. I beg to inquire, Sir, in view of the ruling you were pleased to give me last evening, whether I should confine myself to this particular figure or not. I understood you to say that the proposal of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur as it comes first in order will be first put and the other proposition as regards the amount of pay to be given to the Ministers should be taken up after the amendments are put and lost.

The PRESIDENT: You may mention your figure of Rs. 2,500. You are entitled to say that this a proper sum.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: Having laid down the policy which should really guide us in coming to a conclusion on the question of the salary, I feel I am justified in suggesting the figure I have mentioned. I mean the growing poverty of the people and their civic consciousness of their rights and privileges should be taken into consideration. As the Ministers will not have to discharge a more responsible and arduous task than that of a District and Sessions Judge who does both civil, criminal and a certain amount of administrative work (not forgetting his attendance at the court from 11 to 5), we should not fix a higher standard of pay for them. These Ministers will be assisted in their work by a large body of Secretaries, Under-Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries, and their duties will certainly not be as onerous as that of a District and Sessions Judge. The sum mentioned by me is intermediate between the one suggested by Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur and Maulvi Hamid-ud-din Khan, but I will not grudge if Rs. 3,000 be given to our Ministers and shall accept any lower figure also. The Ministers are the representatives of the people, and it will be graceful of them if they declare to the House the lowest amount that will satisfy them.

One other argument which has not been referred to here is that our Budget estimate runs up to a very high figure of 8 or 9 crores and the total cost of the Ministers' salary would be like a drop in the ocean. Against this argument I need only say that the money which you realise from the poor people is really the money earned with the sweat of their brow, and you must try to lessen the misery of even a single man by foregoing a little of your emoluments.

The PRESIDENT: Your time is up.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: Thank you, Sir. I have finished.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I propose an amendment to the motion of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: I rise to a point of order. If I am not mistaken, you called upon Maulvi Hamid-ud-din to move his amendment.

The PRESIDENT: Yes, I called on Maulvi Hamid-ud-din to move his amendment.

Maulvi HAMID-UD-DIN KHAN: In moving this resolution I am of opinion that this is the most important matter which demands the serious attention of all concerned in the economic aspect of the country. The basis of all government, of all institutions, is money, and a proper and equitable distribution of that money. It is needless for me to say that without funds the machinery of government will come to a standstill, but at the same time it must be admitted that without a proper and reasonable distribution of that fund the object of good government would be frustrated. Now our beloved Emperor has graciously given us the rights and privileges of participating in the government of the country in certain matters. I think we should try heart and soul to make the best use of the powers that have been bestowed upon us. The financial capacity of a country should be considered in discussing the merits and demerits of the resolution I have just moved. It is admitted on all hands that India is a poor country and that its people are so very poor that they cannot manage to meet even the bare necessities of life. Thousands of them are without food, without cloth and without home. It is due to the dire penury of the people that their efficiency has gradually diminished. The efficiency of a country is to be determined by the power of its people in health, wealth and brain. Without wealth neither health nor brain capacity can develop. It is known to you, gentlemen, that thousands of our countrymen are suffering from malaria and other similar diseases, and that those diseases are not only carrying away thousands of people but are also diminishing the vital powers of those who are living. Now I hope, Sir, it is clear that owing to the poverty of our people the efficiency of our countrymen is dwindling day by day. That being so, how can we expect the material prosperity of India? It is upon the efficiency of our people that the moral and material progress of the country largely depends. Now I think that our primary and only duty should be to raise the standard of efficiency of the people of India. With a view to that end the condition of agriculture, sanitation and education should be thoroughly considered, and all possible good schemes should be framed for the improvement of these departments. Unless and until these three departments are improved, all our talk and all our discussions for the moral and material prosperity of India will go for nothing. Now, Sir, in order to improve these three departments, large funds are required. The greater portion of the money goes to meet the expenses of reserved subjects, and what remains for the transferred subjects—specially agriculture, sanitation and education—is so very small, or rather insignificant, that it cannot even cover the primary expenses of these departments, not to speak of securing efficiency. Bengal has a population of about $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores of people. Now, in order to secure the efficiency of these people a large sum is required. I hope and trust that every man with patriotism in him should try his level best to secure the efficiency of these people, for it is upon that and that only that the moral and material progress of Bengal entirely depends.

Sir, for the purpose of securing the necessary funds you should either reduce the establishment costs or propose fresh taxes. The latter is impossible, for the people are so very poor that they have no money to pay. Fresh taxation will not only mean hardship but also starvation to many. I am therefore not in favour of taxation. The only alternative that is left to us now is to reduce the salary of the officials. Now, the first reduction should be made in the salary of the Ministers. The three Ministers will draw Rs. 64,000x3, i. e., Rs. 1,92,000 a year; if the salary of each Minister is cut down to Rs. 3,000 per month, then we shall have a saving of Rs. 84,000 a year. The amount so available may be spent for the improvement of the three departments I have already mentioned.

In my resolution I have only asked for the reduction of the salary of the Ministers, for in my humble opinion they are the first and foremost men who should make a little sacrifice for the good of the country. Without sacrifice no nation can prosper. The disinterested service of one's own country should be the motto of the Ministers. Of course I do not say that they should work without any remuneration. Let them draw salary, but not so much as has been prescribed. In Japan the Prime Minister draws a salary of Rs. 21,000 a year without any allowance. The Cabinet Member of Japan gets a salary of Rs. 12,000 a year; the Cabinet Minister of the United States gets a salary of Rs. 36,000 a year. In Great Britain itself the Under-Secretary of State for India gets £1,500 a year. Such being the state of things in countries which are far richer and more advanced than India, is it proper and equitable that a Provincial Minister should get such a high salary at the cost of their own poor countrymen? I think it will be quite sufficient to maintain the dignity of the Ministers' position if their salary is reduced to Rs. 3,000 a month. Mr. Narayan Rao Kelkar, a Minister of the Central Provinces, has shown a noble example by expressing his desire to take only what is needed for his pocket expenses. It is by such noble sacrifice, it is by such patriotism, that we can render real service to our country.

I do not like to detain you long, as there may be other members to speak on many other matters. Before I take my seat I again say with all the earnestness that I can command that, if we really desire to render service to our country, we should try one and all to make sacrifices for the improvement of our country, and I hope and trust that the resolution which I have just moved will be carried unanimously.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED moved, by way of amendments to motions Nos. 6, 8 and 10, "that the salary of a Minister be fixed at Rs. 3,000 per month."

When we came here to this Council in the beginning we came with a mandate from the country, that is, that a reduction should be made, and with that mandate, with that sense of the country we came here and very one of us was fired by that consideration. The pruning knife was applied to the European high officials. From four the vote of the House has reduced it to two. Then, again, the Darjeeling exodus was taken into consideration and again the pruning knife was applied unmercifully. Then came the consideration of the Ministers, and I submit to the House that of two of the movers of amendments, one member said that, with the growing family, the father has to comport himself with economy in everything. That same gentleman has come to-day hurriedly, without even giving a sufficient notice to move that a committee be appointed of nine members. Then, again, another gentleman who waxed eloquent on the subject of the Darjeeling exodus has come with the suggestion that the matter be postponed. I submit that that amendment again is without sufficient notice. Therefore, I say that the sense of the House in the beginning was for retrenchment (for cutting down expenses) wherever possible, but now, under the electric fans,—they are not moving to-day,—under the bewitching electric lights, that fire has cooled down, that sense of economy is gone. Now other considerations, persuasions and other things come into vogue, and now we are considering whether the Ministers should be two or three; and we have come to the decision of making the number three. Then, again, to-day, when the pay of the Ministers is under consideration, that pruning knife is not again applied, but it is going to be postponed. I submit and hope that the House would consider very carefully that, when under the law we are given power and when we are going to exercise that power for the first time with regard to our own men, we should not stop short. We should not make an invidious distinction after what has gone down before. We believe the sentiments which we entertained at the beginning when we say that it should be postponed. Therefore, Sir, I object seriously to the postponement of this subject, and I hope that the House would consider it and my amendment to the resolutions which have gone before, accepting Maulvi Hamid-ud-din Khan's, that the Ministers' pay should be fixed at Rs. 3,000. I submit that in a city like Calcutta, where it is very expensive living, Rs. 1,000, Rs. 1,200 or Rs. 2,000 would not do to maintain our Ministers in proper dignity. I, therefore, say that you would bear with me that Rs. 3,000 per month would be a fair sum for the pay of the Ministers. I would submit that the peasantry of this country live from hand to mouth with one meal a day from year's end to year's end and the money of such people should be spent with great consideration. It is a trust which the House ought to discharge to the best of its ability and, therefore, I say that such a pay as should maintain the dignity of the Ministers should be granted; and I think Rs. 3,000 is a very respectable sum. I have very great respect for our Ministers, who are the ornaments of our society. I am not moved by any consideration to curtail or to lower their dignity when I propose this salary. It is under a sense of responsibility for the money which is wrung from the poor raiyats of Bengal. It is for their good whatever retrenchment we can make and we shall endeavour our best to do it. I therefore move that Rs. 3,000 should be fixed as the pay of each of the Ministers.

Babu NIRODE BEHARY MULLICK was to have moved “that the salary of a Minister be fixed at Rs. 3,500 per mensem.”

At the very outset I would point out that I am desirous of withdrawing this motion. But before I take leave of the House to withdraw it, I would like to remind the House of a certain point contained in the preamble of the Government of India Act of 1919:—

And whereas the action of Parliament in such matters must be guided by the co-operation received from those on whom new opportunities of service will be conferred, and by the extent to which it is found that confidence can be reposed in their sense of responsibility.

To me this sense of responsibility or patriotism is more important than the financial side of the question. The question is: Are we to prove less responsible and less patriotic than the representatives of the United Provinces? With these words I propose to withdraw my motion.

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): It is perhaps desirable that at this stage I should remind the Council of the position under the Government of India Act, and communicate to them briefly the reasons by which His Excellency was actuated in fixing the salary of the Ministers. As has been said before in connection with this resolution, it is within the power of the Governor under section 52 of the Government of India Act to appoint Ministers on a pay not exceeding that of the Executive Councillors, and in accordance with that power the Governor, on the introduction of the Reforms in Bengal, appointed Ministers, and being impressed by arguments which I shall adduce later, directed that they should receive the same pay as the Members of the Executive Council. His action was, however, subject to the statutory power given to the Council of voting a lower salary. It will perhaps be useful here if I mention to the Council that we are advised by our legal advisers that once this power under section 52 of reducing the salary of Ministers is exercised, it could not again be revived in connection with that particular section. I mention that, because it seems to me to emphasize the desirability of the Council, when discussing this question, keeping the larger issues in mind as to what position and status the Council wishes that its Ministers should occupy in this Reforms Scheme, what standard of work does it wish its Ministers to perform, and what pecuniary emoluments are men of the requisite type deserving of.

Well, Sir, it would be observed that the various motions that have been put down in connection with this resolution fall into two main categories. There are those which urge that we should defer taking action, and there are those which are anxious to take action in various modified forms. It will be simplest to deal with the former first. If we are to postpone action till a later day, pending inquiry by a committee, it will only mean that we shall have a duplication of the arguments on the merits of the question on the receipt of the report of the committee. The three motions for adjournment of the question do not, to my mind, make out a case for postponing the subject which is not in itself one that raises a complicated issue. Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta yesterday with a great deal of reasonableness put the point that we should wait till we know our financial position. To that I would answer that the question is based on larger issues than a matter of a thousand rupees one way or the other according as the figures may work out in the Budget. That is to say, these Ministers are an integral part of the Reforms, and it is up to the province to pay them whatever emoluments are required to enable them to prove themselves worthy. The other two amendments are somewhat similar in character, and it might be said that they seek to ensure a discussion of the question in a more informal manner and in a calmer atmosphere than it might be feared, may characterize the turn of the debate here, though I hope it will not. Of these two motions I should certainly prefer that of Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq; that of Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta seems to me to be open to two objections. It wants to refer the question to a committee and at the same time directs the committee to reduce the salaries of the Ministers. If there is to be a committee, then it should surely be given a free hand. Secondly, he mentions the names of the gentlemen who would constitute the committee. In this respect, Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq's motion is eminently one which the Council would do well to follow. It is clear that we cannot discuss individual names in open Council. The proper thing is to form a committee on the basis of the principle of a single transferable vote. But although as between the two motions I would prefer that of Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, yet I would deprecate its adoption by the Council since it seems to me that the issue must finally be decided by our vote here, and it is not of a character which requires to be threshed out in a committee. I would therefore urge that a decision be come to on the present occasion.

I would now pass on to the merits of the proposal itself. The main argument which appeals to me in this connection is that it is clearly indicated in the report of the Joint Committee, and is still more clearly indicated in the evidence that was given before the Joint Committee, that the Members and Ministers are equal parts of one Government. They are appointed to discharge similar functions and they are entrusted with departments of much the same importance. No one can say that the departments of Ministers are less important than those in charge of Executive Members. Many people would argue that they are of more importance. After reading the evidence before the Joint Committee, I submit it is clear that the point of equality of status was pressed forcibly by the vast majority of witnesses, and I can well imagine what would have been the retort, supposing that the Joint Committee and the House of Commons had directed that the Ministers should receive a smaller salary. What would have been the line of argument? It would have been said—"Here is this Government trying to insult our men as persons of smaller status; they may stand on the threshold of the door, but must not enter the chamber on terms of equality." If I was in opposition to the Government and the Government had done this, I could make quite a good speech on these lines myself. I am perfectly certain that there are many gentlemen who spend so much of their time in imputing motives to Government who could make a far better one. Therefore I submit that in giving the Ministers the salary and status of the Executive Members we are merely carrying out what was the expressed wish of the vast majority of those who represented before the House of Commons and the Joint Committee the importance of this question.

Again, apart from that, another relevant point is whether the salary is adequate under modern conditions. In connection therewith, it is relevant to remember that the pay given to Members is not excessive. How many times have we been told that the economic position is so changed that the pay that was sufficient ten years ago is no longer so now. Yet the pay that is now given to Members is the same as was fixed 50 or 60 years ago. I do not wish to introduce personal matters, but for my part I was far better off in the earlier stages of my service than now as a Member of Council. Then, Sir, from what profession is it most likely that Ministers in future will be drawn? Clearly the legal profession. Now, the pay of a High Court Judge is Rs. 4,000 a month and after 11½ years' service he gets a pension of £1,200. Is it not a matter of fairly common knowledge that this pay is not sufficient to attract the leading men from the Bar? Then again, we have men of business. I take it that the successful among them would occupy the posts of Ministers, but a remuneration of Rs. 5,000 a month would not be considered a very tempting offer nowadays for a man who is in the forefront of business. Other suggestions have been made which would make the pay of the Ministers less than that of the Indian Civil Service officers whom the Ministers are expected to control. On no grounds can such proposals be justified.

Those are the general arguments and there remain the details of the amendments, which fortunately do not require any lengthy notice, since the one outstanding feature of the debate has been that few of the movers of the amendments have been at much pains to explain their individual proposals. We have heard many generalities, of more or less relevancy, but few have tried to justify their proposals on any specific grounds. There are only two exceptions—Babu Annada Charan Dutta and Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur. The latter sought an analogy with the Under-Secretary of State for India, incidentally proposing that the Ministers should be paid in pounds, though presumably forgetting the vagaries of the exchange. But the analogy is a false one, as there is nothing in common between Under-Secretaries of State in England and the Ministers here. The services of a member of Parliament are recognised first by giving him an unpaid Secretaryship to a Cabinet Minister, and then, if he is successful, he may be given an Under-Secretaryship, and then one of the minor Ministries, and finally if he reaches the top of the ladder he might become Prime Minister. But the Under-Secretaryship is only a lower rung in the ladder while a Ministership is the highest rung which is only open to few. The analogy therefore is a false one. The only other member who has given us a detailed reason is Babu Annada Charan Dutta, and he has cited the case of the District and Sessions Judge, apparently mainly on the ground that both the Judge and the Minister have to do a full day's work. So do the Agent of a railway and a station master, but no one would contend that they should be paid alike.

Therefore, Sir, both on general grounds and on particular grounds, I put it to the Council that the rate of pay of Ministers should be equal to that of the Members of the Executive Council, and this can be justified both in recognition of the work which will devolve upon Ministers and in recognition of the quality of the Ministers who will be drawn from the best men in the country.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I confess I have seldom been more impressed with a sense of responsibility than I am now in addressing the Council on the question of the Ministers' salary. I quite realise that the financial position in Bengal is such that it causes a natural desire in our minds to effect retrenchment in every direction, and I realise also that there is amongst my countrymen a deep-seated conviction that the high officials in this country get excessive pay. I assume therefore that hon'ble members, who have given notices of motions for reduction of Ministers' salary, have done so, because they are anxious to secure recognition of the principle that in a poor country like ours the high officials should not receive salaries which may be considered excessive. But, Sir, I venture to think that the subject requires closer examination, and I am sure the House would like to consider, and consider very carefully, the arguments both for and against the reduction of Ministers' salary before coming to a decision in this important matter. Now, I would like to remind the Council that after the publication of the Reform Scheme there was, amidst a good deal of divergence of opinion with regard to its merits, a unanimity of view upon one point, viz., that the salary of a Minister should be the same as that of a Member of the Executive Council. And I would also like to remind the Council that before the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament on the Government of India Bill representatives of every shade of political opinion in this country while giving evidence were insistent in demanding that there should be no difference between the pay of a Minister and that of a Member of the Executive Council. For instance, I find Mr. V. J. Patel and Dewan V. P. Madhava Rao, two stalwart representatives of the Indian National Congress, saying that "such Ministers should be on an equality in pay and status with the Members of the Executive Council." I am sure my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Annada Charan Dutta will not go as far as to say that the Congress, whose mandate, these gentlemen were carrying out, were unmindful either of the great poverty or the civic consciousness of the people of this country of which he has spoken so much. Also I find that Mrs. Besant, an ex-president of the Indian National Congress, said in her evidence that "a Minister's salary shall be the same as that of an Executive Councillor of the same province, so as to ensure equality of status." Further I see, Mr. Jinnah and Mr. Yakub Hussain, two representatives of that great organisation, the Moslem League, said that "the salary of the Ministers should be the same as that of the Members of the Executive Council of the Provinces, not such salary as the Governor may determine." And lastly, we find that Mr. Srinivasa Shastri, and other leaders of what is now known as the Liberal Party were equally insistent in demanding that a Minister should have the same salary as that of a Member of the Executive Council. Sir, in these days of unceasing conflict and clash of opinion and a certain amount of contrariness, one seldom comes across so unique a unanimity of opinion as one finds on the question of the Ministers' salary in the evidence before the Joint Select Committee. This solidarity of opinion, I may remind the Council, was in the latter part of 1919. What has happened since that we are invited, with a certain amount of urgent insistence, to revise and reconsider the unanimous Indian view which was placed before the joint Select Committee? Is it the discovery of a deficit in the financial position of Bengal? That can hardly be so. For we cannot overlook the fact that there is in every province a similar movement for the reduction of the poor Ministers' salary. And where is the financial stringency in the United Provinces, in Madras and other parts of India? And yet we hear the same chorus from everywhere, that unless the Ministers' salary is forthwith reduced, things cannot go on. So I ask again, what has happened since evidence was given before the Joint Select Committee that we should at this very early stage of the Council apply ourselves to the consideration of the question of reducing the Ministers' salary? My friend Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur has said that this question was an issue at the last election. Sir, I was quite alive and alert at the time of the election, being a candidate myself, and I can say with confidence that there was no such specific issue at the last election. The only issue that was raised was as to whether we should take advantage of the Reforms. To be quite accurate, Sir, I should mention that only in one constituency, namely, that represented by my hon'ble friend the Maharaja of Nuddea, Mr. J. N. Roy attempted to raise another issue, whether the raiyat should be made a peasant proprietor. Besides these two, there was no other issue at the last election. But if I am doing an injustice to my hon'ble friend Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, I invite him to contradict me when he is replying, by producing any election address or any speech of his in which he had raised the question of reducing the Minister's salary as a definite issue. My Hon'ble friend has said in his speech that since power has been given to us under the Government of India Act to reduce the Ministers' salary, we must exercise it. Let us test this argument. Let me ask hon'ble members in this Council—are you prepared to use whatever power you have got, straightaway? If so, why don't you give votes to women? The Act gives the legislature power to give votes to women? Are you prepared to give votes to women? If not, why not? Is it not because you realise that abstract general arguments are slippery in questions like these? There are deeper considerations at issue to which we must apply our minds before we come to a decision in an important matter like this. Sir, there are those who say that it is on account of our financial position that we must reduce the Ministers' salary. Let us examine this plea. Assuming that there is a deficit—I base my argument upon an assumption because, since the Budget has not been presented, we are not exactly aware of our financial position—but assuming for the sake of argument that there is a deficit, and a very large deficit, is it seriously contended that the few thousands that we shall be able to save by reducing our Ministers' salaries would relieve us from anxiety with regard to our financial position? There is, Sir, a saying that is much used in Bengali households, an equivalent almost of the English proverb, "penny wise, pound foolish," which we would do well to bear in mind in this connection. By all means save money by retrenchment, but before you cut down expenditure, study the machinery of Government very carefully and then decide what are the superfluous parts that can be got rid of at once. But to propose at the very first meeting of the Council that the salaries of Ministers should be reduced, when not long ago all political parties, in this country were unanimous in demanding that there should be no difference between the pay of a Minister and that of a Member of the Executive Council, when the Budget has not been placed before us and we are unaware of our exact financial position and when the Ministers are not yet properly seated in their saddle, is, I venture to think, neither wise nor politic. I do not say that because political parties in India were once united in demanding that the Ministers' salary should be the same as that of a Member of the Executive Council, we should never consider the question of reduction. Sir, I do not wish to exaggerate the importance of consistency. A pedantic consistency is a sterile frame of mind. But, Sir, before we change our opinion, we must be persuaded that a change is required by reason of altered circumstances or otherwise. And I respectfully submit to the Council that as yet nothing has happened to make us change our opinion. But as I have said, I am by no means averse to returning to this question later. But I am opposed altogether to any reduction of the Ministers' salary forthwith without fuller knowledge and consideration of our financial position, and other important and relevant facts.

Mr. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: I rise to oppose all these motions and the amendments which refer to them. I did not come down to this Council with any mandate, as some have; I came down perfectly prepared to be convinced if the arguments were sufficiently strong, but I must admit that I have heard nothing so far that has convinced me that there is any necessity at present at any rate to reduce the pay of the Ministers. We have heard a good deal of extraneous matter brought into this debate which really is not to the point at all. What does it matter, when considering the pay of the Ministers in Bengal in 1921, what Alexander the Great paid to his Ministers, as was adduced by the mover of the first resolution? Then again, he led us down through the fascinating byeways of Hindu mythology and explained what it was that the gods and goddesses of old days did for those who loved and served them. So far as I can make out, they paid them no salary, but they sometimes made them kings. I do not know whether my friend Mr. Mitter, would like to exchange his salary for this condition, but I should think not. Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea was, once, I believe, called the uncrowned king of Bengal, but I do not think he would like to go back to that day. Then, again, all these comparisons, whether from Hindu mythology, ancient history, Queensland, Japan and the like, have nothing to do with the matter. A comparison to be a real comparison must be on the same ground. Certainly we are not on the same lines as Japan, and to compare us with Queensland would be absurd. If you are going to compare us with Queensland, you might compare the population of Queensland with the population of Bengal, so that the Minister of Bengal should have twenty times the salary of the Prime Minister of Queensland. No, Sir, the true test of all is to bring it down to an ordinary business-like level. What is the pay that is compatible with the dignity of the posts as created by the British Parliament and which is likely to attract the right class of men to hold these appointments? The Ministers who have been appointed are, we all admit, an excellent choice, and as far as that is concerned, I think that this Council will agree that we have got the best men that were available at the moment. Therefore, so far as that is concerned, I think there is no argument. Then it comes to this. They have a hard task; they have a very difficult road to pursue and they should be started off along that road with the sympathy and encouragement of this Council, who should not be too critical of any shortcomings. But it is hard lines to send them on their difficult way to what lies before them without sympathy and to start them with a vote of censure by cutting their pay without giving them a chance of earning it. Of course we have heard a great deal about economy and poverty. Nobody has greater sympathy with poverty than I have, and nobody a greater admiration for economy; but the poverty we have been given instances of will not be changed by cutting off a few thousand rupees from the pay of the Ministers; the savings will not amount to so much and it will make no difference. In fact, if the poor people of Bengal had to be experimented on by the amateur economists of this country in the manner explained to us yesterday, their poverty would certainly be increased. What a number of sins and fallacies are committed in the name of economy. This Reforms Scheme, this new constitution, is a great fabric that is built on the foundation of the Governor, Executive Council and Ministers. Is it economy that would start by cutting down the foundation of your building? Surely that is not economy, only foolish extravagance. Then again, as an instance of the way in which these economists on this Council are finding their strength and trying to use it, I will give you an example. Yesterday I asked one member whether he was sure, if the salaries were cut down, the present Ministers would accept the reduced salary. That member in reply said he did not know and did not care. I asked him, "If you cut the salary down to Rs. 3,000, whom are you going to get?" He replied "You can get anybody"——

The PRESIDENT: I object to any discussion as to what the present Ministers would or would not accept. By entering into a discussion of this sort you only complicate matters.

Mr. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: Am I allowed to go on and point out that if you reduce the salary you will reduce the quality?

The PRESIDENT: There is no objection to that. What I object to is to raise the issue what the present Ministers would or would not accept.

Mr. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: I understand your ruling, Sir. As I said, my friend replied, "You can get anybody." That is exactly what we don't want. We do not want "anybody;" we want the best men in Bengal and if the pay is reduced, may not the time come when the quality will degenerate? This will be a start on the down-hill road of inefficiency; this is a dangerous path. It is dangerous because no man knows once he begins to go down-hill, where that path will lead to

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: There are very few Indian members present here who cannot but have the greatest sympathy with the spirit underlying the series of motions now before the House. No one standing here as an elected representative of the people can say that there is not a tremendous feeling in the country against the high scale of salary that the Government have thought fit to allow to the members of the Bengal Cabinet. India is a poor country, the income of an average Indian is far less than that of an individual in any other part of the world; on the other hand the living in India is comparatively cheap. Is it not then a cruel irony of fate that the officials under the administration of Indian provinces should be allowed by far a higher scale of salary than is allowed by any other Government in the world? The country undoubtedly demands a reasonable reduction in the amount of their salary. I do not agree with Sir Henry Wheeler when he says that the best men would not be available for Ministership on a small salary. Men do not accept the post of a Minister to earn money; it is the spirit of patriotism and self-sacrifice which is the chief factor, and I dare say that India is not poor of such patriots. Sir, at the same time we realise that the salary of one section of the Cabinet, viz., the Members of the Executive Council, is fixed by the Government of India Act and, in their case, we can do no more at present than express our pious wish for reduction of the amount by passing resolutions to that effect in the Council; but the case of the other section of the Cabinet, viz., the Ministers, is quite different. Here we, the members of the Council, are empowered under the Act to fix a reasonable salary for our Ministers. Such being the case, I quite appreciate the spirit of those of our friends who think that by voting upon a reasonable salary for our Ministers we would considerably strengthen our hands in carrying on a vigorous agitation for reducing the salary of the Members of the Executive Council to the level of that of the Ministers. But with all respect to those friends, I beg to submit that this would be a most improper course to follow from the political standpoint of view. Sir, my hon'ble friend, Mr. Ghose, has already told the House what some of the most eminent Indian leaders think of this question. It would not be out of place if I lay before the House the views expressed by different public bodies in India on the matter of a Minister's salary when those bodies specially assembled some two years back to consider the Reforms Report, and I hope their opinion would carry weight with the House. At the special session of the Congress held at Bombay in September 1918, under the presidency of Mr. Hassan Imam, the following resolution was passed on the motion of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: "The status and salary of the Ministers shall be the same as those of the Members of the Executive Council." Sir, this motion, amongst others, was supported by the late Lokamanya Tilak and Pandit Motilal Nehru.

Again, at the special conference of the Moderates, held at Bombay in November 1918, under the presidency of Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee, on the motion of the Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Shastri, the following resolution was passed: "Status and emoluments of the Ministers should be identical with those of the Executive Councillors."

Again at the special session of the All-India Moslem League, held also at Bombay in September 1918, under the presidency of the Hon'ble the Raja of Mahmudabad, on the motion of the Hon'ble Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, the following resolution was passed: "The status and salary of the Ministers shall be the same as that of the Members of the Executive Council."

Sir, the report of the committee of the non-official members of the Indian Legislative Council recommended that "Ministers be placed as regards status and emoluments, on a footing of equality with the Members of the Executive Council." The non-official members of the last Bengal Legislative Council in their report on the Reforms Scheme said "that the status, privileges and emoluments of Ministers should be the same as those of the Members of the Provincial Executive Council."

Sir, these are the opinions of some of the most powerful and representative political public bodies in the country; we cannot ignore these opinions, and I have every hope that the House will take these into consideration in arriving at a decision on the subject. Sir, I ask, is it proper or would it add to our prestige and dignity if our chosen representatives on the Cabinet get a smaller salary than the nominees of the Government on the same body? When we engage a servant, we fix his salary according to his worth. Would it not be depreciating the worth of our Ministers if they are given a smaller salary than that of their Secretaries? We cannot judge our Ministers on the analogy of the honorary chairmen of the district boards or the honorary Magistrates. We are to bear in mind that the Ministers are whole-time servants of the State, that they are not to engage themselves in any other professions, and that they shall have to work as hard as any whole-time paid official of the State.

Taking all these into consideration, should we make an invidious distinction between our chosen representatives and an official appointed by the Government? I call our Ministers our chosen representatives, because no Governor's mandate can keep them in their ministerial chair if we do not want them. I attach no importance to the argument that it is not in our power to reduce the salaries of the Councillors appointed by the Government unless we first reduce the salary of our Ministers. I do affirm that it is absolutely in our power to reduce their salaries too. The same power of public opinion which has in a way revolutionised the whole system of the Government would far more easily enable us to effect a reduction in the salaries of our over-paid officials. Let us unite our efforts, and I dare say we will secure the desired reduction in their salaries in no time. The matter of reducing the salary of a Minister is entirely in our hands; we can reduce it whenever we like. Such being the case, what is the need of this undue haste? I appeal to the House to make a united effort for an all-round reduction of the salaries of all the Members of our Cabinet and not to single out our own representatives as the first victims of our disapproval of high salaries enjoyed by the officials of the Government of Bengal. Sir, I oppose the motions.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has given to this Council such a clear enunciation of the principle on which the salaries of the Ministers were fixed on the same level as that of the Members of the Executive Council of this Government that I have no desire to detract from the admirable speech which he made in defending the policy on which the Government put the salary of the Ministers and that of the Members of Council alike. Nor is it my intention in any way to minimise the importance of the spirit of economy by which certain speakers who have moved these resolutions have been actuated. But to those who have advocated that principle of economy, I should like to ask, without in any way passing any disparaging remarks on their patriotism or their strong feelings on the subject, what has happened to infuse suddenly the spirit of economy in the hearts of the people of Bengal? I do not for a moment wish to belittle the question of the need for economy in this province; but what I suggest is that the question is by no means a new one; and that the method that it is proposed to apply is not only novel, but, what is more, very short-sighted. If, for instance, the representatives of the people of Bengal who have come to this Council have to face a real economic question, it will not be solved either by the reduction of the salaries of Members or of Ministers, and, however much you may in your race for economy leave behind efficiency, you will not be able to get away from the problems of new taxation which are bound to arise. Therefore, to those in whose minds are lurking such visions that they can lull to sleep the spirit of taxation by this economy, I can say that they are going the wrong way about it. You are impairing the administration by your thirst for economy and by your fear for new taxation; and I point it out as dispassionately as it is possible for me to do so. Let us consider India or Bengal as we find it to-day. I am a very old friend of the mover of the first resolution with regard to the reduction of the pay of the Ministers, if I may just for a moment or two refer to some of the arguments which he put forward as to what the state of things was and not what the state of things is to-day, I should like to say that this is not an age of what might have been or might be, but that we have to face the situation as we find it. I know that my friend has very simple pastoral instincts in his soul, but I know him too well to take him seriously.

The PRESIDENT: I have to call the Hon'ble Member to order, as I do not think that he should make any personal reflection.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The references which my friend, the mover of the original resolution has made with regard to a state of India as it was at a time when we were not born, will not help us to-day. I was not making a personal attack, as our respected President thought it to be. I have been in this Council for a very long time and I know the rules and I am here to obey them. But my object is to point out that it is no good drawing pictures of things as they were in the old days; we should endeavour to bring out such arguments that alone can weigh with the sense of this Council and that of sensible people to-day.

Now, why was it that the salary of Ministers was fixed the same as that of the Members of the Executive Council? Not merely for the reasons which Sir Henry Wheeler has given, but also this, that when you are going to entrust your representatives with the highest administrative work in your province, the most sensible thing for you to do is to fix the salary on the same scale as that fixed for the highest administrative posts. And that is a thing which I think that the members of this Council would do well to remember. Whether, as a matter of general principle, you should, at the risk of impairing the efficiency of administration, reduce the salaries of all high posts all round is not actually before the Council, and that is why it is all the more deplorable that, when you know that you have the power in your hands to reduce the salary the moment you choose, you should try to use the pruning knife without considering and knowing actually what the work of the Ministers is likely to be, without knowing after a trial what your purse-strings are likely to be. If you want to reduce, simply because you have been given the power of reduction for certain posts, I say that it is a very unsound policy; and I hope that any member of this Council who may have had any personal feelings regarding the present Ministers will, once for all, banish them and take the larger, the broader and more catholic view. I have no mandate, and even if I had, I would not bring it out for you. My request is, as Kumar Shub Shekhawar has pointed out in the course of this debate, why this undue haste when it is up to you to reduce the salary if you want to at any time, and why do you make this invidious distinction at this stage, when you have not examined whether the work of the Ministers and the Members is really alike, whether they have the same responsibilities on their shoulders? If it is so, you should first examine the whole situation and then come to a final conclusion.

Then, again, the policy that, because we cannot reduce certain salaries regarding which we can only make recommendations, we should show that this country is poor and therefore say to the Government that we do not believe in these high salaries and that we should cut down the pay of the Ministers, is an unsound one, whatever may be the motives of the gentlemen who have brought forward these resolutions; and I am sure that they are inspired by the highest motives. In practice, it would only mean cutting your nose to spite your face.

Another thing that I should like the members of this Council to remember is that, if the Reforms Scheme is going to be a success—which we all hope it will be—and materialise as time goes on under the ordinary law of evolution, the number of the Members of the Executive Council must be reduced and in time they must cease to exist; and the Ministers alone will be those who will be responsible for the administration. If I am right, and I think I am, then it will be well for the members of this Council to remember something more; and that is this, that a time will come when the Governor will only formally appoint the detract from the admirable speech which he made in defending the policy on which the Government put the salary of the Ministers and that of the Members of Council alike. Nor is it my intention in any way to minimise the importance of the spirit of economy by which certain speakers who have moved these resolutions have been actuated. But to those who have advocated that principle of economy, I should like to ask, without in any way passing any disparaging remarks on their patriotism or their strong feelings on the subject, what has happened to infuse suddenly the spirit of economy in the hearts of the people of Bengal? I do not for a moment wish to belittle the question of the need for economy in this province; but what I suggest is that the question is by no means a new one; and that the method that it is proposed to apply is not only novel, but, what is more, very short-sighted. If, for instance, the representatives of the people of Bengal who have come to this Council have to face a real economic question, it will not be solved either by the reduction of the salaries of Members or of Ministers; and, however much you may in your race for economy leave behind efficiency, you will not be able to get away from the problems of new taxation which are bound to arise. Therefore, to those in whose minds are lurking such visions that they can lull to sleep the spirit of taxation by this economy, I can say that they are going the wrong way about it. You are impairing the administration by your thirst for economy and by your fear for new taxation; and I point it out as dispassionately as it is possible for me to do so. Let us consider India or Bengal as we find it to-day. I am a very old friend of the mover of the first resolution with regard to the reduction of the pay of the Ministers, if I may just for a moment or two refer to some of the arguments which he put forward as to what the state of things was and not what the state of things is to-day, I should like to say that this is not an age of what might have been or might be, but that we have to face the situation as we find it. I know that my friend has very simple pastoral instincts in his soul, but I know him too well to take him seriously.

The PRESIDENT: I have to call the Hon'ble Member to order, as I do not think that he should make any personal reflection.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The references which my friend, the mover of the original resolution has made with regard to a state of India as it was at a time when we were not born, will not help us to-day. I was not making a personal attack, as our respected President thought it to be. I have been in this Council for a very long time and I know the rules and I am here to obey them. But my object is to point out that it is no good drawing pictures of things as they were in the old days; we should endeavour to bring out such arguments that alone can weigh with the sense of this Council and that of sensible people to-day.

Now, why was it that the salary of Ministers was fixed the same as that of the Members of the Executive Council? Not merely for the reasons which Sir Henry Wheeler has given, but also this, that when you are going to entrust your representatives with the highest administrative work in your province, the most sensible thing for you to do is to fix the salary on the same scale as that fixed for the highest administrative posts. And that is a thing which I think that the members of this Council would do well to remember. Whether, as a matter of general principle, you should, at the risk of impairing the efficiency of administration, reduce the salaries of all high posts all round is not actually before the Council; and that is why it is all the more deplorable that, when you know that you have the power in your hands to reduce the salary the moment you choose, you should try to use the pruning knife without considering and knowing actually what the work of the Ministers is likely to be, without knowing after a trial what your purse-strings are likely to be. If you want to reduce, simply because you have been given the power of reduction for certain posts, I say that it is a very unsound policy; and I hope that any member of this Council who may have had any personal feelings regarding the present Ministers will, once for all, banish them and take the larger, the broader and more catholic view. I have no mandate, and even if I had, I would not bring it out for you. My request is, as Kumar Shub Shekhlareswar has pointed out in the course of this debate, why this undue haste when it is up to you to reduce the salary if you want to at any time, and why do you make this invidious distinction at this stage, when you have not examined whether the work of the Ministers and the Members is really alike, whether they have the same responsibilities on their shoulders? If it is so, you should first examine the whole situation and then come to a final conclusion.

Then, again, the policy that, because we cannot reduce certain salaries regarding which we can only make recommendations, we should show that this country is poor and therefore say to the Government that we do not believe in these high salaries and that we should cut down the pay of the Ministers, is an unsound one, whatever may be the motives of the gentlemen who have brought forward these resolutions; and I am sure that they are inspired by the highest motives. In practice, it would only mean cutting your nose to spite your face.

Another thing that I should like the members of this Council to remember is that, if the Reforms Scheme is going to be a success—which we all hope it will be—and materialises as time goes on under the ordinary law of evolution, the number of the Members of the Executive Council must be reduced and in time they must cease to exist; and the Ministers alone will be those who will be responsible for the administration. If I am right, and I think I am, then it will be well for the members of this Council to remember something more; and that is this, that a time will come when the Governor will only formally appoint the Ministers. A time will come when the members of this Council will practically select these Ministers; and when the time comes, it will depend upon the parties that are in the House and not merely on the personalities of the Ministers. We may have Ministers who are highly desirable; but what if we have an extreme wing or a wing who desire to make mischief and who wish to spite those whom they do not like? These things are happening in Europe every day now, and if that be so, it may not always be possible to get men simply to accept from the spirit of self-sacrifice. Therefore, Sir, the emoluments should be such that the best men may be attracted. We should not forget that Caesar's wife should be above suspicion. Perhaps my friends know what high salaries are paid to the senior members of European firms. I am sorry that Mr. Watson-Smyth did not make any reference to this; and the reason why they pay such high salaries is that contentment and comfort make for good administration. It is not merely that you should look to to-day but to-morrow and to five and ten years hence, when you come to decide a question of this nature.

One word more, Sir, and I am done; and that is that I strongly urge those of my fellow-countrymen and representatives of Bengal to remember what His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught said when he opened this very Council Chamber, and that is that on Bengal's dictum will depend the dictum of India. Simply because a backward province like the Central Provinces decided to fix the salary of Ministers at Rs. 3,000 are the people of Bengal, who are so intelligent, who are so far-seeing, not to examine the question more dispassionately and in all its bearings before they come to a decision of this kind? I therefore sincerely hope that better judgment will prevail and that no hasty decision will be come to in this matter.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: In intervening in this debate I am quite conscious that the most important considerations have already been placed before this House; but my apology for intervening in order to offer a few observations is that not very long ago, I was associated with a Commission, one of the most important duties of which was to consider the question of salaries, and we devoted two years or more to the consideration of this among other important questions. The question before the Council is one of supreme importance so far as the proper working of the new Government is concerned. You are all familiar with the manifold criticisms that have been hurled at the new scheme, i.e., the system of diarchy, and we cannot be too careful in taking measures that the system which has been inaugurated is successful. The first and foremost condition of such success is that the two sections of the Government should work harmoniously. As has been pointed out by one of the speakers in the course of the debate, this would not be possible if one section of the Government did not enjoy the same status, privileges and salary as the other section. During the period of two years that I was on the Public Services Commission, I heard all over India unanimous complaints from leaders of public opinion, as well as public servants, as to the differentiation of pay in the services; but I am perfectly conscious that the Ministers do not stand on the same footing as the ordinary officials. At the same time it is but human nature that those who are employed on the same duties should expect to receive the same treatment. It has been suggested that the Ministers will be guaranteed the same status by reason of the fact that they would be exercising equal responsibilities and powers; and, as was observed by Mr. Watson-Smyth, it may be that though particular Ministers may not be influenced in the discharge of their duties by the emoluments which are fixed for the office, yet in course of time, it is absolutely certain that lower pay will in the eyes of the people lower the position of the Ministers.

As I have told you, the demand for equal pay was absolutely unanimous before the Public Services Commission, and I must admit to the House that it was with considerable surprise that I found that some of the elected members of this Council proposed less pay to their Ministers than is given by Statute to Members of the Executive Council. It was said by the mover of this proposition, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, that his proposition was intended to assert a certain principle; it was intended to demonstrate that the country is of opinion that the payment of high salaries to Government officials is unjustified. But, Sir, it must be clear to everyone that this assertion of principle is in the circumstances not only entirely barren, but can have no significance, unless those who are asserting this principle are able to find out definitely in what directions there can be useful retrenchment so far as the salaries of officials are concerned.

Now, take for instance the Imperial Services. It is not within the competence of this Council to consider whether the emoluments attached to these offices are too high or not. Take the other services, the Provincial Services. Is it the opinion of any member of this House that they are paid unduly high salaries? For the past several years up to now, the clamour has been universal that the salaries which are paid are not sufficient; and that owing to the increased cost of living the salaries are far from adequate; and the Government have therefore been obliged to increase the salaries of the Provincial Services. Can it be said that there is really any serious idea in the mind of any member of this Council that the pay attached to the Provincial Services is too high? The argument that this proposition is moved in order to assert some great principle has really no significance.

There is no abstract standard by which the salary of Ministers can be fixed, and the only practical way in which you can come to a proper decision is to take the existing circumstances into consideration. It is no good trying to bring in analogies from other countries. We have got to see what the conditions are in Bengal. If we consider that, then I submit to this House that the salary already fixed by His Excellency the Governor is the proper salary for the Ministers.

Now, if we look at the several concrete propositions that are before the House, some of them seem to me to be based on absurd theories. Are we going to pay the Ministers the same salary as a young Civilian Joint Magistrate or an Executive Engineer or a District Officer gets? The House, I am sure, cannot but fully realise the great responsibilities of the office of a Minister. They are in charge, as you were told the other day, of some of the most important departments, not only most extensive but the most productive and progressive departments. These are departments on which depend the development of the people of this province and of the material resources of the province. Take the Department of Public Health. If the Hon'ble Minister in charge of that Department is able to solve that great problem of Bengal, malaria, does not the House think that any salary that can be given is not too much for that Minister? Take again the problem of education. Now it is the Minister who has got to work out and solve this difficult problem, who is able to think out what is the best form of education suited to this province, where the present system of education is defective and what are the remedies to be applied. If he is able to inaugurate a proper and useful system of primary and secondary and University education, do you not think that he will amply justify any salary that the Council can give him? Similarly, the Minister in charge of the industries has a very great task before him, and if that Minister is successful in setting on foot some industrial scheme which would improve the material resources of the province, he would repay his salary more than a hundredfold. So, in my opinion, it would be too narrow, too short-sighted a policy for the House to stint itself in a matter of this kind.

A great deal has been said as regards the volume of the work that is to be done by the seven Members of Government. I wish only to say this, that the House should bear in mind that the duties which are entrusted to the Ministers and the Members are not merely to dispose of current files. The most important duty of the Ministers as well as of the Members of the Executive Council consists in thinking out the larger problems, the larger policies, that affect the well-being of the province. If this Council take all these facts into consideration I venture to hope that it will not insist on curtailing the salary of the Ministers.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: I rise to support the motion moved by various members for fixing the salaries of Ministers. I feel that I must begin by replying to Mr D. C. Ghose's reference to a Bengali proverb and to his query as to why we are discussing the Ministers' salaries the very first day by referring him to a Persian proverb—"Kill the cat the very first day."

Sir, the question of the salaries of the Ministers is the burning question of the day. It has been exercising the minds of the public not only of one province, but of the whole of India; and a small province has already set a great example for bigger provinces to follow. Shall Bengal, the premier province in India, lead or lag behind? That is the question before the House to-day.

Sir, the speech of the illustrious speaker on behalf of Government, on whom Lakshmi and Saraswati have showered their gifts—the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan—has made a deep impression on me, and I must confess that, influenced by the opinion of my respected and valued friend the Hon'ble Raja Reshee Case Law, who made out a strong case for the equality of Ministers and Members before the Franchise Committee on which I had the honour to serve as a representative of Bengal, I myself had on more occasions than one publicly championed the cause of the equality of status and dignity of Ministers. I have been asked what has happened to make me change my mind. Many things have happened. When I pressed for the equality of salaries of Ministers and Members, I never realised that the number of members of Government would be seven. When I demanded the equality of status and dignity of Members and Ministers, I never dreamt for a moment of a salary of Rs. 5,000 for each. When I cried for bread I never bargained for stone—a millstone round our neck to drag down the fabric of diarchy to bankruptcy, anarchy and ruin. Sir, many things have happened to make one change one's mind. Yet I still believe in the equality of salaries of Ministers and Members, but I also do believe in example being better than precept and in charity beginning at home. Let us first of all fix the salaries of Ministers. Then and then alone we can with justice and fairness plead to the Members to accept a similar amount.

Sir, we have on the Ministerial bench to-day a leader whose labours commenced long before many of us saw the light of day. All his fellow-workers have departed, and Bengal is fortunate in having the last of the stalwarts as the first of its Ministers. One of the earliest lessons impressed upon us by him and his associates was the costliness of the British system of administration in India. The walls of this historic hall have often resounded with the denunciations of the waste and extravagance of an alien rule—denunciations of the members of the heaven-born service sleeping on the cool heights of Simla or Darjeeling drawing princely salaries. Sir, let some one rise in his place to-day from the Ministerial bench and declare that all these denunciations were mere stage-thunders, these fulminations mere sound and fury, and I am prepared to pause and reflect and withdraw my support from the resolutions. Otherwise, let the Ministers set an example of self-sacrifice for others to follow.

Sir, it is said that the saving of a few lakhs would be a mere drop in the ocean: but for a people who still count their wealth in cowries and pice a saving of a few rupees means much. Besides, we find Government mindful of pennies whatever they might do with pounds. Under the Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal I, with other members of Council, had the privilege of having a liveried chaprasi and refreshments at Government House. With the advent of the Governor, his band and bodyguard, the chaprasis and the refreshments disappeared. Under the present régime we not only miss the genial presence, the inspiring personality and the commanding figure of His Excellency, but we miss also the generous hospitality of the Earl of Ronaldshay. I need not lament my loss of the liveried chaprasis any more as I notice a reduction in the number of jamadars and chaprasis of the Hon'ble Members of Government. Sir, when Government are driven to save a few pennies by such means, I do not think we are justified in affecting the Grand Seignor or playing the Great Moghul and turn round and say "a saving of a few lakhs is a mere drop in the ocean."

Sir, it is said that if we exercise our powers under section 52 of the Act we would reduce the salaries of the Ministers for all time. I do not share this view, but admitting for argument's sake its correctness I ask—What then? Would the heavens fall? If so, let truth triumph and justice be done even if the heavens fall. Would the Ministers resign? An Amurath will succeed an Amurath. As to the mild threat of the dissolution of the House, let him tremble who has entered it by the skin of his teeth and who may not enter it again, should there be a fresh general election.

It is said that a salary of less than Rs. 5,333 will fail to induce good men to accept office. I fail to see what magic is there in the figure Rs. 5,333. If a salary of £1,500 a year did not stand in the way of Lord Sinha's acceptance of office, if Mr Bhupendra Nath Basu could be persuaded to cross the seas, if Sir Ashutosh could be attracted to the High Court Bench—and the salary of a High Court Judge is less than that of a Minister and he has no Secretaries to write out his judgments—I am not convinced that a reduced salary would fail to attract good men imbued with genuine patriotism and true ardour and love for their country. We have been told that in ancient India Brahmins occupying the highest offices in the State never cared to accept any salary. The days of Chanakya and Sayanacharya are gone. Plain living and high thinking are no more. Yet we have in Bengal, even to-day, a Brahmin who, after the labours of his responsible office, devotes the rest of the day to the difficult task of promoting the intellectual uplift and advancement of his people, undaunted by opposition, undeterred by malicious misrepresentation, without remuneration, without reward and without any recognition from Government—a man the like of whom you will not find in the whole of India, were you to raise the dignity of the Wardenship of the University to that of the Viceroyalty of India and offer a Viceroy's salary for his services. Sir, Bengal is poor in wealth, but it is still rich in the spirit of self-sacrifice.

Now one argument remains, the great argument of equality of status and dignity. But as it has been well asked by a previous speaker, dignity and status in whose estimation—the Government or the people? As to Government they have maintained the equality of status and dignity of Members and Ministers with scrupulous care. Sir, on the Government bench to your right you have a Knight Commander, a Companion of the Star of India and a Maharajadhiraja. To your left you have got, if not a Maharajadhiraja, a Nawab, a Companion of the Indian Empire and a Knight—a far-sighted Government have quickly removed the slightest shadow of suspicion of inequality between Members and Ministers by making a belted Knight of the erstwhile uncrowned king of Bengal. Sir, so far as the outward paraphernalia of office “the boast of heraldry and the pomp of power” are concerned, the equality is complete of Members and Ministers—of Monmouth and Macedon. You have got a befezzed gentlemen to your right, you have got a befezzed gentlemen to your left. Only the golden tassel is wanting the gold itself is wanting, but what matters it so long as the guinea stamp is there?

As for dignity, in the eyes of the people (and the Ministers are the servants of the people, not officials, so says Sir Surendra Nath), does it require any argument to establish that the voluntary relinquishment of whole or part of their salaries by Ministers would enhance and not lower their prestige in the estimation of the people? Sir, is it too much to expect that, following the noble traditions of ancient India, the Brahmin Minister of to-day, who has kindled in our breast the enthusiasm and ardour of patriotism, and who has lighted in the altar of our hearts the fire of self-sacrifice and self-abnegation, who was the ideal of our youth, the admiration of our manhood and who for 40 years or more had served, without reward and without remuneration—is it too much, I ask, to expect that he should rise to the height of the occasion and declare that he is still willing to serve for honour and not honorarium—to serve as before his country and community for the honour and glory of service? Sir, the shades of Annanda Mohan Bose and W. C. Bonnerji anxiously await the decision of the House and the undying echoes of the voices of the immortal dead, which sleep in the nooks and corners of this historic hall, disturbed by the heat and passion of debate, awake to cry applause or shame.

Mr. D. J. COHEN: I support the amendment put forward for reference to a committee. We have before us more than one motion which reveals that a certain number of members consider the salary of Rs 64,000 per annum to be excessive. If this question be referred to a committee, it could be dealt with in its various aspects and the result of their deliberations will assist the Council in deciding on the merits of such individual or alternate recommendations as may be embodied by the committee in the report of their proceedings. So far two important reasons have been adduced as to why the salary should be maintained at the same figure as that received by a Member of the Executive Council. There may be other reasons both for and against the proposal; consequently, in fairness both to the Ministers as well as the members, we should deal with this question in which there appears to be a divergence of views, in a manner that will ultimately lead to an issue which would be acceptable to the majority of the members. The two reasons just alluded to by me are first, that a reduction of salary will lower the prestige or status of Ministers as compared to that of Members of the Executive Council and secondly, that a smaller salary will not attract the best men of the province to these appointments. I cannot believe that monetary considerations necessarily decide the status of a public office. We have several examples of public-spirited citizens giving up lucrative professions and taking up public appointments which yield comparatively meagre emoluments. The honour and dignity attached to the office appear to be the more potent factors, while the spontaneous desire which springs forth from a patriotic zeal to help materially in promoting the welfare and developing the interests of their country at a time when their services are needed, and when the opportunity is afforded them of proving their capability to participate in the government of the country, seem to me to be the only consideration that should and undoubtedly will appear to the men who are best qualified to fill those offices and who can realize that the important trust attached to the offices renders them valuable in other respects, if not monetarily. We cannot divorce the question of finance in deciding this question, as has been pointed out by speakers who preceded me. If this is accepted by the House, it will dispose of the amendment of Mr. Das Gupta to adjourn the consideration of this question till after the Budget, as the deliberations of the committee are not likely to mature before that period.

Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: I rise to support the motion moved by Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur. I must at the outset say that this motion embodies the independent public opinion of Bengal. Sir, our country is poor—too poor to bear the heavy burden of cost, and I may say that the top is much heavier rather disproportionately heavier than the base. Now, Sir, to meet the immediate requirements of the country more money is urgently needed—I mean to say much more money than what is ordinarily budgeted for. The bulk of the people are sunk in ignorance and illiteracy and to drive away ignorance or illiteracy from the land money is urgently needed. Thousands of people are dying from malaria and other preventible diseases and to combat them—to grapple with the situation successfully—there is an importunate demand for money. There are other hundred and one similar purposes of an urgent character for which more money is needed.

Besides these, Government have got to meet a large deficit. Now, Sir, I put this question before the Council,—considering the circumstances, is it fair, is it just to appoint three ministers at a huge cost, namely, an annual salary of Rs. 64,000 each? Sir, economy demands that the pruning knife of retrenchment must be rigidly applied in all possible directions. In countries which are much richer than ours, where living is dearer than here, the pay of Ministers is much less, some notable instances of which have been given by the mover and other speakers, and I do not like to multiply instances and encroach upon the precious time of the Council. Now, Sir, this strengthens my position that the salary of the Ministers should be reduced. Last of all, I shall appeal to the Ministers themselves. I appeal to their patriotism to set a good example to their countrymen by generously coming forward to accept a reduced salary, and to give a signal proof that there is no paucity of worthy and eminent Indians who can carry on the administration successfully at a personal sacrifice and a further proof that if the services are Indianized the cost of the administration will be materially reduced.

With these words, I support the motion put by Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur.

At this stage the Council adjourned for fifteen minutes.

After the adjournment.

Mr. S. R. DAS: So many speakers have spoken on this question of salaries of the Ministers, and so many speakers, I know, still desire to speak on the subject, that I hesitated to inflict any speech on this House. But I feel that I must say a few words as a protest against one of the grounds which has been put forward by those who have supported the resolution. Rai Bahadur Jogendra Chunder Ghose stated that a hundred public meetings had taken place and that instructions had been given to the members from their constituencies to support this resolution. Now we all know how these meetings are engineered, and is it seriously suggested that we, as responsible men, are bound to follow blindly the uninformed opinion expressed in public meetings by those who have not the same opportunity as we have of studying this question? I have come here on the distinct understanding with my constituency that I shall reserve my judgment, my absolute independence of judgment, in all matters that come up here. My arrangement with my constituency is that I shall from time to time meet with them, not in any public meeting, because I do not believe in public meetings, but in groups of 10 or 12, explain to them the Bills or resolutions that come up before the House and tell them what my views are and what ought to be the attitude that we should take on those questions and endeavour to carry them always with me. If I should find that my constituency is opposed to me or rather that I do not represent their views after they have heard me, I emphasise that point, if I then find that I do not represent their views, I would much rather resign, so as to enable them to have another man to represent them, who will put forward their views. I refuse to put forward views merely because they are those of my constituency when I do not consider them to be in the interests of my country. I submit to the serious consideration of this House whether that ought not to be the attitude of all members. After all we have greater opportunities of studying and discussing these matters with people who are likely to know, and if our voters in our constituency form an opinion, that opinion is bound to be much less informed than ours. Our duty is to study the questions, exercise our judgment independently and vote accordingly, and then try to carry our constituency with us. We are here, I submit to the House, to lead our constituency and not to be led by them. It will be a great disaster if in voting on these resolutions we follow the principle that, because at a particular public meeting a particular view has been expressed, we are bound to vote according to that public opinion.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): I just want to say a few words from the point of view of the Finance Department and will not take the time of the Council long. The Council is clearly interested in this and other administrative questions, and I think it may be of assistance to them in coming to a conclusion if I describe very briefly how we deal with matters of this kind that come up to the Finance Department in regard to appointments which the local Government have the power to sanction. In the first place we consider whether an appointment is necessary or desirable. In the present case this Council could not consider that point, because it has been settled for them by an Act of Parliament, and therefore the only question for them is what rate of pay they should give. These posts are bound to be expensive posts, and we cannot but consider our financial position before we decide to sanction any rate of pay. I am not going to anticipate the secrets of the Budget, but I may say that the pay of the Ministers, at the same rate as the Executive Councillors, would be exceedingly small in proportion to our revenue, only a small fraction of 1 per cent. of the provincial income, and a few thousand rupees one way or the other will make very little difference in our financial position. The next question is, do these posts carry any market value under any general rule? There are plenty of posts like clerkships, Deputy Collectorships, Sub-Inspectors of Police, and so on, for which definite qualifications are required, and we know exactly what market rate is required to get men with those requisite qualifications. These posts of Ministers obviously do not come under that category, and the rate of pay cannot be based on any market rate. There are various proposals that have been put before the Council in regard to the rate of pay for these posts. If you will look at the paper, you will find that the first proposal is to fix the salary in sterling at the rate given in England to the Under-Secretary of State for India. For the reasons given by Sir Henry Wheeler I think we cannot fix it at that figure. Then the next proposal is to pay the Ministers Rs. 1,000 a month, which is the pay of a junior Superintendent of Police, and that is obviously too low. The next proposal is that the salary of a Minister should not exceed Rs. 2,500 a month. That is the pay of a senior Collector of 20 years' service, and I think that also is not suitable. The next proposal is to pay Rs. 3,000 a month, the pay of a Commissioner, this again is not adequate. The next proposal is to fix the salary at Rs. 3,500, the pay of the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation and the Chairman of the Calcutta Improvement Trust, which, of course are highly responsible offices, but still not nearly as responsible as that of a Member of Council or a Minister. When we look round outside the various proposals that have been made in this Council we see that there are certain officers called Members of Council who do the very same work as the Ministers perform, and we should be inclined to think that unless very good reasons to the contrary are shown, the Ministers should get the same pay as the Members of Council. This is not an imaginative way of dealing with things, but it is the way of sound common sense and I commend it to the consideration of the Council.

Colonel A. J. PUCH: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: I think the matter has already been discussed sufficiently, although many other members have expressed their desire to speak on the subject. It is better that I should put the question before the House.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I call for a division.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I rise to a point of order as to whether those gentlemen who have already spoken have a right to move for a closure.

The PRESIDENT: Yes, I have explained why I think that the question should be put. The House may now divide.

The closure was then put and declared lost, the voting being 62 for and 43 against it, a two-thirds majority not being obtained.

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MAITRA: I rise to support the motion of Mr. Hamid-ud-din Khan that the salary be fixed at not more than Rs. 3,000 a month. I have been discussing this matter with several friends of mine in and out of this Council, but nowhere have I been able to find out any cogent reasons for fixing their salaries at a higher sum. Sir, I am one of those who like to see our Ministers well paid and contented for maintaining their prestige and dignity, and I am one of those who would also like to appoint Ministers from the best brains of Bengal. But granting all that I do not admit that a salary of Rs. 3,000 a month will not be adequate and compatible with their position and status. Sir, the Ministers are our own people, born and nursed in the poor cradle of Bengal and bred amongst an environment where a person's worth has always been judged by the amount of his self-sacrifice and self-abnegation and never by the glitter of gold. Sir, how happy we would have been to-day had the Ministers themselves volunteered a reduction of their salaries and how high would they rise in the estimation of their countrymen. If the Hon'ble Ministers themselves have not found their way to do their duty to their poor country by a spirit of self-sacrifice, it behoves us, the first members of the Reformed Council of Bengal, to show in no uncertain terms that their country can ill-afford to pay them even a pice more than what is absolutely necessary for a decent living. I have given this matter my most earnest and impartial consideration and I am convinced that a salary higher than Rs. 3,000 a month should on no account be granted. Thus, I may add, is the maximum, which my own constituency has especially asked me to support, and I am in entire agreement with them. I fully believe that this sum will prove more than sufficient, if the Ministers do condescend to live in Indian style and conduct themselves as pure Indians with a sincere love of their country in their heart. This is at least the view of one who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow, and does not enjoy the sweets of inherited wealth.

Mr. A. C. DUTT: After so many lengthy speeches I do not think I shall be justified in detaining the House very long, but there is one thing I should like to say with reference to this matter. To start with I may say that I am opposed to all these resolutions and amendments. I say that the Ministers' salary should not be lowered at all, and the reasons are quite clear. Rai Bahadur Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur has said that Ministers ought to draw a salary of something like Rs. 1,875 a month, which corresponds to £1,500 a year. I do not know whether he seriously brought forward that proposition, because I am of opinion that, if that is the view of this Council, then the Reforms are gone. I have come here because I believe in the Reforms. With all their drawbacks I think the Reforms will push us forward and, in 10 or 15 years, we shall have a proper form of responsible government. If the Ministers' salary is fixed at Rs. 1,875, I am sure we shall not get capable men to undertake that task. I know Bengal abounds with patriotic people, but all patriotic people are not capable men. It is a notorious fact that, with a few honourable exceptions, we cannot get good men from the Bar to accept High Court Judgeships. The position of our Ministers is more difficult than the position of a Minister in a free country. He is responsible not only to the Council, but also to the Government, and he may be dismissed by the Governor; if he does not command a majority in the Council they may cut down his budget demand so as to make administration impossible. This is a temporary arrangement. As I understand, this system will continue for 10 years and no more. What is the saving that will be effected by the proposal which has been moved by Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur? The saving would be something like Rs. 1½ lakh a year and not more than that. You will really save about Rs. 10 or 12 lakhs in the next ten years, and for the purpose of that saving should we jeopardise the experiment? I think this proposal might very well have been moved by a non-co-operator, and, if Rai Bahadur Jogendra Chunder Ghose is a non-co-operator, he should not have been in this Council. These motions should have been moved by persons who want to see that the Reforms do not succeed. For these reasons I strongly suggest that the Ministers' pay should not be reduced even by a single penny.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: The House is getting a little impatient and I think it is our duty to make our observations as brief as possible. Sir, in my hand I have a report of a proceedings of a committee of non-official members of the Bengal Legislative Council appointed to consider the Reform proposals in accordance with a resolution passed by the members at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council held on the 14th November, 1918, which submitted its report to the Government of Bengal. Sir, that committee of non-official members was presided over by Babu Ambika Charan Mazumdar, a man who is held in high esteem throughout Bengal, and I find that that report has been signed by men like Rai Bahadur Mahendra Chandra Mitra, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, Raja Reshee Case Law and Dr. A. Suhrawardy, and, Sir, I find that on the 16th November, 1918, a resolution was passed, which was moved by the Hon'ble Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq; and the resolution runs as follows:—"That the status, privileges and emoluments of the Ministers should be the same as those of the Members of the provincial Executive Council."

The committee unanimously agreed to the proposal.

Sir, these are my countrymen who are regarded as our greatest leaders. Many of them are present in this House to-night. I do not think that the proposition that Bengal is poor, that the people of Bengal are very destitute, that the economic position is very acute, has for the first time been discovered, just as Columbus discovered America. I think it was known to the great leaders at that time. Were not they aware that this Reform Scheme, which was going to be introduced into this country, would be a costly administration? My friend Dr. Suhrawardy says he was himself not aware what this administration was going to cost. He may not have been aware of the number of members, but surely he was aware that the administration was going to be a bigger one and a costlier one. There is absolutely no shadow of doubt about that. Sir, I am not convinced that this reduction in the salary of Ministers will materially change the economic condition of the country. I do not know what that reduction will amount to; the members of the House have not been able to make up their minds. Some think our Ministers ought to get Rs. 1,000, some think Rs. 1,500, others think Rs. 2,500 or Rs. 3,000, some say Rs. 3,500. The fact that we have not come to a decision yet shows that we have not yet been able to make up our minds in the matter. If reduction is to be made, why should reduction be made by first of all stultifying the position of our own countrymen? This is what I cannot understand. If reduction is to be made, let it be made from the very top. Why should not the Governor's salary be reduced? Why not the salary of the Executive Councillors? I cannot understand why our Ministers should get salaries less than their Secretaries. It is preposterous that our Ministers should get salaries which would take away the dignity of the post; besides, reduction will put a premium on mediocrity; it will mean an influx of men of mediocre ability and mediocre intelligence. The greatest calamity that can befall the country is to reduce it to mediocrity. Economy will be assured by efficiency first, so we want the best men; we do not want mediocre, incompetent men as our Ministers. Sir, I do not hold a brief for our present Ministers; they are on their trial, they will soon be tested; their abilities will soon be examined; if they do not rise to the occasion, they must go; they will be weighed in the balance, and, if they are found wanting, they must go. We want the very best men, and if we get the very best men, I am sure they will take the initiative; they will show us the way how to make retrenchment, how to effect economy. They are the men who will feel for the poor; they will tell us how to devise the means that will go to alleviate misery and distress.

Therefore, Sir, I oppose the resolution and all the amendments with all the emphasis I can command, because I see that it will surely lead to calamity and catastrophe.

Maulvi MUHAMMAD ABDUL JUBBAR PAHLOWAN: My learned predecessors have discussed the subject in its various aspects. There remains very little to be discussed; yet considering the poverty of the province and the responsibility which lies on my shoulders, as a representative of 20 millions of people, most of whom are in a state of nakedness and almost without food, I am obliged to add a few words on this subject. I have come to learn that some of my colleagues are of opinion that if the salary of the Ministers be less than the salary of the Executive Councillors, the status of our Ministers will be lowered; but I appeal to those of my friends to consider what the status is. Does the gradation of status depend upon the money value of a post or on the responsibility of the post and respect thereby won?

While considering this I invite the attention of the House to the past history of the Muslims. When the Muslim Government was on a representative system, and the Khalifa or temporal Presidents were elected by the people, they would get only a small portion of the revenue; were they not respected by the people? Leaving aside the question of status, if we consider the object of the Government, we find that good government is necessary for the progress of a country, by establishing peace and tranquillity. It is not meant to pay some persons high salaries to enable them to indulge in luxuries. Indeed, if the financial condition of a country permits, some sort of luxury may be allowed to officials, but in a province like Bengal where medical treatment for the poor is objected to on the excuse of want of money, can we allow such a luxury? Apart from the question of poverty, if we compare the salary of our Ministers with that of Ministers in Japan and Canada, as stated by our learned leader Rai Bahadur Jogendra Chunder Ghose, we find that it is far greater. Is Bengal richer than Japan? Considering all these statements, I say I would have been glad if the salary of the Ministers be fixed at Rs. 1,000, although this figure is stated by some of my colleagues to be a ridiculous one; but I request those friends to wait for a few years and see whether it is really so. This idea is due to our blindness in regard to the question of status.

Before I sit down, I wish to submit one thing before the House.

[At this stage the member hesitated and appeared to sit down and the President called upon Mr. H. A. Stark to speak.]

Mr. H. A. STARK: The question to me seems to be "Are we going to make the Reform Scheme a failure or a success?" With all this harping on economy it does look as if we were going to starve the whole scheme. Efficiency may go, let us have economy. Dignity of office may go, give us economy. Capacity to do our work may go, let us study economy. The Reform Scheme itself may go too, let us have economy. Now economy in the abstract is generally regarded as a virtue, but it may become a fetish, a mere clap-trap or a shibboleth; it may even grow into a vice. What do we intend doing? Are we going to find cheap bargains in our Ministers. If we do, we shall some day pay dearly for our folly. The sound business man does not starve his factory. He puts into it the best plant he can purchase, the most expert workers that money can procure. He recognises that parsimony will be fatal. He realises that the quality of the output will be regulated by the quality of the machine and the ability of those who work it; and so he invests his money in men and materials, and pays adequately and even handsomely, and reaps his reward in large profits. Now, let us admit that we are all in this Council from motives of patriotism, but have we any right to put an unnecessary strain on any man's patriotism? We want men who will give us of their experience, their culture, their high ability, their time, their health, their all, and we would barter and haggle with them over remuneration. We put them in exalted positions of dignity and exacting responsibility, and we want them to carry their dignity and to bear the load of their responsibility for an inadequate return. We all know that men of outstanding worth often have unreasonable requests made of them.

The story goes that a provincial magazine in England once asked Mr. W. T. Stead to oblige by contributing an article to the journal, and also by giving them a New Year's motto. He replied that he had not the time to write an article, but the proprietors of the magazine were welcome to a New Year's motto—"Nothing for nothing, and damned little for sixpence." The Ministers would be perfectly justified were they to make this Council the same retort. Doubtless we shall always find men willing to be our Ministers for any salary whatever that we can offer, but cheapness and nastiness go together. Cheap Ministers will be dear at any price. Are we thinking of bidding for second-rate and third-rate men? I feel, and feel most strongly, that in the critical period through which we are passing, India cannot spend too much either on her statesmen or on her educators. In the ten years of our probation in responsible government, let us throw aside every other consideration, and put every pice we can into the machinery of our Government; every pice we can spare into speeding up the education of our people. In both matters of government and education we should deal generously with those upon whose efficiency and proficiency the future of responsible government really depends. We want that form of government—let us pay for it, and get it. The time is not yet when we should put our Ministers and our Government on short rations.

A great deal has been made of the poverty of the people and the hardships imposed on them by the salaries proposed for the Ministers. I think the hardship has been magnified by several diameters. A simple computation brings out the fact that if each person in Bengal pays less than one pie per month, the annual salaries of all three of our Ministers at Rs. 64,000 each would be obtained. Less than one pie per man per month! I do not consider that asking people to pay one pie per month for the ministerial executive—without which popular government is impossible—is asking them to pay too much. Ten years hence a reckoning will be made. Let us lay the foundation of self-government upon a liberal scale so strong and broad that it will bear not only the first storey that it will fall to us to build, but that it may later attain its completion in a self-governing India within the Empire.

I oppose the original motion and all its amendments.

Mr. C. W. RHODES: I move that the question be now put.

Maulvi MUHAMMAD ABDUL JUBBAR PAHLOWAN: I beg to invite your attention to one point—

The PRESIDENT: The motion now is that the question be now put. I must put that before the House.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I want a division.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: There are two more gentlemen who desire to speak, Sir—Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri and Babu S. N. Ray.

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! I put the motion to a division.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I again ask you for a ruling on the point whether those who have spoken are entitled to vote.

The PRESIDENT: Yes.

A division that the motion be now put was taken with the result that 64 voted for and 45 against the closure. A two-thirds majority not being obtained, the closure was accordingly lost.

The debate was then resumed.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I had no desire to speak, but I feel, I must respond to the call. There can be no question that the position of a Minister is one of the highest in the country; and that the position itself will attract the best men in the country. When we are thinking of our best men, we are not thinking of men who are attracted by emoluments, but we are thinking of those who are inspired by their love for the country to work for the country. We want such men; and we may congratulate ourselves that we have got some such men. I am a disciple of one of these men, who has worked for the country for a great many years, and who, I have not the least doubt, has been attracted to this office for the opportunity that it gives him to serve the country.

• We have heard a good deal about their status. Now, the status that the Ministers have is admittedly one of the highest and we do not want it to be reduced.

With regard to the question of prestige it has got to be won by work. We are not in the habit of thinking that pay makes position, prestige or status. The other day we passed a resolution that the number of the Executive Councillors should be reduced, and we did it on the ground of economy. We ask for economy; but, we have got the chance now of doing something for ourselves. We want our very best men as I have already said; but not men who will refuse to work for us, if they find that their pay is not equal to that of the Executive Councillors?

Now, Sir, may I read just one passage from the Report of the Joint Committee? "They advise that the status of Ministers should be similar to that of the Members of the Executive Council, but that the salaries should be fixed by the Legislative Council." Later on, in this report, we find: "It will be suggested that the Indian members of the Council of India in London should be paid a higher scale of remuneration than those of the members of the Council domiciled in the United Kingdom. The same principle might suggest itself to the Legislative Council that it was reasonable for the Ministers of the Provincial Councils domiciled in India to be paid on a lower scale of remuneration than the European members." That is one ground for our thinking that the pay of our Ministers should be reduced as they are domiciled in the country. Are we to be told that persons elected as Members of this House, or persons selected by the Government having confidence in them, have been attracted to come here because of the possibility of their getting a high pay? I hope that that will not be said of our present Ministers. My idea is, that we ought to show that we can get our very best men at low figures. It has been said that we have always asked to be paid the same pay as officers selected by the Government. That was done on a racial basis, namely, that if they valued their men at a particular figure, we wanted our own men to be valued at the same figure.

We say that we can attract our very best men for a pay which is lower than the pay of the Executive Councillors. If we can do so, it must be conceded that the pay of the Executive Councillors, Government officers is too high, and that therefore their pay ought to be reduced. I am therefore in favour of the proposition that the pay of the Ministers should be reduced. If, as a disciple, I had to make my offerings to my guru, I should certainly wish that the whole wealth of Bengal be laid at his feet; but, when we are dealing with a matter which is for the good of the country he ought to be satisfied with less.

The PRESIDENT: I wish to tell the members of this Council that I have got a long list of speakers and that I intend to finish the discussion at this sitting. Therefore, the only way to finish it is for the members to make their speeches as short as they can.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: I beg to support the motion that stands in the name of Maulvi Hamid-ud-din Khan that the salary of the Ministers be fixed at not above Rs. 3,000; and in doing so I not only feel called upon to explain why of all the motions under section 52(1) of the Government of India Act this one meets with my approval, but at the same time to state why I cannot vote for a ministerial salary being fixed at Rs. 64,000 per annum. I could have spared myself this labour, if I could be sure that there was no likelihood of our conduct being questioned or motives misinterpreted. Sir, believe me when I say that I have given every thought to the arguments that have been, or can possibly be, advanced with any show of reason for the proposal that the ministerial salary should not suffer any reduction; but in spite of all attempts to understand the position of the supporters of such a proposal, I have not been able to persuade myself to accept it. For what are after all the arguments in favour of non-reduction? The main point that I have been able to gather is that any reduction in the salary of the Minister will go to lower his position. Sir, this, I beg to say, is a wrong supposition. The rank or dignity of an office-bearer depends, not on remuneration or pay attached to the office, but on the function and duties he has to perform—depends on the powers, and not on the pelf. Who was there, except the old woman at the countryside, who prayed for a darogaship for the Subdivisional Officer, who could think that the office of the English premier is inferior in position to that of the Governor-General of India, simply because the latter gets much higher salary than the former? Nor can it be anything but puerile, I suppose, to argue that the status of the Secretary of State for India is lower than that of a member of the Viceregal Council because he gets lesser emoluments. As regards the Secretary of State, I know, the supporters of maximum ministerial salary will say that he has not got to come out to India. But they cannot avail of this argument without cutting off the grounds from under their own feet. However, the idea that the status of an official—a people's representative—depends on his pay is a much too antiquated one—a relic of old, which ill-assorts with reforms.

The second argument that is advanced in favour of non-reduction is that it will accentuate the difference between the Europeans and the Indians. How this argument can be literally true and applicable, when there are Indian councillors and Indians in the higher ranks of the Civil Service, we cannot appreciate. Even if it does accentuate the difference, it should cause others who are not in any way superior to our Ministers in ability and position to be ashamed of their conduct, and not disgrace or in any way lower the position of our Ministers. For the Ministers, by accepting a lower salary, will simply prove their kind consideration for their poor country, their high sense of patriotism and above all their fitness to be the people's representatives in the Government. If we are not to look to the Ministers to set examples, to establish by their ability and acceptance of a salary commensurate with the economic condition of their own people the case for reduction of administrative expenditure on unassailable grounds, then we do not know whom we can turn to. Will they not advance the cause of the Reforms by accepting a salary commensurate with the economic condition of their own people? Will they not rise in popular estimation thereby? Were not 6,000 francs a month responsible for the fall of Mirabeau, the only man who could bring about the constitutional reforms of France even in 1790! But I forget there is yet another, a third argument, that the Minister's salary should be sacrosanct and irreducible, in view of our incompetence to reduce the salary of the Executive Councillors and others. I think this argument can appeal only to those who think with the casuists that two wrongs will make one right. Our reply is that we were not responsible for the original scale, nor we have any hand in the matter. It was done by those who thought it best to impose the costliest administration on the poorest country in the world, and the inadequate nature of the Reforms in this respect are responsible for it. The inadequate nature of our Reforms in this respect, which I say advisedly will at once appear to you if you simply take note from the following quotation from Erskine May of what prevailed before and happened after the Reform Act in England in this direction:—

“No example,” says Erskine May, “more aptly illustrates the altered relations of rulers to the people than the revision of official emoluments. Ministers once grew rich upon the gains of office, and provided for their relatives by monstrous sinecures and appointments egregiously overpaid. To grasp a great estate out of the public service, was too often their first thought. Families were founded, titles endowed and broken fortunes repaired at the public expense. It was asked what an office was worth, not what services were to be rendered. This selfish and dishonest system perished under exposure, but it proved a tedious and unthankful labour to bring its abuses to the light of day.” And though “soon after the Reform Act Ministers of State accepted salaries scarcely equal to the charges of office, sinecures and reversions were abolished, offices discontinued or consolidated, and the scale of official emoluments revised, and apportioned to the duties performed, throughout the public service. The change attested a higher sense of duty in Ministers and increased responsibility to public opinion.” Now, Sir, anyone who expects to see similar results from our Reforms will not, I hope, be accused of rank extremism or sheer perversity.

However, I don't like to finish simply by examining the case for non-reduction. I would like to request the Councillors over here to take note of the public opinion outside this Chamber, and to think of the condition of the people whom we have come to represent here. The Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim has said: “It is no use drawing the analogies of other countries—look to the condition of Bengal.” And what is our condition? Our child-mortality is increasing, our death-rate is going up above the birth-rate, our vitality is going down, our poverty is increasing and famines are not only not infrequent but not even a thing long past. Our agriculture is in the primitive undeveloped state and financial stringency stands in the way of the diffusion of even primary education.

At this stage the speaker, having exceeded the time-limit, had to resume his seat.

Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: It has been urged as a ground for reduction of Ministers' salaries—a reduction that can save the country utmost a lakh of rupees a year—it has been urged that the country is poor and cannot afford to pay high salaries—I maintain, Sir, that this country, I mean Bengal, is not poor at all. It is enormously wealthy compared with the wealth of its sister province as I will presently show, but the wealth is in the hands of a very small minority, and the majority, who constitute the real people of Bengal, are miserably poor. As regards the wealth of Bengal, take any item—the land-revenue for instance—it produced nearly 2·80 crores of rupees in 1918-19. At a conservative estimate of five times, the landholders derive at least 14 crores of rupees as rent from land, and therefore the capital value of the landholders excluding revenue-free Sunderban lands, is, at the lowest estimate, 280 crores of rupees, viz., twenty times the rental income. Take the income-tax as the next item Bengal paid, more strictly speaking the towns of Bengal paid, 1·54 crores of rupees in 1917-18, and a major portion of it is paid by 858 persons who enjoy incomes of over Rs. 25,000 a year. Taking one anna tax in the rupee-income, the incomes of assesses exceed 24 crores of rupees. Its capital value would therefore be at 20 times—480 crores of rupees. The owners of land and the merchants, the manufacturers and the money-lenders own therefore 760 crores of rupees of property or wealth in Bengal. Imagine, Sir, that only 2 per cent. and not even that, of a population of 45 millions in Bengal, own 760 crores of rupees, and the rest, mostly raiyats, wage-earners and petty traders who pay rent, interest and profit, are unusually poor. I don't mind even paying Rs. 10,000 a month to a Minister or an expert if he can help in the redistribution of this enormous wealth, so that the poor raiyats can secure better incomes from land, the hard-working and ill-paid labourers can get better wages by the sweat of their brows and the wage-earning bhadralogs better pay, and all of them be freed from the scourge of malaria and other diseases.

Babu SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHAYA: In rising to address this House for the first time on a subject of very great importance, I am, I admit, fully conscious of being inadequately equipped with the necessary information. Not long ago the Hon'ble Minister in charge of the Education portfolio exposed in no unmistakable terms the appalling deficit with which the approaching provincial budget estimates were to start. That astounding revelation was in itself enough to create the apprehension in the minds of the public that nothing short of fresh taxation would enable the exchequer to avoid a catastrophe and recover from the impending impasse. With that disheartening fact staring the province in the face it would be unpolitic, nay hardly judicious, if we elect to close our eyes and try to ignore the gravity of the situation by maintaining an attitude of indifference and abusing the privilege conferred upon us by the Joint Select Committee of voting the salaries of Ministers. The motions and the amendments dealing with the question of fixing the salaries of Ministers, with which the agenda paper is encumbered, because put forward with the best of intentions and with an eye to economy, should, I submit, receive the very careful and reasoned consideration of this House. If it is politic, if it is just, that we should cut our coat according to our cloth, then surely in the present financial crisis, with which we are confronted, we are justified in asking the Ministers to be magnanimous enough to concede to the province the sacrifice which they can well afford to make. Now is the time when a penny saved is a pound gained. The present financial condition of Bengal, even if it may appear to have infinite capacity for improvement, does not warrant its debit side to be continually burdened while its credit side remains stationary. While, therefore, I have no hesitation in joining the ranks of those members, who stand for all-round economy and thrift, and give my hearty support to the motion for restricting within reasonable bounds the salary of our Ministers, I must confess I do not see my way to go so far as to recommend the whittling down of the salary of Ministers to some thing like a vanishing point—to what in fact may not only effect the dignity of their high office but may chill their enthusiasm. In the English constitution Ministers are servants of the Crown as well as the servants of the people. In our embryo constitution it is the Government that have appointed the Ministers, but it is for us, members of this Council, to guard against being carried away by the “breezes or the gales of a public opinion,” which, in its enthusiasm for effecting economy, may lend itself to a policy that is devoid of a sense of proportion. On the other hand, we must guard against the policy of robbing Peter to pay Paul. What we should aim at is consistency—a uniform policy of retrenchments. It was only yesterday that this Council protested against and, by a significant majority, resolved upon the discontinuance of the expenditure annually incurred on the Darjeeling exodus. Are we not justified in recommending that the salary of the Ministers should be made to reach a point that may on the one hand effect an appreciable saving and, on the other be consistent with the dignity of their exalted office? Babu S. N. Ray has shown an example of self-sacrificing devotion, deserving of the highest encomium; but we would not go so far as to ask everyone to follow his example, for everyone may not be fortunate enough like him to afford it. But we implore our Ministers, all the same, to rise to the height of the occasion, to help Bengal to extricate itself from the slough, if not of despond, at least of a lamentable financial deficit. The golden mean would, I submit, be the fixing of their salary not on the standard of Japan or Canada, England or America, but at Rs. 3,000 a month or something above the salary of the Secretaries under them.

With these few words, I beg to commend this important question to the wisdom and good sense of this meeting.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I must say at the outset that this is not one of those resolutions which ought to have been placed in the agenda of the first meeting of the Reformed Council. It appears that some of my friends here thought that the Ministers were like so many burglars running away with the money from the pocket of the tax-payers. The hot haste with which this resolution has been moved shows that my friends, the movers of the resolution and amendments thereto, have got no regard for the Ministers. They could certainly have waited till the budget time, and then we could have an opportunity of fixing the salaries of the Ministers. There was absolutely no occasion for bringing forward this resolution in such hot haste.

Then, there is another thing which I ought to say at the outset and it is this that I have very grave doubts whether the Government themselves could have fixed the salary of the Ministers.

My friend, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, has said that he would fix the salary at £1,500: to that my answer is that that scale may be suitable for England and not for India, because here in India we have got the Secretaries who work under the Ministers getting each, at least a salary of Rs. 2,750 per month. Does my friend want to say that the Secretary of State for India draws a salary less than that of the Under-Secretary for State? But I must say that our Ministers, as popular leaders and as representatives of popular constituencies, ought to have come forward before the public in a self-sacrificing spirit and ought to have offered to accept the posts for a less remuneration than what the Government wants to give them. We all know that such a spirit of self-sacrifice prevails in England. We all know that Sir William Harcourt, who was the Chancellor of the Exchequer and also as Home Secretary during the administration of Mr. Gladstone for a period of nearly 20 years, and what was his pay—his pay was only £5,000 per annum. But what was his income before he served in those capacities—his income was £20,000 per annum; and he sacrificed this income for a period of 20 years. Perhaps, you all know what sacrifice Mr. Asquith has made. If he had wished he could have become the Lord Chancellor and could have drawn the handsome salary of £10,000 per annum. No doubt we heard a good deal about prestige and status in this House; but we also know that in England the Prime Minister appoints the Lord Chancellor and the former gets £5,000 a year, whereas the latter gets £10,000. The Prime Minister appoints the Judges of the High Courts, the Master of the Rolls and the Attorney-General; but the Prime Minister gets a pay less than each of these officials. For these reasons, I say, the question of status and prestige does not come in at all. I think that in a matter like this the Ministers ought to have set an example to the country.

Then, my learned friend and pupil, Professor Mukherji has said that we must begin by cutting the pay of the Governor and not the pay of the Ministers. To that, I say—let our public men show an example that they are willing to serve the country for a less amount, and then we can go to the Government and say that our countrymen are willing to serve for a less remuneration. Otherwise, we cannot go to them and ask them to use the pruning knife. He has also referred to a document—the report of the committee of non-official members of the last Bengal Legislative Council, which sat to consider the Reform Scheme—of which

I was a member. I suggested then that the pay of the Ministers should not be the same as that of the Members of the Legislative Council, and in fact I sent in a resolution recommending that the pay should be Rs. 2,500, but, as I was in a hopeless minority, I thought it prudent to submit to the voice of the majority. But things have changed since then. We have now got the report of the Joint Committee, dated the 17th November, 1919. My friend, Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, has already quoted from that report. Well, there we find that the Indian members of the Council of the Secretary of State are given a larger salary than that of the European members, because it is a foreign service in the case of the Indians. So, here in India, we have to pay a larger amount to the European members. In fact the Joint Committee distinctly say: that the status of Ministers should be similar to that of the Members of the Executive Council, but that their salaries should be fixed by the Legislative Council. Later on, in this report, it is suggested that Indian members of the Council of India should be paid a higher scale of remuneration than those members of the Council domiciled in the United Kingdom. The same principle might suggest itself to the Legislative Council that it was reasonable for the Ministers of the Provincial Governments domiciled in India to be paid on a lower scale of remuneration than the European members.

That was their recommendation and it is for this reason that it was put down in the Government of India Act that the pay should be the same as that of the Members of the Executive Council, unless the Legislative Council of the province otherwise direct.

We are here to-day to consider the salaries of Ministers. If we consider that the pay ought to be less, I think we ought to reduce it. At least my own opinion is that the Ministers ought to come forward and tell us frankly that they are willing to accept a lower remuneration. I also deprecate the idea of extorting this concession at the point of the bayonet. But it is not also a good spirit on their part to remain obdurate in defiance of public opinion. We have got a duty to perform to our constituents, and with what face shall we go to our constituents if we do not represent their views in this room?

Mr. H. BARTON: I cannot help saying that I view this resolution with a sense of deep shame—a shame in which this Council will clothe itself if it permits this motion to be passed.

Sir, this is a question which ought to be approached with reasonableness, fairness and consistency. But I cannot say, having heard all the various movers, that any one of them has displayed any one of these qualities. We have heard a great deal of the poverty of the people. One speaker also referred to the Christian religion in connection with it. But I am sure no religion on the face of the earth has succeeded in warding off distress. We are told from time to time that charity begins at home. May I also point out that self-sacrifice also begins at home. How many lawyers, may I ask, will take up the cases of poor men free of charge? How many landlords are prepared to sacrifice a portion of their houses for the poor? How many of the rice merchants will set aside a portion of their rice for the poor? How many cloth dealers are prepared to clothe the naked? Sir, the pay of the ordinary postmaster in a presidency town is Rs. 1,000, and is it unreasonable that our Ministers should be paid Rs. 5,000? Is that reasonable or fair and consistent with their responsibility? We find many men in subordinate positions in Government service getting a salary of Rs. 800 or Rs. 900 a month.

I take it that one of the objects which actuated the people of India in pressing for the Reforms now in operation was to bring into more prominence their own countrymen—to place them in a position that will bring to them the same prestige, dignity and consideration as have all along been accorded to the higher officials of Government.

Sir, His gracious Majesty the King-Emperor, mindful of the claims of his Indian subjects, thought them worthy of the presence of no less a person than his own royal son, the Prince of Wales, to inaugurate the Reformed Councils—an honour which cannot be too deeply appreciated, an honour equally well maintained by the Commission of his Royal uncle, the Duke of Connaught, a true friend of India, a son of our late much revered Queen-Empress of India, to whom the people of India owe so much. Sir, His Majesty's message on the inauguration of the Councils means above all that we should treat those appointed to the high offices of the Reformed Council consistently with the honour and dignity bestowed upon them.

The resolution produces before me a sad picture—standing side by side with the message of our gracious King, and to see the newly appointed Members of the Council sharing in the dignity and splendour of an innovation which should be the lasting pride of every son of India. What is the message that this picture conveys? Sir, it is a message that the power and the greatness you have sought for is yours in full measure, and there are your trusted representatives, who stand on the same platform with royalties. “Honour them as you will honour me,” says the Royal message. But is this how we intend to serve those who are filling these high offices in response to our demands?

Yesterday by our verdict we rejected by a large majority the motion for reducing the number of Ministers. It was an eulogy on the hard and necessary duties that must devolve upon them. It was a generous verdict, which showed clearly the finding of the Council. As regards the present resolution, Sir, if those who opposed the reduction in the number of Ministers desire that their finding should be respected, they should throw away this resolution also. The mere thought of reducing the salary of the Ministers implies an aspersion on their deservedness and, in face of the verdict arrived at yesterday, it would be inconsistent, unreasonable and unjust and not altogether free from a certain amount of personal element which should never find a place in our deliberation. For these reasons I oppose those resolutions. May I add that when you start cutting down the pay of the Ministers, you must in fairness consider that in the end you will have to cut down the pay of other people. Is this Council working for a revolution or for progressive government? I say therefore that we are approaching a very dangerous subject, and should do well to leave it alone and abide by the decision of His Excellency the Governor in this respect.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY moved for a closure.

The motion was put and carried 75 voting for and 22 against.

The PRESIDENT then put the motions in the following order:—

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: "That the question of the salaries of the Ministers be adjourned for consideration till after the presentation of the annual Budget."

The motion was put and lost.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: "That the salaries of the Ministers be reduced to such an amount as may be decided by this Council after considering the recommendation of a Committee consisting of the following members:—

The motion was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Before you adjourn the meeting I desire to make an announcement. There has been a very strong feeling in certain quarters in connection with the reduction of Ministers' pay. We are resolved not to accept any reduction of any kind in respect of our pay and that is the sense of this Council, but in deference to the sentiment to which I have referred, I desire to say on behalf of the Ministers that we have decided to take only Rs. 48,000 for our personal expenses and devote the rest to public purposes. (Applause).

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to Monday, the 21st February, 1921, at 11 A.M., in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

THE BENGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

(Official Report of the First Session.)

VOLUME I—No. 3.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

The Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Monday, the 21st February, 1921, at 11 A.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 92 nominated and elected members.

President's Speech.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda: I regret to have to announce so early in the life of this Council the death of one of its members, Raja Narendra Lal Khan of Narajole. This melancholy event took place on Monday, the 14th of this month. The last public act of the Raja was to take the oath of allegiance to His Majesty the King-Emperor. He was a rich and powerful zamindar and represented the non-Muhammadan constituency of North Midnapore. I have no doubt that by his position and influence he would have been a source of strength to this Council and would have worthily represented his constituency here. We all mourn his loss, and I propose, with the permission of this Council, to convey to the members of the family of the deceased, through his son, an expression of our sympathy with them in their bereavement. I believe I have the permission.

Action will be taken as I have proposed.

There is one other matter to which I want to refer now. It has been represented to me that there are several members of this Council who are not acquainted with the English language or at least do not know English sufficiently well to transact their business with this Council in English. I had occasion to point out once before that under the rules the business of the Council must be conducted in English. An alteration in the rules is a matter of considerable difficulty, and will also involve a good deal of delay. The Government have, however, come forward to assist the members by getting notices of questions and resolutions translated by the Official Translator, and the Legislative Department will, when the translations are received, deal with them. But it must be understood that the translations will be treated by this Department as the originals and will be dealt with on that footing; that is to say, the notices will be considered to have been received on the day the translations are received from the Translator. Members will also understand that in order to get the benefit of this concession they will not be allowed to question the accuracy of the translations.

Starred Questions

(to which oral answers were given).

Expenditure on reserved and transferred subjects.

*I. Babu SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHAYA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing separately the amounts actually spent during the years 1917-18, 1918-19, 1919-20 and during the first nine months of the year 1920-21, on subjects which are treated as "Reserved" and on those that have been transferred under the Government of India Act?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): The member is referred to the answer given to unstarred question No. 42 asked by Rai Harendranath Chaudhuri at the meeting of the Legislative Council on the 7th February, 1921.

Want of Government High School at Patuakhali.

* II. Maulvi FAZAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether it is a fact that there is a Government High English School in each subdivision of Bakarganj besides Patuakhali?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the subdivision of Patuakhali is chiefly inhabited by Muhammadans and that they are most backward in point of education?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to say whether the Government are considering the desirability of establishing a Government High English School at Patuakhali or of provincialising the existing Government High English School?

The DEPUTY SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (Mr. W. W. Hornell): (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) The high schools at Jhalakati, Pirojpur and Bhola were provincialised for special reasons. It is the policy of Government to establish a Government High School for boys at each district headquarters. Financial considerations preclude the possibility of extending this policy to subdivisional headquarters. In view of the fact that the Bakarganj district already has four provincialised high schools, Government are not prepared to consider the question of establishing a fifth at Patuakhali.

Muhammadian graduates.

* III. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state the number of Muhammadans who have graduated in the B.A. degree during the last seven years, from 1914 to 1920, year by year, from the Calcutta University?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): The member is referred to the calendars of the Calcutta University.

Muhammadian prisoners, their clothing and facilities to say their prayers.

* IV. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Muhammadans form the major portion of the jail population in Bengal?

(b) What is the percentage of Muhammadan Jailors, Assistant Jailors and Warders in the jails of Bengal?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that according to Shariat (Muhammadian religion) it is incumbent on a Muhammadan to cover the lower part of his body, from the navel to the knee?

(d) Is it a fact that the short trousers supplied to the prisoners do not fulfil the purpose of Shariat?

(e) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of directing that the Muhammadan prisoners are not to be dressed in any manner repulsive to the Muhammadan religion?

(f) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state—

(i) whether the prisoners are given facilities for performing their daily religious duties;

(ii) whether there is any arrangement in the jails to enable the prisoners to say their prayers according to religion; and

(iii) whether the jail officers have any instructions to give facilities to the prisoners to say their prayers?

* (g) If the answer to clause (f) is in the negative, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the Government are considering the desirability of making arrangements in all jails to enable the prisoners to say their prayers and to see that orders are passed upon the jail to give facilities to the prisoners to say their prayers?

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): (a) Yes. Of the convicts admitted to jails in 1919, over 55 per cent. were Muhammadan.

(b) At present there is no Muhammadan Jailor; 26 per cent. of the Assistant Jailors and Probationers, 14 per cent. of Head Warders and 13 per cent. of Warders are Muhammadan.

(c) Yes, during prayers.

(d) The trousers supplied to prisoners do not cover the knee. While saying their prayers, Muhammadan prisoners generally use the gamchas issued to them to cover their knees.

(e) The question of issuing longer trousers to prisoners is being considered.

(f) (i) (ii) and (iii) Yes, under rule 670 of the Jail Code. The question of affording further facilities to prisoners for the performance of religious duties is under consideration.

(g) This does not arise.

Circulation of Mr. Biss's report on primary education.

* V. Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether it is the intention of the Government to circulate the report of Mr. Biss regarding primary education in Bengal to local bodies and public associations for their opinion?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: Mr. Biss's report is not yet available. When it is available, district boards and municipalities and public associations will be consulted.

Motor-car accidents in the streets of Calcutta.

* VI. Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department been drawn to the fact that motor car accidents in the streets of Calcutta are on the increase?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state—

(i) the number of such accidents in 1920, 1919 and 1918, and

(ii) the number of arrests for rash and negligent driving during the same period?

(c) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member been drawn to the observation of the Commissioner of the Calcutta Police in his last Administration Report that "most of the cases of rash and negligent driving of motor cars placed before the courts were acquitted on legal technicalities as opposed to facts, and then in the small number of cases convicted, sentences awarded were ludicrously inadequate and the value of human life was written down to a minimum"?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether any remedial measures are under consideration?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that an injured person is first taken to a thana and then to a hospital, instead of being immediately removed to a hospital?

(f) Is it a fact that neither the police nor the hospital authorities take any steps to inform the relatives of the injured person of the occurrence of the accident?

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) Yes.

(b) The statistics kept relate to—

(i) Persons killed or injured, not to accidents. The figures are as follows:—

				Injured.	Killed.	Total
1918	561	42	603
1919	656	58	714
1920	1,291	105	1,396

(ii) Cases of rash and negligent driving —

				On arrest.	On summons.	Total
1918	325	127	452
1919	313	127	440
1920	225	272	497

(c) Yes.

(d) The question of increasing the staff of the Public Vehicles Department is under consideration. Government have appointed a committee, which is now sitting under the presidency of Mr. C. F. Beadel, to examine the existing regulations and control and to make recommendations as to the regulations and the degree and manner of control that should be exercised in future. The proposal to appoint a stipendiary magistrate to try all traffic offences is also under examination.

(e) and (f) Injured persons are generally removed by the police direct to hospital. The relatives of injured persons are informed by the police. The Commissioner of Police issued a circular order in December last, reminding the police of their duty in this respect.

Silting of the mouth of the Bhairab river.

VII. Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state what steps have been taken to remove the silt at the mouth of the Bhairab river in order to make this and other rivers connected with it, navigable?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to place on the table the papers and maps in connection with the scheme?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): (a) Nothing has been undertaken by the Irrigation Department to reopen the old mouth of the Bhairab river.

(b) No scheme for reopening the old mouth has been prepared by the Irrigation Department.

Calcutta Medical College, Presidency General and Campbell Hospitals.

 VIII. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (i) the total number of beds maintained in the Calcutta Medical College and the Presidency General and Campbell Hospitals, respectively;
- (ii) the total number of indoor patients who were treated in the said three hospitals in the year 1919-20, stating separately the nationalities of such patients;
- (iii) the cost of upkeep and maintenance of the said three hospitals in the year 1919-20;
- (iv) whether it is a fact that Indians are not allowed in the Presidency General Hospital, even in emergency cases, while other Asiatics are treated there as ordinary patients; and
- (v) what are the scales of diet provided for patients of different nationalities in the Calcutta Medical College Hospital, the Presidency General Hospital and the Campbell Hospital, Calcutta, respectively?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea): (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv) A statement is laid on the table. Statistics are kept by the calendar year, and those for the year 1920 are not yet available.

(v) The Presidency General Hospital is intended for the treatment of Europeans, but other cases may be admitted under the order of the Superintendent, if of extreme urgency.

Statement referred to in the reply to starred question No. VIII, giving particulars regarding the Presidency General, Medical College and Campbell Hospitals in 1919.

Admission into the Calcutta Medical College.

 IX. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state —

- (i) whether the admissions of students in the Calcutta Medical College in the last session were made upon the basis of the University qualification of the applicants;
- (ii) the total number of applicants for admission to the Calcutta Medical College in the last session, showing how many of them were graduates and how many undergraduates; and
- (iii) the total number of graduates and undergraduates who obtained such admissions?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (i) Yes, for the most part, but some admissions were made in view of other considerations, viz., the distribution of vacancies among different districts, special recommendations and the claims of dependents of the Assistant Surgeons and graduates of the College.

(ii) and (iii) The member is referred to the statements laid on the table in reply to unstarred question No. 13 at the meeting of the Council held on 7th February, 1921.

Road-cess and Government revenue.

 X. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to state what were the total amounts collected on account of road-cess and Government revenue during each of the last five years, showing such receipts under the above heads separately for each district in Bengal?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): A statement showing the total amounts collected on account of road-cess during each of the years 1915-16 to 1919-20, for each district in Bengal, is laid on the table.

As regards the amounts collected on account of land revenue, the member is referred to column 9 of Appendix I of the Board's Land Revenue Administration Report for those years.

Statement referred to in the reply to starred question No. X, showing the road cess receipts from 1915-16 to 1919-20.

Question of the abolition of the Board of Revenue.

* XI. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to state whether there have been any proposals before the Government within the last fifteen years for the abolition of the Board of Revenue?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether any Committee was ever appointed for considering the question of such abolition?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the Committee referred to in (b) submitted any report and, if so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the said report?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the report of the Committee referred to in (c) was or was not acted upon, and, if not, why not?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the number of appeals and petitions to the Board of Revenue during the last fifteen years and their results?

(f) Are the Government considering the desirability of reconsidering their decision upon the said report or of appointing afresh a small committee from among the members of the Bengal Legislative Council to finally consider the question of the abolition of the Board of Revenue? •

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Yes.

(b) No

(c) and (d) The questions do not arise

(e) It will take some time to collect the information wanted, as reference will be necessary to the actual records of the cases. A statement will be laid on the table when the necessary information has been collected

(f) No. The Secretary of State for India has recently decided that the Board of Revenue shall not be abolished.

Differential treatment of clerks in different Khas Mahals in Jalpaiguri.

• XII. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Land Revenue be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Khas Mahal clerks at the Maynaguri and Falakata tahsils, in the district of Jalpaiguri, are not allowed either local allowance or travelling allowance?

(b) Is it a fact that the Khas Mahal clerks at Alipur and Kumargram tahsils get such allowances?

(c) If the answer to (b) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the reasons for the distinction between the clerks at Maynaguri and Falakata on the one hand and those at Alipur and Kumargram on the other?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that prices have gone up abnormally high during the last few years?

(e) Is the Hon'ble the Member also aware of the complaint that is made that the pay of the officers at Maynaguri and Falakata is not sufficient both to maintain them with their families and to meet their expenses of travelling throughout the area of 300 square miles within their jurisdiction?

(f) Is it a fact that the Khas Mahal tahsildars in the Dooars receive Rs. 50 each for travelling and local allowance and the Police Sub-Inspectors, Post Masters, School Sub-Inspectors receive 25 per cent. as Dooars allowance?

(g) Are the Government considering the desirability of granting to the said Khas Mahal clerks at Maynaguri and Falakata such travelling allowance as is paid to their brother officers at Alipur and Kumargram?

* The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Khas Mahal clerks at the Maynaguri and Falakata tahsils in the Jalpaiguri district do not get any local allowance. They are, however, allowed travelling allowance for journeys by rail performed in the discharge of their duties.

(b) Khas Mahal clerks at Alipur and Bhalka get local allowance at the rate of 40 per cent. of their pay. They also receive travelling allowance for rail journeys only.

(c) The distinction in the matter of local allowance is due to the fact that Maynaguri and Falakata tahsils being not so unhealthy and out of the way as Alipur and Bhalka stand on a different footing.

(d) Yes.

(e) A representation from the ministerial staff of the Maynaguri and Falakata tahsils was received by the Board of Revenue through the local officers in November, 1918, but no mention was made in it about travelling expenses. The pay of the Khas Tahsil establishment in the Jalpaiguri district has since been revised.

(f) The Khas Mahal tahsildars in the Dooars receive (compensatory) allowance of Rs. 50 and a conveyance allowance of Rs. 20 a month. Sub-Inspectors of Police and Sub-Inspectors of Schools get local allowance at the rate of 25 per cent. of their pay. No information is available about Post Masters.

(g) In view of the replies to questions (a) and (b) above, this requires no answer.

Expenditure on "Transferred Subjects."

* XIII. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to lay on table a statement showing the cost of administration, during the years 1917-18, 1918-19, 1919-20, of the subjects now known as "Transferred Subjects"?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The member is referred to the answer given to unstarred question No. 42 asked by Rai Harendranath Chaudhuri at the meeting of the Legislative Council on the 7th February, 1921.

Pay and qualifications of medical officers posted at subdivisional headquarters.

* XIV. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the names of the medical officers posted at each of the subdivisional headquarters in the Presidency of Bengal and their medical qualifications, experience and pay?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: A statement is laid on the library table.

Demand for admission into the 1st year class of the Calcutta Medical College.

 XV. • Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that there is a great demand for admission into the 1st year class of the Calcutta Medical College?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that such demand cannot be met by the existing accommodation?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of opening another section of 150 students in the 1st year class with effect from the coming session?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) The answer is in the affirmative

(c) The answer is in the negative. There are already 1,159 students under training and the existing accommodation is fully utilized.

Increased expenditure on account of certain grants and increments to the Indian Civil Service, the Provincial Service and the Subordinate Executive Service.

 XVI. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state—

- (i) the total amount of increased expenditure incurred by the increased grant of overseas allowances to the members of the Indian Civil Service employed in Bengal;
- (ii) the total amount of increased expenditure incurred by the increment recently given to the members of the Provincial Judicial Service;
- (iii) the total amount of increased expenditure incurred by the increment given to the members of the Provincial Executive Service; and
- (iv) the total amount of increased expenditure which is likely to be incurred by the proposed increment to be given to the members of the Subordinate Executive Service?

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (i) There has been no general increased grant of overseas allowance to the members of the Indian Civil Service. The previous system of grades has been abolished and a time-scale substituted for it. Instead of grade pay the total emoluments of an officer now consist of a time-scale pay plus an overseas allowance. In some cases this amounts to less than was being drawn before, but in these cases the officer has been protected from immediate loss by a personal allowance. The increased cost of the new system, including the cost of these personal allowances, at the end of 1919 was approximately Rs. 12,500 a month in Bengal. In the current year, 1920-21, the figure is estimated to be nearly Rs. 29,000 a month; the increase is due to the fact that the personal allowances have not been absorbed, and retirements have been few, while all members of the Service have earned further yearly increments.

(ii) The total amount of increased expenditure on the 1st December, 1919, due to the increment given to members of the Provincial Judicial Service is approximately Rs. 60,000 per mensem.

(iii) The corresponding figure for the Executive Service is Rs. 46,000 per mensem.

(iv) As orders have not yet been received on the revision of pay of the Subordinate Executive Service, no information can be given.

Percentage of Muhammadans in the posts of deputy magistrates, sub-deputy collectors and sub-registrars.

 XVII. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state the number of deputy-magistrates, sub-deputy collectors and sub-registrars appointed from different communities of Bengal (separately) during the last 5 years from 1916 to 1920?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the policy of Government in appointing those officers from the different communities of Bengal?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the percentage of Muhammadan deputy-magistrates, sub-deputy collectors and sub-registrars in Bengal?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) A statement giving the information required is laid on the table.

(b) In recruiting deputy and sub-deputy collectors the general policy has been to reserve at least one-third of the direct appointments to Muhammadans. In the case of sub-registrars, the aim has been to secure a proportion of 43 per cent. of Muhammadans in the service as a whole.

(c) The present percentage of Muhammadans among deputy collectors is 22, among sub-deputy collectors 28, and among sub-registrars 43.

Statement referred to in the reply to starred question No. XVII.

Facilities to Muhammadan officers and litigants for "Juma" prayers.

* XVIII. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department aware that there is a Government circular requiring facilities to be given to the Muhammadan officers and litigants to say their Juma prayers on Friday?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the circular is not always strictly observed by the officers in authority, and the Muhammadan ministerial officers and litigants do not always find it safe to incur displeasure of the authorities in asking permission to go to say their Juma prayer as it hampers speedy disposal of cases?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of passing orders to suspend all work in the Courts of Bengal for one hour and a half, from 12-30 to 2 p.m. on Fridays, to give effect to the circular and to enable the officers and litigants to say their prayers with ease and content?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that there is a sect of Muhammadans in Bengal who do not say their Juma prayers on the ground that the British Government is not the protector of the Muhammadan faith in India?

(e) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of taking such steps as may be necessary to remove their idea and especially of passing orders upon their officers to give every facility to the Muhammadan officers, litigants and prisoners, to say their prayers at fixed appointed times of the day?

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) Yes. The circular issued in 1912.

(b) In 1917 Government issued a circular inviting the attention of all heads of offices to interpret the orders of 1912 in a liberal spirit.

Since then no complaint about the disregard of the orders has reached Government. The Government will make inquiries if there has been a failure to observe the instructions laid down in the circular and take such further steps as may be called for.

(c) No.

(d) The Government have no such information.

(e) It is the established and well-known policy of the Government not to interfere in any way with the religious liberty of the people of India and the Government are not aware that any misapprehension exists in this point.

In regard to the suggestion in the latter portion of this clause of the question the member is referred to the reply to (b) above and to clause (f) of his starred question No. IV.

School text-book and remarks therein objectionable to Muhammadans.

* XIX. MR. SYED ERFAN ALI: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education been drawn to a school text-book named "The Story of England," by Rev. Edgar Sanderson, in which the author has made certain remarks which are objectionable to Muhammadans?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether the Government are taking any steps to have the book omitted from the list of text-books approved for use in schools?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) No.

(b) Now that the attention of Government has been invited to the book, the question whether the book should be retained on the list will be considered.

Unstarred Questions

(answers to which were laid on the table).

Technical and industrial education.

1. Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state whether the Government have formulated any programme of technical and industrial education?

(b) If so, to what extent has that programme been given effect to and what steps have been taken to carry it out?

(c) Have the Government applied for any, and, if so, what grants from the Government of India, out of the sums that the Government of India offered for distribution to the local Governments during the last three years for agricultural and technical education?

(d) What grants have the local Government actually received, and how have the same been applied?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): (a) and (b) The member is referred to the reply given to the unstarred question No. 5 asked by Babu Amulya Dhone Addy on 7th February, 1921.

(c) and (d) The table below shows the grants applied for and those received. The grants are being utilized for the purposes for which they were given:—

YEAR.	Amount of grants applied for	Amount received.	Purpose for which utilised.

Revision of the pay of ministerial and menial establishments

2. Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state whether the Committee appointed by the Government of Bengal, Finance Department, Resolution No. 2934 T.—F., dated the 2nd November, 1920, to advise as to the revision of the pay of ministerial and menial establishments has received any instructions from Government regarding its duties in addition to what is contained in the resolution and, if so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay a copy of such instructions on the table?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state by what per cent. the cost of living in Bengal has gone up since pre-war days according to statistics supplied by the Director of Statistics and give the data on which the percentage is calculated?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state by what per cent. the cost of feeding and clothing prisoners in Bengal and providing for their medical and sanitary needs has gone up since pre-war days?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) No further instructions have been given to the Committee, beyond what is contained in the resolution.

(b) The cost of living index is under consideration and has not been settled yet. As regards the wholesale and retail prices of different articles, a copy of a Press note, dated the 15th November, 1919, issued by the Director of Statistics, is laid on the library table.

The percentage rise in retail prices of the undermentioned groups of articles in Calcutta during November and December 1920, as compared with July 1914 (just before the outbreak of war), is as follows:—

				November 1920	December 1920.
				Per cent.	Per cent.
Cereals	+ 46	+ 37
Pulses	+ 52	+ 52
Other articles of food	+ 59	+ 57
Fuel and lighting	+ 137	+ 126
Clothing	+ 194	+ 185

The rise in prices in rice in December 1920 is 28 per cent., as compared with 43 per cent. in November 1920. Since August last retail prices in Calcutta have shown a tendency to fall.

(c) A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 2 (a), showing the percentage of increase of maintenance charges of prisoners from 1914 to 1919.

Grants to primary schools.

3. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state at what rate monthly grants are made to primary schools in Bengal?

(b) Is it a fact that the rate of these grants is Re. 1 or Re. 1-8 only?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether, as a matter of fact, this rate has proved attractive for trained teachers of the better type?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of making an inquiry into the matter with a view to taking such steps as may be necessary to improve the prospects of the teachers of primary schools?

(e) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the scale of pay of this class of teachers in the United Provinces is higher than that of Bengal, and that the United Provinces Government have sanctioned a further increment in their pay on the following scale, viz.:—

- (i) students in training, Rs. 10 as a minimum
- (ii) untrained teachers, Rs. 12 as a minimum;
- (iii) trained assistants, increase of 50 per cent. on Rs. 15 per month, 30 per cent. on Rs. 17 per month, 20 per cent. on Rs. 20 per month; for head teachers of primary schools, 50 per cent. increase on Rs. 20 per month, 30 per cent. increase on Rs. 25 per month and 20 per cent. on Rs. 30 per month?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) Monthly grants to primary schools in Bengal are made on rates ranging from Rs. 2 to Rs. 14 per mensem.

(b) The minimum rate of grant in an aided primary school in Bengal is Rs. 2 and not Re. 1 or Re. 1-8 per mensem.

(c) Trained teachers in primary schools get Rs. 6 from the Imperial grants in addition to what they receive from the District Boards. Owing to the prevailing economic conditions the existing rates are not sufficiently attractive.

(d) A detailed inquiry into the whole question of expansion and improvement of primary education is being made by a special officer deputed by Government for the purpose. One of the most important questions involved in this inquiry is that of improving the prospects of teachers in primary schools.

(e) Government are aware of the circular issued by the Government of the United Provinces sanctioning certain increments in the pay of primary school teachers. The United Provinces are under the Reforms Scheme in a much more fortunate financial position than Bengal is.

Steam launches of the Commissioner and the Collector of Dacca.

4. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to state the number of days on which the Commissioner of the Dacca Division and the Collector of Dacca used their respective steam launches in each of the last two calendar years?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The Commissioner and the Collector used their launches in 1919 for 63 days each and in 1920 for 87 days and 43 days, respectively. Other officers used the Commissioner's launch for 22 and 24 days in 1919 and 1920, respectively, and the Collector's launch for 35 and 20 days, respectively.

Pay and prospects of the Subordinate Educational Service.

5. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that great discontent prevails among the members of the Subordinate Educational Service, Bengal, in the matter of their pay and prospects?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state when the recommendations of the Committee appointed to inquire into the grievances of the Subordinate Educational Service will be submitted?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) Yes.

(b) The report was received on the 9th instant and is now under consideration.

Office of Sanitary (Malaria) Drainage Division.

6. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state the details of work to be undertaken by the newly created office of Sanitary (Malaria) Drainage Division and the amount of grant sanctioned for the purpose?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The newly created Sanitary Drainage Division has for the present been put in charge of the following schemes:—

(1) Aul Bil	} Works in progress.
(2) Jaboona Project	(Sections I and II)	...
(3) Amla Project
(4) Nowi-Sunthi Project

(5) Baitgachi Gong Project	...	} Projects under survey and investigation.
(6) Harihar-Mukteswari Project	...
(7) Bhairab Project	...
(8) Kodla-Betna Scheme	...
(9) Jhenida-basin Project	...

As regards grants sanctioned for the purpose, perhaps the member wishes to know total amount of expenditure involved. The total estimated amount of the works in progress, viz., items 1 to 4, is Rs. 36,13,000. The corresponding figures for projects under survey and investigation are not known at present.

Opening of a central dairy farm.

7. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state whether the Government are contemplating opening a central dairy farm in the Jessore district or any other place?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: Government have no such scheme in contemplation at present. The member is referred to the discussion on the resolution moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, M.L.C., at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council held on the 13th March, 1919, suggesting that at least three model dairies be started at suitable centres in the mufassal.

Normal schools.

8. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the existing normal schools in Bengal will be abolished from the next year?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: No. The question of the reorganisation and improvement of the normal schools is now before Government.

Staff selection board for Bengal.

9. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Finance Department be pleased to state whether the Government contemplate creating a staff selection Board for Bengal on the lines of the board constituted by the Government of India?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The answer is in the negative.

Tramway strike.

10. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce aware of the strike of the Tramway employees in Calcutta?

(b) Are the Government taking any steps to settle the strike by arbitration?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) and (b) The member is referred to the answer given to unstarred question No. 21.

Subordinate officers of the Jail Department.

11. Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Jails) be pleased to state—

- (i) whether it is a fact that the initial pay of probationary Assistant Jailors has been raised from Rs. 20 to Rs. 30 and that of Jailors from Rs. 100 to Rs. 125;
- (ii) that the pay of Assistant Jailors has not been raised at all;
- (iii) whether it is a fact that the salary of the probationary Sub-Inspectors of Police has been raised from Rs. 30 to Rs. 50, that of the Sub-Inspectors from Rs. 50 to Rs. 80, and that Inspectors of Police get Rs. 150 to start with,
- (iv) whether it is a fact that Sub-Inspectors of Police are allowed to count towards increment their past services, including probationary and substantive pro tempore appointments, as laid down in the Civil Service Regulations, and that in the case of Jailors and Assistant Jailors they have been ordered to count increments from date of confirmation of their respective appointments?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the reasons for this differentiation between these two classes of officers in the matter of initial pay and also the date of accrual of increments?

(c) Is it a fact that a memorial asking for the reconsideration of the orders passed was submitted by the subordinate officers of the Jail Department to the Inspector-General of Prisons? If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what were the orders passed thereon?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE [JAILS]
(the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): (a) (i) Yes.

(ii) Before revision, the cadre of Assistant Jailors was divided into five grades on Rs. 50, Rs. 55, Rs. 60, Rs. 65 and Rs. 70 per mensem, and there was a grade of Deputy Jailors on Rs. 80. The grade of Deputy Jailors has been abolished and the pay of the Assistant Jailors has been fixed at Rs. 50—10/2—100. The prospects of the Assistant Jailors have thus been improved.

(iii) Yes, except that the pay of the probationary Sub-Inspectors of Police has been raised to Rs. 50 from Rs. 25 and not from Rs. 30, as stated in the question.

(iv) As a general principle the provisions of articles 156-58 of the Civil Service Regulations have been relaxed in all cases where a time-scale is introduced. The Sub-Inspectors of Police, as well as the Jailors and Assistant Jailors, have accordingly been allowed to count their past services towards increment in the new time-scales. No proposal has been received by Government for permitting them to count their probationary and substantive pro tempore appointments towards increment.

(b) The question of the differentiation between the subordinate police and jail officers in the matter of the date of accrual of increments does not arise. Proposals regarding the initial pay of the two classes of officers were considered on their merits separately and at different times.

(c) Yes. The memorialists were informed by the Inspector General of Prisons that in view of the recent improvements effected in their pay and prospects, he was not disposed to recommend their case to Government.

Means of communication in the Manikganj and Munshiganj subdivisions.

12. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works been drawn to the deplorable condition of the means of communication in the district of Dacca, especially in the Manikganj and Munshiganj subdivisions?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the amount annually collected from the district as road cess and the amounts actually spent during the last ten years in constructing and maintaining roads in the two subdivisions, respectively?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Salyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur):

(a) The Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Public Works is aware of the means of communication in the Manikganj and Munshiganj subdivisions of the Dacca district. The member is referred to the answer given to starred question No. XXIV on this subject at a meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council held on the 13th August, 1920.

(b) A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 12 (b), showing the road cess collected in the district of Dacca and the amounts spent by the Dacca District Board in constructing and maintaining roads in the Munshiganj and Manikganj subdivisions during the last 10 years.

Primary education.

13. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state the number of primary schools in Bengal and the number of students in the said schools?

(b) Is not the number of students in these schools too small, having regard to the population?

(c) If so, what steps are being taken to popularise primary education?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) A statement is laid on the table.

(b) Yes.

(c) Mr. Biss, an officer of the Indian Educational Service, has been placed on special duty to advise Government with regard to this matter. For a general consideration of the subject the member is referred to the annual reports of the Director of Public Instruction.

*Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question
No. 13 (a).*

Number of primary schools in Bengal ...	46,240
Number of pupils in them	1,409,814
Besides this there are pupils in the primary stages of secondary schools	188,926
Totals pupils in primary stage	1,598,740

Charitable dispensaries.

14. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the actual number of charitable dispensaries in Bengal?

(b) What steps have been taken to establish a larger number of such dispensaries for the convenience of the public?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The number of charitable hospitals and dispensaries on 30th November, 1920, was 712, 112, 21 in Calcutta and 691 outside Calcutta.

In addition to 712 charitable hospitals and dispensaries, there are 84 institutions for the relief of suffering which do not technically come under the head of "Charitable Dispensary."

(b) In this Government circular No. 271-75 T.—Medl*, dated the 18th September, 1917, of which a copy is laid on the library table, district boards were reminded of their responsibilities and urged to make an earnest endeavour to establish new dispensaries in areas standing in need of medical relief. The number of district charitable hospitals and dispensaries rose from 604 in 1917 to 677 in 1919, and since then there has been a further increase to 691.

Opening of civil courts in Gopalganj subdivision.

15. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state within what time the opening of the civil courts at Gopalganj subdivision (Faridpur) may be expected?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: The member presumably refers to the opening of the proposed munsifi at Gopalganj. The plan and estimates for the necessary buildings have not yet been received. The munsifi at Gopalganj will be opened when the plan and estimates are received and funds are available. It is not possible at present to mention a definite date.

Hostels for students of depressed classes.

16. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that hostels for the backward (depressed) classes have been opened by Government at two centres of education, namely, at Dacca and Calcutta?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that there is a great demand for such hostels at other centres of education, namely, at Daulatpur, Mrotpur, Gopalganj, Bagerhat, Mary Gopinathpur, Bhanga and Faridpur?

(c) What steps are the Government taking to meet the demand?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) Yes. There is also a hostel for Rajbansis at Rangpur.

(b) The alleged demand has not yet been brought to my notice.

(c) The Education Department will consider sympathetically any proposals put before them. But the meeting of this as of many other needs depends primarily upon funds being available.

Proposed tank at Feni.

17. Babu RASIK CHANDRA CHARMAKAR: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government been drawn to the several memorials submitted to His Excellency the Governor of Bengal by the people of Feni town, protesting against the proposed excavation of a tank at the heart of the town?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether the Government are considering the desirability of selecting a site for the proposed tank near the Godown quarter?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Four petitions have been received and have been sent to the Commissioner of the Chittagong Division for disposal.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

Produce of jute, cotton, rice and oil-seeds and their exports.

18. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the quantity of jute, cotton, rice and oil-seeds produced in Bengal and the quantity exported during the last five years?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): A statement is laid on the table.

Suggestions of the Prices Inquiry Committee.

19. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state what steps, if any, have been or are proposed to be adopted with regard to the remedies suggested by the Prices Inquiry Committee that was appointed by the Bengal Legislative Council on the 1st July, 1920?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: A resolution on the report of the Prices Inquiry Committee will shortly be issued by Government.

Suggestions as to the abolition of the Board of Revenue.

20. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to state whether any suggestion was made to the Government of Bengal by the Government of India or by any higher authority for the abolition of the Board of Revenue at or about the time when the Executive Council was being first introduced in Bengal?

(b) If the answer to (a) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table all the correspondence on the subject?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Yes. The question was raised in paragraph 469 of the Report of the Royal Commission upon Decentralisation in India and the Government of India subsequently consulted the Government of Bengal.

(b) Past correspondence has been between the local Government, the Government of India and the Secretary of State, and much of it has been confidential. It could not be published without the consent of all three authorities and for this it is not proposed to ask. A resolution on the subject is about to be moved in the Legislative Council and in connection therewith the attitude of Government will be fully explained.

Tramway strike.

21. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state whether the attention of the Government has been drawn to the great inconvenience that is being caused to the Calcutta public by the recent tramway strike in Calcutta?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what steps, if any, have been taken or are proposed to be taken—

(i) to bring this strike to an end; and

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the Calcutta Municipal Corporation has any right to purchase the plant, machinery, etc., of the Calcutta Tramways Company?

(d) If the answer to (c) is in the affirmative, at the end of what period of time from now, and under what conditions, can or will such right accrue to the Calcutta Municipal Corporation?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) Yes.

(b) (i) and (ii) Government are in communication with the parties to the dispute with a view to bringing about a settlement.

(c) Yes.

(d) The Member is referred to paragraph 5 of the agreement between the Corporation of Calcutta and the Calcutta Tramways Company, Limited, which forms a schedule to the Calcutta Tramways (Electric Traction) Act, 1900 (Bengal Act IV of 1900).

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state as to when the communication with the parties began?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: I can tell the Council, Sir, what the position is now. On Saturday morning last Mr. Donald brought me the resolution passed by the Calcutta Corporation on the previous evening. Subsequently Mr. Donald and I saw the Manager of the Tramways Company and discussed matters with him. In the afternoon I saw Mr. Nishit Chandra Sen, who is acting on behalf of the men or a considerable section of the men. The result of our negotiations was that the Manager agreed to receive a deputation of the men on strike to discuss the points at issue. The meeting, I believe, is taking place this morning; I have not heard the result and I am not able to forecast it, but if both the parties show good sense and moderation, I trust that the result will be, if not to bring about the cessation of the strike at once, at any rate to clear the ground so as to make a settlement easier. The position is, however, very delicate and there are many difficulties in the way, and I would like to take this opportunity of urging upon everybody concerned, whether in this Council or outside it, that they should abstain from any comments or remarks which would tend to prolong the bitter feelings which have been created and to prevent a settlement being brought about. No satisfactory settlement can be expected unless the parties meet one another in a calm and friendly atmosphere. The Government are watching the situation carefully and will do anything they can to bring about a settlement as early as possible.

Under-trial and convicted prisoners in Jails.

22. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Jails) be pleased to state whether, under the present system of jail administration, persons convicted of petty offences, or breach of municipal laws or rules are kept separate from the general body of criminals in jails?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether under-trial prisoners accused of having committed an offence for the first time or of petty offences or of breaches of municipal laws or rules are kept isolated from under-trial ex-convicts, either in jails or hajats?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what provision is made for the food and rest of under-trial prisoners in hajats or in police-stations before their transference to jails?

(d) Will the Hon'ble Member be pleased to state when the Report of the Jails Commission, 1919-20, will be available to the public?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) There is no provision to keep persons convicted of petty offences separate from prisoners convicted of other offences. "A" class prisoners or first offenders are, however, kept apart from "B" class or habituals.

(b) In jail, wherever accommodation permits, this is done. But generally the answer is in the negative. Segregation of the different classes of under-trial male prisoners is not possible in court hajats, as there is usually only one hajat at each place where courts are located for all under-trial male prisoners. It should be noted, however, that petty offences and breaches of municipal laws or rules are usually bailable offences, and there is seldom occasion to keep in court hajats persons accused of such offences.

(c) Instructions regarding the treatment of under-trial prisoners after arrest are contained in rules 151 to 162 of Volume V of Police Regulations, Bengal. The rate of diet allowance for under-trial prisoners has been fixed at seven annas, so long as the price of rice is above 8 seers to the rupee. In jail under-trial prisoners' diet and rest are arranged according to rules 915—919 of the Bengal Jail Code.

(d) The local Government have no information.

Metalling the road between Vishnupur and Kotalpur in the Vishnupur subdivision.

23. Mr. AJAY CHUNDER DUTT: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether the District Board of Bankura intends metalling the unmetalled portion of the road between Vishnupur and Kotalpur in the subdivision of Vishnupur, and, if so, within what period the work may be expected to be completed?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: A copy of letter No. 4094 J., dated the 12th February, 1921, from the District Magistrate of Bankura, is laid on the table.

Copy of the letter referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 23.

No. 4094 J., dated Bankura, the 12th February, 1921.

From— Rai Sahib B. N. MUKHERJEE, Officiating Magistrate of Bankura.

To The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Local Self-Government Branch.

With reference to your letter No. 1196 L.S.-G., dated the 10th instant, forwarding copy of a question to be asked by Mr. Ajoy Chunder Dutt at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council, I have the honour to state that on enquiry from the Chairman, District Board, it appears that the road between Vishnupur and Kotampur is 18½ miles within the District Board area, out of which 13½ miles have been already metalled. The District Board proposes to metal about one-half mile more during the next year. As for the remaining 4½ miles, the District Board is not in a position to state within what period they would be able to metal it, as funds are very limited, and it is estimated to cost about Rs. 33,000.

Increased rates of fares in the Port Commissioners' ferry service.

24. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Marine Department aware that fares in the Port Commissioners' ferry service between Barabazar and Shibhala have suddenly been increased by 60 per cent.?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that this has caused hardship to the passengers?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the annual income derived by the Port Commissioners from the said ferry service and the yearly expenditure incurred under that head since the opening of the service?

MEMBER in charge of MARINE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) The first class fare between these two stations was increased from four annas to six annas, and the second class fare from one and a half anna to two annas, on the 1st January, 1921. Corresponding increases were made in the cost of monthly tickets.

(b) No representation on the subject has been received, but Government have no doubt that the increase has caused a certain amount of hardship to some classes of passengers.

(c) A statement showing the annual receipts and expenditure of the entire ferry service of the Port Commissioners since the opening of the service is laid on the table. Figures for the section of the service running between Barabazar and Shibhala are not available. The service has, on the whole, been run at a loss, and the recent increase in working expenses, due to the enhancement of salaries and the rise in the cost of coal and other material, has compelled the Port Commissioners to impose a moderate addition to the fares.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 24 (c).

Investigations as to developing the natural resources of the Province.

25. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to state whether investigations to ascertain the possibility of increasing the income of the Government of Bengal by the development of the natural resources of the province were made in accordance with the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter accepted in April, 1919?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the results of such investigations?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) and (b) As stated by the Hon'ble Sir John Cumming in his speech on the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter in March, 1919, a Forest Utilization Officer was appointed to work in direct co-operation with the Director of Industries. Mr. Carroll, Deputy Conservator of Forests, who was appointed to the post, retired in May last. Owing to a shortage of officers it has not yet been possible to appoint another officer in his place.

An officer was also appointed to prepare working plans for the Chittagong and Chittagong Hill Tracts Forest Divisions, after making a survey of the timber available in those two divisions. In spite of difficulties, it is expected that the plans will be finished in 1921-22.

The work of development of forest resources in this Presidency is at present hampered by the depletion of the controlling staff and lack of funds.

As regards the possibility of increasing the revenue from fisheries, the member is referred to the speech of Sir John Cumming, dealing with the resolution mentioned in the question. The inquiry therein referred to has not yet been completed and the matter is still under the consideration of the Board of Revenue.

Trial by jury.

26. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state how far effect has been given to the resolution moved on the 3th December, 1916, for the extension of trial by jury?

(b) To what districts of this Presidency has the system of trial by jury not yet been extended, and why?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) and (b) The system of trial by jury has been extended to all the districts in this Presidency, except the non-regulation districts of Jalpaiguri, Darjeeling and the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

The reasons for excluding these districts were:-

- (a) The High Court and the local officers who were consulted would not recommend the extension of the system of jury trial to those districts on the grounds that,
- (b) it would be difficult to get a sufficient number of suitable men in these districts to serve on the jury,
- (c) in the Jalpaiguri district most of the offenders are coolies employed in tea gardens and the jurors would have to be drawn mainly from among the managers and share-holders of such gardens. Further, there is considerable difficulty of communications in the district, especially during the rains, and
- (d) in all the three districts the offenders mostly belong to the hill tribes, and it is doubtful whether they would prefer trial by a jury to trial by a Judge and assessors.

Erosion of the town of Noakhali.

27. Munshi MAKRAMALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to say whether the Government are aware that a new char has been formed just on the southern side of the town of Noakhali?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that if the channel known as the Noakhali khal be diverted at a not very considerable expenditure, the town may be saved?

(c) What steps are the Government taking in the matter?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) Government are aware that a char has formed to the south-west of Noakhali town.

(b) Government are advised that a diversion of the Noakhali khal near its mouth is an impracticable proposition, and that were it practicable the effect on the progress and direction of the erosion could not be foretold.

(c) No steps are being taken to divert the khal at its mouth.

Alleged rejection of the nomination paper of Babu Monomohan Kanjilal by the District Magistrate of Noakhali.

28. Munshi MAKRAMALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state why the District Magistrate of Noakhali rejected the nomination paper of Babu Monomohan Kanjilal who stood for election from the Non-Muhammadan constituency of Noakhali?

(b) Is it not a fact that his name appears in the Calcutta University voters' list?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Government are unaware of the grounds on which the nomination paper of Babu Monomohan Kanjilal was rejected by the District Magistrate of Noakhali.

The decision of the District Magistrate, as Returning Officer, is final, subject to a petition to an Election Court.

(b) The member is referred to the Electoral Roll of the University constituency, which has been published.

Silting up of the river Lohajang in Tangail.

29. Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware that the mouth of the river Lohajang, an offshoot of the Jamuna, has silted up?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member also aware that this affected the health and prosperity of Tangail?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member also aware that there is no other perennial source of drinking water or streams through which the dormant tanks and stagnant pools and canals of the locality can be properly flushed in the natural course, and navigation made possible throughout the year?

(d) Is it contemplated to have the silted up portions of the river dredged in order to cope with the evil?

(e) If so, when is the work going to be taken up?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) There is no information before the Irrigation Department regarding the silting of the Lohajang river.

(b) No.

(c) No.

(d) There is no such proposal before the Government.

(e) The question does not arise.

Anti-malarial Drainage Scheme.

30. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state—

(i) what progress has been made in the execution of the Anti-malarial Drainage Scheme known as the Nawi Sunthi Scheme;

(ii) how far the Bulli Bil Scheme has been carried out; and

(iii) when the Government expect that the above schemes will be fully carried out?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (i) In the Nawi Section, about one-third of the length of the channel has been re-excavated; a quantity of bricks has been manufactured for construction of masonry works in connection with this scheme. In the Sunthi Section, the land estimates are ready and the publication of necessary declaration is under consideration of Government.

(ii) The Bulli Bil Scheme has been prepared by local officers and the estimate is being technically examined at present.

(iii) No dates of completion of either of these schemes can now be given.

Non-representation of Ministerial Officers' Association on the Committee to inquire into the question of the revision of the pay of ministerial officers.

31. Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state on what grounds the Government have refused the requests of the different Ministerial Officers' Associations for including members from their service on the Committee recently appointed to inquire into the question of the revision of their pay?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the procedure of co-option from the service has been followed by the Government of India in revising the pay of their clerical staff and in other similar cases?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the procedure of co-option from the service has been followed by this Government in the case of the Subordinate Educational Service, and if so, whether Government are aware that this departure from the established procedure has produced serious discontent among the members of the ministerial service?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state whether a full record of the evidence given by witnesses examined by the Committee is being kept for publication?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) The suggestion in the question is inaccurate. Only the Writers' Buildings Association made such a request. Government did not consider it desirable to appoint to the Committee persons who might, if so desired by the Committee, be examined as witnesses.

(b) Government have no information on this point.

(c) A member of the Subordinate Educational Service was appointed to the Committee which was constituted by the Resolution No. 872-T-Edn., dated the 9th October, 1920, issued by the General (Education) Department of this Government. As regards the latter part of the question, the answer is in the negative.

(d) Summaries of the evidence have been kept for the use of the Committee, but it is not proposed to publish them.

Bengal Budget, 1921-22.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: I have the honour to present the Budget estimates of the Government of Bengal for the year 1921-22. The papers which have been placed in the hands of the members this morning consist of three parts; the Budget figures will be found in the white volume and the other volume consists of two parts; the first contains a general review of the financial situation, and the second part, for which I am indebted to Mr. Marr, contains a detailed review and explanation of the various departmental Budgets. I may say that the reviews have been compiled under great pressure owing to the complete change in the system of accounts, which will be introduced from 1st April next. There has been great difficulty in compiling the figures, and, as a matter of fact, I did not get the final figures until Saturday morning. I am sorry to say that the statements contain a certain number of misprints; correction slips will be issued in the course of this week, but meanwhile I would ask the indulgence of the members for any mistakes that they may find in going through the papers. I may say that we propose to consider in future years whether we cannot shorten and simplify, to some extent, the Budget reviews; but this year there was no time to make any change of that kind. We had to start with the old forms and push them through so that we might be in time for this meeting.

I do not propose to take up the time of the Council by reading out the general review. Members will no doubt study for themselves all these papers before the Budget discussion begins next week. This morning I will confine myself to a few remarks on the outstanding features of the financial situation of the Presidency and to a few remarks on Budget procedure, which will, I hope, enable our discussions to take a profitable and practical form.

The first four paragraphs of the general review are taken up, as usual, by a discussion of the revised estimates for the current year—1921-22. The revised estimates are of even less interest this year than revised estimates usually are. In the first place, they relate to expenditure which had all been settled and a large part of which had been incurred before this Council came into existence, and this Council has, therefore, no responsibility for it. In the second place, they are based on the old classification of accounts which will be altogether changed on the 1st April next. The main interest of the revised estimates this year lies in the fact that they show how our opening balance for the next year is arrived at. They also afford some basis of comparison between the departmental estimates for next year and those of the year just now coming to an end. This again is vitiated to some extent by the changes in the classification, to which I have already referred. It will be noticed, for instance, that the revenue statement on page 5 of the general review does not correspond with the similar estimate on page 8. In working out the latter, which exhibits the main features of the Budget for 1921-22, we have, as far as possible, given the corresponding figures for 1920-21 under the new heads. As an illustration of the important changes that are coming, I may mention the income-tax. It will be seen that the provincial share of the income-tax receipts for 1921-22 is no less than 2 crores, while income-tax does not appear at all in the Budget estimate for next year. The reason for this, of course, is that, under the new arrangement, income-tax will be an Imperial head, subject only to the exception mentioned in rule 14 of the Devolution Rules. That rule is, in its present form, an extremely complicated one and we feared at one time that it might work to our great disadvantage, in that we might have to pay to the Government of India larger sums as income-tax assignments than we actually collected as tax. The interpretation of the rule has for some time past been under discussion between the Government of India and ourselves, and we have reason to believe that it is going to be modified. In any case, so far as the next year is concerned, we have reason to anticipate that our assignment to the Government of India will correspond to our net receipts; the exact figure is not yet settled, but, when it is settled, the entry on the receipt side of our account will be cancelled by a corresponding entry on the expenditure side representing the contribution to the Government of India. Therefore, the question of income-tax does not affect the financial position of the Presidency at all as far as the Budget estimate for the next year is concerned, and for this reason no entry under income-tax is shown in the accounts placed before the Council.

I now turn to the main point, which is the Budget estimate for the next year. The main facts of the situation are that our receipts under the heads of revenue, which have been allotted to us in connection with the Reforms Scheme, amount to Rs. 9,72,00,000, while our expenditure charged to revenue is estimated to amount to Rs. 11,80,00,000. We have, therefore, to meet a deficit between income and expenditure of Rs. 2,08,00,000. But, before I go into this, it will be convenient to give a brief general explanation of the expenditure estimates, with special reference to the fact that they show an increase of Rs. 2,65,00,000 over the corresponding figures for the current year. Of this sum of Rs. 2,65,00,000, Rs. 1,27,00,000 is made up of two items. I will discuss them very briefly; the first item is the new contribution of Rs. 63,00,000, which we have to make to the Government of India under the Reforms Scheme. This contribution has been settled by the Joint Committee, whose report was presented to Parliament, and was endorsed by Parliament. The other item of Rs. 64,00,000 is under the miscellaneous head; of this, Rs. 46,00,000 is due to a provision which we have made for increasing the pay of the ministerial and menial establishments. As the Council knows, a committee is now sitting to consider that question. We hope to get its report by the end of next month and give effect to it during the course of next year. The other items under the miscellaneous head are a provision for the anticipated visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and a contribution to the Victoria Memorial, proposals in regard to which will be put before this Council in due course. There is also a new provision of Rs. 6,50,000 for remittances to the High Commissioner in London on account of the leave and pension allowances of officers in England. These charges have hitherto been met by the Government of India and shown in the transfer accounts, but under the Reforms Scheme they will fall on provincial revenues. The total sum which we expect to have to provide on this account during next year is 16 lakhs, but we have as far as possible allocated the amount due for different services under the proper service heads. This item of 6½ lakhs, which I have already mentioned as shown under the miscellaneous head, represents items in regard to which we have not yet received particulars sufficient to enable us to classify them under the ordinary budget heads; they will have to be altered later.

I have now accounted for 127 lakhs of the excess expenditure, and the remaining 138 lakhs will be found mentioned under various heads in the statement on page 10 of my general review. Detailed explanations regarding them are given in Mr. Marr's review, and I will only mention the more important items here.

Under Education, the revised estimates for 1920-21, that is the current year, amount to 108 lakhs, while in the Budget for 1921-22 we have provided for 126 lakhs, an increase of 16 lakhs, due to a revision of pay of the subordinate educational establishments below the Provincial Educational Service, to an increased grant-in-aid to the Dacca University, and to a considerably increased provision under ordinary grants-in-aid.

Under Medical, we have provided 36 lakhs in the revised estimate for the current year, and are providing 52 lakhs for expenditure in 1921-22, an increase of 16 lakhs, which includes a lakh for the leave allowances of officers in England, 3 lakhs for the revision of pay of Assistant Surgeons, Sub-Assistant Surgeons and Military Assistant Surgeons, nearly 2 lakhs for the School of Tropical Medicine, 4 lakhs for the Belgachia Medical Institution, Rs. 1,75,000 for our contribution towards the European Lunatic Asylum at Ranchi and Rs. 4,25,000 representing our contribution to the Indian Lunatic Asylum, which the Bihar and Orissa Government are erecting at the same place, and which we will share with them when it is built.

Under Public Health, there is an increase of over 9½ lakhs, due to the new schemes shown in the schedules and to the establishments required for dealing with them.

Under Waterways and Embankments, there is an increase of 7½ lakhs, to meet the cost of certain drainage projects in connection with anti-malarial measures, the reconstruction of the Kidderpore Bridge and the construction of bridges over the Circular and Eastern Canals in the north of Calcutta.

Under Police, there is an increase of 27 lakhs, due mainly to the provision of pay for the higher subordinate staff both in the Calcutta and the Bengal Police. The pay of the constables, head constables and sub-inspectors has been revised this year, and a revision of the pay of inspectors and officers of similar status can no longer be deferred. We have also provided for an important scheme for the reorganisation of the town police in the 24-Parganas and Hooghly, a scheme which was approved long ago, but has had to stand over for want of funds. In the present state of industrial unrest it can no longer be deferred. There is a further item of 5 lakhs on account of the removal of the Arms House from Amherst Street to a more suitable site in the suburbs.

These items are the main causes of increase under Police.

Under Industries, there is an increase of 7½ lakhs, partly due to new developments in the department, the provision of training classes in the mining centres and partly to the transfer of funds for industrial education to the Department of Industries from the Education Department.

The items which I have mentioned just now make up a total of 213 lakhs, and the balance of 52 lakhs is made up of comparatively small items under various heads, under 5 lakhs in each case. I need not take up the time of the Council by dealing with them in detail now. A full explanation will be found in Mr. Marr's review.

There is one more cheerful item in the expenditure statement on page 10 of my review, and that is the saving of Rs. 5,10,000 on account of interest on debt. This saving is due to the fact that we propose in the current year to pay off our provincial loan account with the Government of India, amounting to over 86 lakhs. This is money which was lent to us by the Government of India in previous years, and which we, in turn, lent out to local bodies, agriculturists and others under the Agriculturists Loans Act, the Agricultural Improvements Act and so forth. When we have paid off the Government of India, the account will become our own property, and can be regarded as part of the provincial resources.

Before I go on to deal with the deficit, it may be of interest to the Council if I mention that the proportion of the provincial expenditure allocated to reserved subjects in the budget amounts to 65 per cent., and that to the transferred subjects to 35 per cent. The Council will understand that these figures are only approximate, because many departments work for both sides of the Government, and it would be impossible to distribute the figures without going into great details. We have, in response to questions which have been put in this Council on the subject, tried to work out figures for previous years, and, though they are only approximate, they may be regarded as fairly comparable with one another, as they have been calculated on the same system for each year.

In the four previous years the expenditure on the departments which are now on the reserved side of the Government was 64, 62, 63 and 62 per cent., respectively; for next year the provision is 65 per cent. This is a small increase and is due, as far as we can make out, mainly to the increased pay given to establishments to meet the rise in the cost of living. The major part of our establishments is of course in the big departments on the reserved side.

Generally speaking, the main causes for the increased expenditure next year are the increased pay which it has been found necessary to give to all the services to meet the economic situation arising out of the war, and partly to the fact that during the war, and after the war, expenditure has been rigidly cut down under the orders of the Government of India, and only urgent and inevitable expenditure has been permitted. The result was that new developments were practically stopped, and many measures of ordinary maintenance had to be suspended or greatly curtailed. This fact will be borne in mind when the Council comes to discuss the grants for individual departments, and I need not elaborate it now.

Turning to the question of the provincial deficit, which is expected to amount next year to 2 crores and 8 lakhs of rupees, we propose to meet this by drawing on our balances. These balances consist partly of what used to be called "doles" granted to us by the Government of India for specific objects when they had a surplus, and partly of the savings in the provincial Government Budgets during the war, due to the fact, which I have already mentioned, that our expenditure during the war was rigidly restricted. Our balances are unduly swollen; on the 31st March they will amount to over 250 lakhs, and we need not feel any hesitation in spending these balances, now that we require money. Even after we have drawn this deficit of 208 lakhs from balances, we shall still be left at the end of next year with a closing balance of over 50 lakhs, and this is sufficient for all practical purposes. Of the expenditure from balances amounting to over 2 crores, we calculate that about 94 lakhs can fairly be treated as capital expenditure at the present moment, as this could be met from a loan, if we were in a position at the present moment to exercise the borrowing powers which we possess under the new constitution. The remainder of the deficit, amounting to 114 lakhs, cannot strictly be regarded as capital expenditure, and we could not put it on to a loan even if we were in a position to raise a loan. To that extent I admit that, in meeting this portion of the deficit from balances, we are open to the charge, at least theoretically, that this is unsound finance, but I hope that, when I have explained the position, the Council will agree with me that in the circumstances of the year no other course was open to us. The present Government of Bengal was constituted on the 3rd January last; the first business we had to undertake was to get our Budget ready for presentation to the Council to-day, and we had only a little over six weeks to do it in. We found ourselves faced with this situation that the heads of revenue, allotted to Bengal under the Reforms Scheme, were insufficient to meet the necessary recurring expenditure. We have, as I have already told the Council, already submitted a representation to the Government of India that our income is entirely insufficient to meet our expenditure. We have drawn special attention to the recommendations of the Joint Committee, that the peculiar financial difficulties of Bengal should receive special consideration at the hands of the Government of India, and in a telegram which we received a few days ago, the Secretary of State has authorised us to announce that the question of the precise action to be taken in pursuance of the recommendation of the Joint Select Committee is under consideration. We may reasonably hope, therefore, that, before the time comes round for asking the Council to consider another Budget, our position, so far as our annual receipts are concerned, will have materially improved. Cherishing this hope, as I do, it is unnecessary for me to discuss this morning what the situation will be if our expectations are disappointed, and if we find it necessary to increase our revenues in other ways. For the present, we can meet our deficit from accumulated balances, which, for the reasons I have already given, are unduly swollen, and I think that in the position in which we find ourselves, no other course is open to us.

It will be observed that, apart from the Revenue Budget, we have made provision for an expenditure of 70 lakhs under head 57 on the Grand Trunk Canal. This represents the initial expenditure on a big project which is ultimately expected to cost about 330 lakhs and will take 10 to 12 years to complete; it is expected to be remunerative when it is completed. It is proposed to finance this project from a loan, and the Government of India have promised us a loan of 50 lakhs next year, which will enable us to go ahead with the scheme.

I have already suggested, in one or two connections, the possibility of meeting our capital expenditure from loans. Hitherto, this policy has not been open to a local Government. We have had no independent borrowing powers of our own; our income has consisted of a share in certain heads of revenue allotted to us from time to time by the Government of India, and of the doles which the Government of India have granted to us when they were in a position to do so. The local Government have therefore, hitherto, not been in a position to maintain a loan account, such as most other large corporations in this and other countries do. We have had to meet our capital expenditure on schemes, the benefits of which are expected to last for many years, out of our annual revenue. We have now been given borrowing powers of our own, and it is obviously sound finance to spread the expenditure on capital schemes over a number of years, instead of taking them up haphazard in any year when we happen to have a revenue surplus. If we adopt a regular loan policy, we shall be able to draw up a programme of capital expenditure and carry out our schemes in the most efficient manner possible. Hitherto, we have been more or less in the position of a young man in possession of a fine estate, but limited as regards his annual expenditure to a fixed sum allowed to him by his guardians. We have now been placed in complete possession of our estate and can develop it in the manner which commends itself to us as most convenient. The Council may ask why, in these circumstances, we have made no provision in the Budget for next year for any loan expenditure, except in connection with the Grand Trunk Canal. Well, the reason is two-fold. In the first place, it would be unwise for us, in the present state of the money market, to float or attempt to float a provincial loan; on the other hand, we have no debts, and, with the resources of the province behind us, our credit should be good, especially if, as I hope, provincial patriotism rallies to our assistance when we seek to float a provincial loan. But, apart from the present state of the money market, there is a further obstacle in the way of our embarking on a loan at the present time. Unfortunately, as I have shown, our total income is insufficient to meet our total recurring expenditure, and, until this deficit is got rid of, it is clearly impossible for us to use our borrowing powers to the best advantage. A sound loan policy presupposes provision for a sinking fund, from which a loan taken for a specific object will be paid off, both interest and principal, before the life of the project comes to an end. It is obvious that we cannot add any considerable provision for a sinking fund to our normal recurring expenditure, unless and until our normal recurring income is increased to a pitch commensurate with our necessary annual commitments. As I have already explained, we have laid our difficulties before the Government of India, and the matter is under consideration. I cannot, therefore, go into it further at the present moment, nor is it worth while for me, as matters stand at present, to take up the time of the Council in analysing more fully the various sources of revenue which have been allocated to us under the existing arrangements.

Many of the members of this Council have had no previous experience of administration, and all of us are new to the procedure which will be followed this year in connection with the Budget; it may, therefore, assist the Council if I explain briefly what a Budget is and what the functions of the Council are in regard to the Budget.

The provincial Budget is built up from the departmental Budgets which are prepared by the various departments and by the Accountant-General at the beginning of the cold weather. These departmental Budgets show the sums required for their establishments and other obligatory expenditure in the various departments, and they also contain the new schemes which each department would like to take up if they were in a position to do so. These budgets are pruned, in the first place, in the Finance Department on various technical considerations, and then they are totalled up. If the grand total exceeds the amount at the disposal of Government or estimated to be at the disposal of Government during the coming year, the departments concerned are asked to cut down their demands. That was unfortunately the case this year. We have found it necessary, in consultation with the various departments, to reduce very greatly the original demands of the departments, and to postpone the execution of many excellent and highly desirable schemes. I wish in this connection to express my gratitude to my colleagues on the Executive Council and to the Ministers for the ready manner in which they have met us in regard to this. The position is most unsatisfactory, but everyone has realised that it has been necessary to face the difficulties, and I can only hope that these difficulties will be less next year.

This is how the Budget was framed up to the stage which we have reached to-day.

The Council now have the Budget in their hands. They will have a week to consider it, and next Monday we shall begin the general debate on the financial situation. In that debate—I will quote from the rules—the Council will be at liberty to discuss the Budget as a whole or any question of principle involved therein, but no motion will be moved at this stage, nor will the Budget be put to the vote of the Council.

This preliminary discussion corresponds very much, as old members of the Council will remember, to the discussion which used to take place at the beginning of April after the details of the Budget had already been discussed in the Council. The difference is that the general discussion will now precede instead of following the detailed discussion. We propose, when the Budget is thrown open to discussion next Monday, that the non-official members should offer such remarks as they may wish to make. The official members, the Members of Council and the Ministers, and, possibly, the Secretaries, will then deal with such matters as have been raised in the course of the debate. So much for the general discussion which will take place next week.

On the 14th of March the Council will begin a new and a very important stage, viz., the voting of grants. A separate demand will be made in respect of each head of the Budget as shown in the Budget statement. These demands will be put before the Council by the Member or Minister in charge of the department, excluding only those items shown as non-voted in the Budget statement. These consist of the items mentioned in section 72D (3) of the Government of India Act, which are not submitted to the Council. They amount to 2 crores of rupees out of the total provincial expenditure of nearly 12 crores, and, in that 2 crores of non-voted grants, there is, of course, our assignment of 63 lakhs to the Government of India; but, in respect of the balance of nearly 10 crores, a separate demand for each major head will, as I have said, be submitted to this Council. Members of the Council will be at liberty to move motions to reduce grants by way of amendment to the main motion that the grant be voted. After these amendments have been disposed of, the main question will be put from the chair and voted upon. The Council's control, however, does not cease with the voting of grants, which will take place in the second fortnight of March. The rules provide for the control, being exercised throughout the year. Under the old system, the Budget was little more than an estimate. The original Budget was an estimate framed some months before the year began, of what Government was likely to spend during the year. That estimate was revised from time to time in the light of experience and fuller information, and the local Government had full power, subject to the control of the Government of India and the Secretary of State, to alter its own estimates, and to spend money provided in the Budget for one purpose on an entirely different purpose, which perhaps was not shown in the Budget at all. So far as the voted grants are concerned, under the new system, the old powers of Government have, in a very large measure, passed to the Council. The Council will next month vote certain sums of money to the various departments under each major head; neither the Government nor the department concerned will have power to spend these grants on other major heads without reference to the Council, unless, of course, the Governor uses the powers given to him under section 72 (D) of the Government of India Act. Furthermore, even if Government should find during the year that the sum provided by the Council for a particular major head is not required in full for that head, it will be necessary for Government to obtain the sanction of the Council to spend the excess on some other head. It will not be open to Government, for example, to transfer surplus funds under Education to Police, Jails or other departments. It will be necessary for Government to ask the Council to sanction the transfer of funds from one department to the other, and, ordinarily, in practice, the procedure will be for Government to place before the Council a supplementary estimate and ask the Council to vote a supplementary grant. The powers of control over expenditure, which are entrusted to the Council, will be exercised through the Committee on Public Accounts. That Committee will be appointed, under the rules in the Council Manual, at the beginning of April after the grants have been voted. Two-thirds of the members will be elected by the non-official members of the Council, and the remaining one-third will be appointed by His Excellency the Governor. The main duty of the Committee, as laid down in the rules, is to satisfy itself that the money voted by the Council has been spent within the scope of the demands granted by the Council, and to bring to the notice of the Council every re-appropriation from one grant to another, and every re-appropriation within a grant which has not been made with proper sanction, or which has the effect of increasing the expenditure on an item, the provision for which has been specifically reduced by a vote of the Council. The precise procedure under which the Committee will work has not yet been decided, and I think it would be a mistake to tie ourselves down to any definite procedure before we have gained some practical experience of the working of these novel functions. The Council may, however, be assured that we shall afford the Committee every facility for the due discharge of its important duties and of its responsibilities to the Council.

To sum up, then, the Council has been given the power to fix the grant under each major head in the first instance, and then to see that these grants are not exceeded without further reference to the Council. I need not emphasize the importance of the powers of control given to the Council by these new measures. As I have already said in a debate which took place about 10 days ago, our desire—the desire of Ministers and Members—is to put the Council in a position to use its great powers of control wisely and sanely, and to give it all the information which it requires for this purpose. It will be a great convenience to us if any member, who intends to raise any particular points either during the general discussion of the Budget on the 28th, or in connection with the voting of grants, which will begin on the 14th March, will give us notice as early as possible. Notice of motions to reduce grants must be handed in before 3 p.m. on the 4th March; but apart from these formal motions, it would, as I have said, be a great convenience if members wishing to raise specific points would let us know as early as possible beforehand what points they want to raise and what information they want regarding them. So far as the Budget is concerned, Mr. Marr and myself will be happy to see members at any time either in this Chamber, as opportunity arises, or at Writers' Buildings, and to supply any information or any explanation that may be required on points which are not clear to members.

I need not take up the time of the Council any longer. I beg formally to introduce the Budget estimates of the Government of Bengal for the year 1921-22.

The Deputy-President's Emoluments Bill, 1921.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER moved "that the Deputy-President's Emoluments Bill, 1921, be taken into consideration."

I explained the object of this Bill on a previous occasion, and notice of only one amendment has been given in respect of it. The issue so raised is a very simple one, and practically comes to this: whether this new post which has been created should practically be an honorary one, or whether attached to it there should be a reasonable but not excessive remuneration.

The motion was put and agreed to.

Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY withdrew the following motion: "That in line 4 of clause 2 (1) of the Bill, for the words 'five thousand rupees' the words 'rupee one' be substituted."

I rise with reference to the amendment which now stands in my name in spite of the varied attempts of the Legislative Department to attach it to my illustrious relatives; but before I proceed further, I must make my position clear to the House, that it was not with any desire on my part to belittle the importance of the office of the Deputy-President or to belittle the personality of the Deputy-President, to whom I bow with the respect which is his due; it was not with any desire on my part to show to this assembly that I think that this is the proper arena for facetious amendments and facetious resolutions that I sent in notice of this amendment, but merely because I was under the impression that there was a technical difficulty in any attempt on the part of the House to defeat the Bill. I did not wish to give the subtle law officers of Government an opportunity of turning round and saying that we have failed in our efforts to make the post strictly honorary, as under the provisions of the Government of India Act we are required to fix an amount. But I regret very much that I have not been able to disabuse the minds of the members of this House of their pre-conceived notion that there is something ludicrous and incongruous between Rs. 5,000 and rupee one or to convince them that this is a purely formal resolution. Therefore, with the leave of the House, I beg to withdraw the amendment.

The amendment was then, with the leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I had sent two notices of amendments in connection with this Bill, and they have been disallowed, but I wish to speak on the provisions of the Bill. I wish to explain to the House what I proposed was that—

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT: Let me hear what the Rai Bahadur has to say, as I understand he desires to speak on the Bill.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: What I want to say is that, as far as this Bill stands, it is obligatory on the House to vote a salary as soon as the appointment of the Deputy-President is made and confirmed by His Excellency the Governor.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: May I rise to a point of order?

The PRESIDENT: I think Sir Henry Wheeler must be given an opportunity of moving that the Bill, as settled in Council, be passed before any member can be allowed to speak.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER moved "that the Bill, as settled in Council, be passed."

In view of the fact that the only amendment of which notice was given has been withdrawn, I do not propose at this stage to offer any further remarks.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I regret I cannot agree to the provision as it stands, not because my amendment is not on the agenda, but I must say this that, if it had been provided that it would be at the discretion of the Council to pay a sum not exceeding Rs. 5,000 from time to time, I think it would have given the House an opportunity of fixing such salary as they might think fit. As far as I understand, this Bill, as soon as it becomes law, will not allow the Council to fix a salary which they choose; and there is another point which might have been also provided—

The PRESIDENT: I must point out once again that there is a statutory obligation on the House to fix a salary. The only salary which has been proposed is Rs. 5,000. As the amendment has been withdrawn, I do not think, therefore, that there is any other proposal before the House on which my friend can speak. I would therefore put the question to the House.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned till 2 p.m. on Tuesday, the 22nd February, 1921.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Tuesday, the 22nd February, 1921, at 2 p.m.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 105 nominated and elected members

Resolutions

(under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest).

Competitive Examinations.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): I have been informed that the mover of the first resolution wants to withdraw it. By the leave of the Council, he may withdraw it. The two amendments that follow will also be deemed to be withdrawn.

The resolution and amendments were as follows:—

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that the recruitment of Deputy Collectors and Sub-Deputy Collectors should ordinarily be made by an open competitive examination, the Government retaining the power of nominating a certain number every year according to circumstances."

Maulvi ABDUL KARIM to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 7, after the word "examination" the following be inserted, namely: "provision being made to secure the due representation of communities as well as of the districts in the services."

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED to move by way of amendment that at the end of motion No. 7 the following be added, namely: "Provided that some posts be reserved for Muhammadans—the whole number of posts required for the posts reserved for Muhammadans being in the ratio of the number of the whole population of the province to the total number of the Muhammadan population in the province, such posts being competed for by Muhammadans only."

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: "This Council recommends to the Government that recruitment to the following Government posts be made by means of suitable open competitive examinations, due provision being made to safeguard the interests of communities, as well as the claims of individual districts and divisions, viz:—

- (i) Deputy Collectors and Munsifs;
- (ii) Sub-Deputy Collectors;

- (iii) Superintendents, Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors of Excise;
- (iv) Sub-Registrars;
- (v) Deputy Superintendents, Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors of Police; and
- (vi) Inspectors and Auditors of Co-operative Societies. "

Before I say anything on the resolution itself, I think I ought to say a few words about the amendments that have been proposed. There are eleven of them, and from this it may appear that there is a considerable difference of opinion regarding this matter. But when the amendments are analysed, it will be evident that there is not much opposition to the principle of competition, which is the very essence of my resolution. I invite this Council to declare that the principle of open competition for recruitment to public services is superior to that of nomination. As regards the details of working it out, and as to safeguarding the interests of localities and communities, there may be and there must be some difference of opinion. I want to make it clear, however, that once the principle of competition is accepted, I am quite anxious to come to an amicable settlement with regard to the details. It is not my desire to create a dissension, and I shall welcome any suggestion that tends to bring about a harmonious working out of the details.

Competition is not a new matter before the Council. Over three years ago, I think it was in November 1917, the question of competitive examination as a method of recruitment for the Provincial Executive and Judicial Service was taken up. There was a very interesting debate, and the non-official members spoke in favour of the principle of competition. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler traced the history of the policy of the Government towards recruitment of these services in Bengal since 1868 and mentioned the necessity of considering the recommendations of the Public Services Commission and also of consulting the High Court about this matter, and ended the discussion with these words: "We, on behalf of the Government, promise to pay attention to this resolution in our subsequent consideration of what the future method of recruitment will be."

On this assurance, the resolution was withdrawn.

A long time has passed since then, and I believe we are just where we were at that time. To-day the system of nomination prevails in all the services, Executive, Judicial and others. I know that Government is rather slow to move, but it seems inexplicable that a matter like this could not be decided in more than three years. I believe a statement was made during the last year's budget debate that the Secretary of State had been moved in the matter, but since then we have heard nothing about it.

With the advent of constitutional Government, the angle of vision has changed in many matters, and it is time that we fixed up our standpoint as far as the public services are concerned. Whatever may be said in theory, it seems a curious anomaly that in this country, the public servants are not regarded as servants of the public but rather as their masters. This idea has got to be changed. Our leading Minister is reported to have said the other day, that the Government has been partially nationalised and that the Ministers are here, because they command the confidence of the public. If this be true, how much more is it true that the public servants should also command the confidence of the people, and not merely the confidence of the bureaucracy.

What is the first condition that people may have confidence in the public service? It is no other than that the officers of that service should be recruited by means of fair and open competition and not by any process which may resemble back-door influence. "Fair field and no favour," is a maxim which is very well understood by the people.

The drawbacks of nomination are serious and were ably described by all the non-official members, who took part in the debate of that Council meeting which I have mentioned above.

We have no authoritative statement as regard the comparative merits and demerits of officers of the Executive Service who were recruited by means of competition and nomination respectively, but this much can be asserted that the public have greater confidence on those officers who were taken as a result of competitive tests.

The system of nomination is pernicious and demoralising, as it cannot but foster a spirit of servility in the candidate and a spirit of favouritism in the officer who makes the nomination. The back-door of nepotism and favouritism is productive of untold evil, when the machinery of nepotism is skilfully handled for political purposes, public services become the hunting ground of a section or race of sycophants who can play the double game skilfully and diplomatically.

I hope this House will kindly bear with me when I mention two typical cases that have come under my personal observation, to show the mentality that is engendered by this system of nomination. One officer, who has been taken into one of the Executive Services, after three years of running about from one Burra-sahib to another, told me plainly that he was afraid of attending a jatra party (musical dramatic party performed by Mukunda Chandra Das) lest his Collector should be displeased. I mention this, because this particular jatra party is well known all over Bengal to be quite innocuous. I am sure the Collector did not forbid him from attending, but his mentality had so much degenerated that his criterion of judging an action was no longer whether it was right or wrong, but whether it would please or displease his superior officers. And this young man had even taken part in politics in his college days! I know of the father of another young man who prided himself on having secured certificates from 15 civilians. I do not know whom to pity most, the candidate's father or the 15 civilians from whom he got the certificates. What humiliations must he have passed through, before securing these 15 certificates. This is the way our flowers of youth are being degenerated and demoralised. Not only the youths, but their guardians and friends get a mania of certificate-hunting, which is bound to destroy the self-respect of anybody.

Though the system of competition has been tried once or twice in the Executive Service, it is a curious anomaly that the judicial branch of the Provincial Service has all along been recruited by nomination, pure and simple. It is a mystery that this system continues unchanged so long. It cannot be said that there have not been any complaints against this system. Retired Munsifs and Sub-Judges are already beginning to look upon this service as their special heritage to provide their sons and sons-in-law with. I have heard it said that in some cases of sons of Sub-Judges or Judges, the rule of requiring three years' legal practice before enrolment has been relaxed. I am not sure, but, if it is so, is it because the authorities think that the art of dispensing justice is hereditary? In India, some arts and crafts are handed down from father to son. Do the Government wish to include dispensation of justice among those arts and crafts? Or are the Government anxious to add a new caste of dispensers of justice to the already too numerous castes of India?

In whatever way we may look at it, the present system of recruiting Munsifs is pernicious. You yourself, Sir, as a Member of the Bengal Executive Council, said in your note of dissent from the views expressed by the Government of Bengal regarding the questions of the Public Services Commission: "Those who enter into the Provincial Judicial Service are generally men who have failed in the Bar and whose experience in the legal profession is not of any particular value."

I do not wish to say anything against the whole Provincial Judicial Service which has produced some extremely able officers, but I do say that we have got these able officers in spite of the present rotten system. This system has opened the door to quite a number of Munsifs who cannot at all command the confidence of the people. Practising lawyers, arguing before such officers, lose all confidence in them, and a deep under-current of discontent is generated against the system which sends such men to preside over them. He is led to think that he is wasting his arguments and that the presiding officer is wasting public money and Government prestige. In the Judicial Service again, the proximity of the High Court to some districts has given an immense advantage to the people of these localities as against their brethren who come from distant parts. From the figures compiled in 1916, it appeared that out of a total of 300 members in the Judicial Service, the Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions had only 31 members, whereas one district alone in Western Bengal had 63 members and the other three Divisions together had 269 members. Since then, further appointments have been made, but even now the proportion of appointments, as between one locality and another, is hopelessly abnormal.

In the Police Department also, though the tone of the service has somewhat improved of late, there is still much room for improvement. Unless we tempt the best of our young men by fair open competitive examinations, we cannot expect this department to command that confidence and sympathy of the public, which is so much necessary for the smooth working of this department. It is no use multiplying arguments. In all services, competition is better than nomination. I cannot better conclude this portion of my remarks than by quoting what the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ul-Rahim, now our Member in the Bengal Executive Council, said in his minute to the Report of the Public Services Commission: "The distinctive feature which has established it (competition) most in popular favour is the decisive safeguard which it provides against the danger of partiality in the exercise of State patronage. Open competition stimulates the habit of self-reliance in young men. It enables the Government to save itself from no inconsiderable odium, which is inseparable from any form of nomination. I have been particularly impressed by the unanimous condemnation by Indian opinion of the system of pure nomination as it is now worked in this country. It is at the same time, both possible and desirable that in the locally recruited services, a substantial recognition should be given, whenever practicable, to the general advantages of the system of competition."

I do not know that any word of mine can carry greater condemnation of the system of nomination.

At the present time, the pay and prospects of almost all the services have been improved, and it is possible to get the best among our young men to come forward for service. Now is the time to introduce competitive tests, which alone can improve the tone of all the services.

I find that there is an amendment by Mr. S. R. Das wishing to insert the word "direct" before the word "recruitment." I quite appreciate his point that he would like to introduce open competition in cases of direct recruitment only. I was also in favour of this idea at first. But unfortunately, I have heard of the great discontent that prevails among Sub-Deputy Collectors and other Subordinate Service men, who, though efficient workers, could not get promoted to higher services because a more fortunate brother officer could unduly influence a senior officer, which they could not. All the defects of nomination apply here also. Surely some sort of a departmental competitive test may be introduced which will give all the officers an equal chance of promotion. Discontent is never good for any service, and the sooner the legitimate causes are removed, the better for all concerned.

I find that one of the members wishes to remove "Sub-Registrar" from the list of services mentioned. Another member wants to delete the Excise Inspectors, another, Police Inspectors and another Co-operative Inspectors. I do not know what charm there is in these posts that they should be kept specially closed for nomination. The augean stables must be cleared, and it is best that the clearance should be wholesale and not piecemeal.

I now come to the reservations in the last part of my resolution. Personally I should have liked open competition, pure and simple. That is the main principle of my resolution. But I am conscious that all communities and localities are not equally advanced in western education. I am proud to notice that our Muhammadan brethren have made great advances in western education during the last ten years, but there are other smaller communities where the progress of education has not been so rapid or widespread. Then, again, there are some districts or divisions which have not had the same advantages as those near the metropolis. It is desirable that all communities, and all parts of the province, should have their fair share of representation in the public services.

The present system of determining the number of recruits to be taken from particular communities and localities for the Executive Services seems to commend itself. I should suggest that the Government may decide at the beginning of each year how many vacancies are to be filled from each community and locality.

I have just now received a letter from my Muhammadan friends saying that the matter of representation of communities may be amicably settled by a discussion of the matter outside the Council. They whole-heartedly support the principle of competition. In view of the strong feeling regarding the question of representation of communities and the possibilities of an amicable settlement, I should like to ask the permission of the House to withdraw the resolution now, in order to bring it forward at a subsequent meeting. May I have that permission Sir?

The PRESIDENT: I think you have already discussed it at considerable length and you ought to go on.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I want the permission of the Council to withdraw this resolution, so that I might bring it forward at a subsequent meeting.

The PRESIDENT: Permission is asked to withdraw the resolution. If there is no objection, the resolution might be allowed to be withdrawn. The motion, with its amendments as follow, was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The amendments were as follows:—

Mr. S. R. DAS to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 11 the word "direct" be inserted between the words "that" and "recruitment."

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 12 the word "direct" be inserted between the words "that" and "recruitment."

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 12, after the word "recruitment," the following be added, namely: "to the extent of three-fourths of the total number of vacancies each year."

Mr. S. R. DAS to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 12 the following words be omitted, namely: "due provision being made to safeguard the interests of communities, as well as the claims of individual districts and divisions."

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 12 for the words "due provision being made to safeguard the interests of communities as well as the claims of individual districts and divisions," the following be substituted, namely, "fifty per cent of the posts being reserved for Muhammadans, to be awarded to Muhammadan candidates in order of merit on the list"

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 12 for the words "as well as the claims of individual districts and divisions," the following be substituted, namely: "and to ensure the promotion of deserving public servants from the lower to the higher posts or grades of service."

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ to move by way of amendment that in motion No. 12, after the word "divisions," the following be inserted, namely: "and that 50 per cent of the appointments be reserved for Muhammadans to be so filled up."

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI to move by way of amendment that in clause (i) of motion No. 12 the words "and munsifs" be omitted, and that in clause (iii) the word "Inspectors" be omitted

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ to move by way of amendment that clause (iv) of motion No. 12 be omitted.

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI to move by way of amendment that in clause (i) of motion No. 12 the word "Inspectors" be omitted.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED to move by way of amendment that at the end of motion No. 12 the following be added, namely: "Provided that some posts be reserved for Muhammadans the whole number of posts required for the posts reserved for Muhammadans being in the ratio of the number of the whole population of the province to the whole number of the Muhammadan population in the province, such reserved posts being competed for by Muhammadans only."

Agricultural Schools.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "This Council recommends to the Government that suitable provision be made in the ensuing Budget for starting an agricultural school attached to the existing agricultural farm at the headquarters of the Rajshahi district."

Sir, when three years ago I brought this matter before the old Council, the Hon'ble Mr. Cumming, who was then in charge of the Agricultural Department, accepted the proposition in these words: "Early steps be taken to impart suitable education regarding improved methods of agriculture, and that demonstration farms be established in different centres in this Presidency." This was accepted on the 22nd January, 1918. In 1919 my friend, Mr. Huq, brought forward a resolution at the Dacca Council meeting, pressing for the establishment of a fully equipped agricultural college at Dacca, which was accepted with certain modifications. It was said that an "institute" should be established at Dacca in place of a "college." I understand that an institute has been opened there since January last, and I also understand that arrangements are being made for starting an agricultural school at Chinsura. My original proposal, which was accepted in 1918, was that arrangements should be made in different centres for imparting instruction in improved methods of agriculture. The proposal which is now before the House is that suitable provision be made in the ensuing Budget for starting an agricultural school attached to the existing agricultural farm at the headquarters of the Rajshahi district. My excuse is that though it is not known yet what benefit has been derived by the starting of the institute at Dacca, there is another arrangement in the Dacca Experimental Farm for imparting practical agricultural instruction to cultivators. We do not know what satisfactory result has been obtained from this arrangement, but when the principle has been accepted that arrangements should be made for imparting agricultural education in different centres of the province, gradual steps should be taken for starting an agricultural school in each division at least. If there has been one in the Dacca Division and arrangement is being made for establishing another in the Burdwan Division, it is time that another may be started in the Rajshahi Division. The question is not a new one—the Calcutta University Commission expressed its opinion on the point. I often wondered that in a province where out of 46 millions of people 35 millions live upon agriculture, there was no suitable arrangement for imparting agricultural education. Vocational education is now a necessity. By the development of industrial activities, with the help of properly-equipped technological institutes, by imparting commercial education under proper arrangements and by the development of agricultural education, I think, the rising generation can have sufficient employment and can make a living of their own. It is no longer sufficient that education should be imparted merely for turning out men for subordinate services or for private employment. It is now time that something should be done by which the people can stand upon their own legs. But if anything industrial or commercial is to be done, it requires a good deal of money.

I understand that the object of starting an agricultural institute in connection with the Dacca University is to turn out qualified officers for employment in the Education Department or to teach the zamindars to improve their land or to turn out some managers for the zamindars, who can do something for improving the agricultural aspect of the management they may take charge of, or to turn out some research scholars, as is done in Pusa; but that is not the thing which I am at. My idea is that any one with 20 acres or so of land and with moderate means at his disposal can learn agriculture in all its different aspects and can make a decent living. He can safely earn at least Rs. 600 a year and he need not go anywhere for employment as an M.A. with the prospect of getting Rs. 40 or Rs. 50 a month. At present I know a cultivator makes Rs. 10 a bigha or Rs. 30 an acre—but then there are dangers. He must know how to utilise his resources, he should know proper manuring, he should know how to raise at least two crops a year, and along with that, he should know how to economise labour and how to take advantage of co-operative movements. Without these things it is not possible for him to be thrifty and self-reliant. I am well acquainted with the cultivator, and whenever there is a failure of crop he is put to great difficulty and sometimes he has to depend entirely upon the sweet pleasure of mahajans, and sometimes he loses all the land he possesses. Under these circumstances I think agricultural education should be imparted in such a way as to enable a man of moderate means to make a decent living without the help of any costly arrangement or any costly enterprise.

After the separation of Bihar, my friend Mr. Huq was anxious that as we were going to lose the advantage of the Sabour College, an institute should be started for this presidency at Dacca. Such an institute could be useful no doubt, but that is not the thing which I am at and that is not the thing which was accepted by Government three years ago.

There is another reason for bringing forward this motion before the House. At Rajshahi there is an agricultural experimental farm. Recently the late lamented Basanta Kumar Roy of Dighapattia gave a donation of 2½ lakhs in 3½ per cent Government paper for imparting higher training in agriculture and other technological instructions in the Rajshahi College under the supervision of the Calcutta University. I do not know whether that will be done, but, if it is to be done, this school will be a preliminary step. There is another thing which I should like to bring forward before this Council. At present Government are spending Rs. 9 lakhs a year for agricultural improvement, but I do not know, Sir, how much it has benefited the people. The cultivators cannot learn much in an experimental farm. It is really in a demonstration farm, where if it can be demonstrated to the people by showing the method of work and how it can be profitably carried out, that the cultivators can be benefited. In an experimental farm some experiment is made on a few cottahs of land under a costly arrangement and, upon the result of that, a general inference is made. Though in the experimental farm at Rajshahi some cultivators wanted to learn something, so far as I know no one was much benefited by it. Recently Dr. Neogi, Professor of Chemistry in the Rajshahi College, is trying to take a number of boys from the 1st to the 4th year classes of the College Department to the farm for the purpose of imparting some agricultural education to them, but the arrangement is very defective. As I have already submitted, expert knowledge is necessary, as we should know how the yield of land can be improved and how we can take benefit by manures and other things. Expert knowledge and theoretical learning should both go hand in hand. A committee was appointed by the Calcutta University in which Mr. President himself took part, and a report was submitted in which it was suggested that not only a college class should be opened for higher training in agriculture but also an intermediate course was necessary. My idea is that such a school for the intermediate course should be started at Rajshahi, where a department should also be opened for imparting practical training to the cultivators, not by starting experimental farms, but by starting small demonstration farms. If that is done, both the illiterate and literate class will get sufficient training and the cultivators will be much benefited, and the youthful generation, who are anxious to get some employment here and there even on Rs. 30, Rs. 40 or Rs. 25 a month, can go back to their own homes with limited resources at their disposal and can start a farm and can thus make a decent living. This is the thing which I want, and thus, I think, should be done. Although Government accepted the proposition three years ago, I can safely say that up to this moment nothing has been done in the direction which I aimed at. There are other proposals before the House to-day, the aim of which is also to provide vocational education, and a suggestion has been made that a committee should be formed in the first instance to draw up a scheme as to how this can be done. If this is taken as a part of that or if any committee be necessary, I have no objection. My proposition is that something ought to be done, and my suggestion is that one such school should be started at Rajshahi. With the help of the Rajshahi College and with that of the experimental farm this can be done at a very moderate expense. I had a talk with Professor Neogi on the subject, and he told me that this could be done with an initial expenditure of Rs. 10,000 and a recurring expenditure of Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 4,000. This is a very modest scheme and it should, I think, be given effect to.

With these few words I commend this resolution to the acceptance of the House.

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: I beg to support this resolution.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: May I point out that under section 94 of the Bengal Legislative Council Rules and Standing Orders there is no power to increase the grant in the Budget?

The PRESIDENT: The question of a grant does not arise at this stage. It is only a recommendation and Government may not accept the recommendation. I think the discussion may go on.

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: I would draw the attention of the House to one aspect of the question, which is this—Many students go up for the Entrance Examination—either they come up in the 3rd Division or they are not successful in passing the examination. Having failed in the examination, they fall back upon society and, having no occupation, they take to touting, and the danger of touting is well known to many of my friends and I need not make a repetition. There is another point, Sir, that 90 per cent. of the population of the district are agriculturists, and we have found by experience that by improved methods of agriculture the outturn can be increased. If the boys who have got plucked at the Entrance Examination and those who are not able to go up for the I A Examination, get a practical training in agriculture, they can go back to the villages and earn a decent living by taking to agricultural pursuits. I know, Sir, that one of my friends in Rajshahi has taken to agriculture and the same land which was producing three years before six maunds of paddy, has this year produced fifteen maunds. We all know that agriculture is the chief thing in Bengal.

With these few words I support the resolution.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I have much pleasure in supporting the resolution which has been moved by Babu Krishori Mohan Chaudhuri. I am very glad to learn that Government have been pleased to establish an agricultural farm in the district of Rajshahi, but I am sorry to find that an agricultural school has not yet been attached to it. It is just like the play of Hamlet without Hamlet. Sir, 75 per cent. of the population of Bengal depends on agriculture, and it is absolutely necessary that an agricultural farm and an agricultural school should be established in every district of Bengal, not to speak of the district of Rajshahi, in which, as I have been informed by my friend, 90 per cent. of the population depend on agriculture. Sir, we all grudge the high price of wheat, the high price of rice and other food-grains—and what is the reason? The reason is nothing but this. The outturn of rice, the outturn of wheat, the outturn of food-grains in India, is materially less than that in the other civilised countries of the world. In the case of rice, Mr. President, I may say that the outturn of rice in Japan is more than double that of Bengal. Similarly, in the case of wheat, the outturn of wheat in Canada is more than double of that in the Punjab. The want of agricultural education is alone responsible for this poor state of things.

With these remarks I beg to submit that this resolution should be accepted by this Council.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: The resolution that is before the House is no doubt a very good one, but before we have formed a committee to consider as to what sort of schools we are going to have, it is very difficult for us to vote for it. The mover of the resolution has not given us any idea of what sort of curriculum will be taught in these schools and what will be their ultimate object. So it is very difficult for us to form an idea whether it will really prove a boon to the country. The thing is, Sir, that we have got some sort of idea of the colleges at Pusa and Sabour, but we have not got any idea of the school and its curriculum. Sir, we know very well that in this province the cultivators are the worst sufferers--the zamindars as a class stand aloof. They do not engage any qualified man for giving instruction to their labourers, or to do anything for the cultivators themselves. They manage their own things. If the boys of cultivators are taught some elementary curriculum dealing with the principles of agriculture and principles of manures and all these things, they will be useful; otherwise a miniature college in the name of an agricultural school will not be of any good. I therefore suggest that a committee be formed to consider the curriculum that will suit the convenience of the people of this province, and then agricultural schools may be started. Then there is another thing which we will have to consider. If we are going to have these schools, we must have to curtail expenditure from some other heads either from Education or from somewhere else. Therefore we must compare side by side the advantages and disadvantages of having these schools and then, and then only, we can decide which way we should go. For the present there are some demonstrators to help the district agricultural officers and I have some experience of these demonstrators, and my idea is that they know less than nothing. They are not useful to the cultivators, but when they make some suggestions to the cultivators they make a laughing-stock of themselves. Even one of the District Officers on some occasions made some statements which are quite ridiculous. So, Sir, it is incumbent upon us, having regard to the circumstances of the province, that we have to form the curriculum first, and then we have to form an idea of the expenditure that will be involved by the establishment of this sort of school, and then we can decide whether we should have schools at every divisional headquarters or at every district headquarters.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I have great pleasure in supporting the resolution moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. It is on general principles that I do so; for it cannot be gainsaid that the backbone of our country is the agriculturist and we extract all our silvery juice from him. Therefore, even from the motive of self-interest, which perhaps appeals to many more than any other interest, we should try to lay out as much as possible of the savings which we can scrape out from other demands for the purpose of improving the condition of the agriculturist. What is required is that agriculture should be less costly, but at the same time more productive. It is well known that our agricultural process is being carried on with the same ancient and almost out-of-date implements that have been handed down from generation to generation. It is a pity that, although there are sufficient funds for other costly administrative schemes, there is hardly any for the acquisition of land which can be utilised as pasture ground for the cattle; as a result, cattle which are very necessary for agriculture, are dying out. Something must be done to remedy this evil—an evil which is eating into the vitals of the agriculturist. I therefore suggest that every district should have an agricultural demonstration farm or school, and I will go a step further and say that every school in the general line should have a vocational agricultural class as has been tried in the Durgapur School in Chittagong. We ought not to spare any means whatsoever to impress as much as possible the demonstrative value of improved agricultural methods throughout the length and breadth of the province.

From this general point of view, therefore, I heartily support the resolution.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: Of the many wrongs of which the Government is accused, I think the neglect of Government towards agriculture is the greatest. The agriculturists are the backbone of the country and it is necessary for the welfare of the country, as well as of the Government, that proper steps be taken to ensure them a decent living. When we look into the present condition of the agriculturists we find that they are half-naked and half-starved. In order to do away with such a state of things it is necessary that not only one agricultural farm should be established at Rajshahi, but there should be agricultural schools in every district, and every effort should be made to enable the agriculturists to produce from their land sufficient to feed and clothe themselves and also to help the country in becoming rich. I have no hesitation in supporting the resolution of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. I submit that the Hon'ble Minister for Agriculture will have a great task before him, for it will be for him to make the agriculturists quite contented and happy.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): I need hardly say that no one is more anxious than I am to see the expansion of sound agricultural instruction in Bengal, and I oppose this resolution mainly on the ground that it is premature. Government are giving a trial to the policy of imparting a sound training to boys of the agricultural classes who, after their period of training, will go back to the land and apply what they have learnt to the working of their own holdings. With this object Government sanctioned in 1919 the establishment of two agricultural vernacular schools, one at the Dacca Farm and the other at the Chinsura Farm. The curriculum of these schools includes the principles of agriculture, practical farm work, carpentry and smithy and general education, and the course lasts for two years. The school at Dacca was opened last year and the one at Chinsura will be opened almost at once. But the establishment of these schools is an experiment only. We do not know what demand there will be for the kind of education they impart, or whether results of that education will be as beneficial as we hope. It is impossible to judge results when even the first batch of students at Dacca are only half way through their course.

As I have said, I entirely sympathise with the mover's desire to see an expansion of agricultural education in Bengal, but I believe in advancing slowly and surely. Until experience has shown that the agricultural schools at Dacca and Chinsura are justified by their results, it would be premature to extend the experiment. I assure the mover that Government will give them close attention to the matter and I hope that he will withdraw his resolution.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I am glad that I am assured that Government will do all that lies in their power to improve the condition and prospects of agriculture in the province. But I cannot understand why I am asked to withdraw the resolution. I have already said that something ought to be done at once to provide vocational education for the people in general. It is a matter which has long been under the consideration of the Government. Three years ago, when I brought forward a similar resolution, the principle was accepted by Government, but nothing has been done yet. A school has recently been started at Dacca; but are we to wait and see the result of the education that is imparted there? There is no doubt that, if we can train our boys properly in the improved methods of agriculture, it will be paying. The matter was discussed at length by the Calcutta University Commission and a competent committee of the Calcutta University, when it was accepted that a better arrangement should be made for imparting agricultural education. We all know that although a pretty large sum of money is spent year after year on the existing agricultural farms, the cultivators derive little benefit from them. They have not created any vocational line or opened up a new avenue of life for the youthful generation. As I have shown, if agriculture can be taught in all its different branches, viz., agriculture proper, horticulture, sericulture, arboriculture, and vegetable growing, fruit-growing, and fruit-preserving and also the allied branches, along with pisciculture and cattle-rearing, it is sure to be paying, and the country will be benefited thereby. Our cultivators have not been benefited in the least by the experimental farms, because they cannot follow what is done there; they have not been shown how agriculture can be made profitable and the yield of land can be increased by an improved method of cultivation. That is what we want to be done, and no time, I think, should be lost in making a start. It has been repeatedly urged in the press and in the Legislative Council and by the University Commission and also, if I remember aright, by the Education Commission, I believe, of 1904 or so, that agricultural education should be better arranged for, and it is necessary that we should do away with the way in which it is at present being done, and we should teach boys how agricultural education can be made paying.

Sir, Bengal is pre-eminently an agricultural province. But the yield per bigha of land is decreasing day by day, because the cultivator does not know how to manure his land or how to reap two crops in a year, or how to save his plants from disease, or how to sow a fresh crop in the event of failure of one sort of crop. A knowledge of improved methods of agriculture is beneficial not only to the cultivators or zamindars, but to all. That being so, I do not understand why any time should be lost in establishing agricultural schools. As the scheme I have put forward is a very modest one, I implore the Government to accept it. Several speakers have stated that agricultural schools should be started not only at Rajshahi, but in every division, and, if possible, one in each district, and that agriculture should be made a part of the general education of the people. The people have been suffering much and the want of vocational education is keenly felt, so I say that no time should be lost in giving effect to this proposal.

A division was then taken with the following result:—

Jute Cultivation.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: "This Council recommends to the Government that immediate steps be taken to impress upon the cultivators the necessity of restricting the sowings of jute and increasing correspondingly the area for cultivation of paddy in the ensuing season."

In rising to move this resolution, I may at once tell this House that it is not the offspring of animus. I must frankly confess that I am not inspired by any spirit of hostility to the manufacturers in doing so. I do not approach you as the advocate of the middlemen. I stand before you to-day to champion the cause of the inarticulate peasantry, to plead for the voiceless millions of Bengal, the enormous country population dependent upon agriculture, steeped in poverty and immersed in the struggle for existence.

In normal times a highly industrialised country like England gives 58 persons out of every hundred to industry and only 8 to agriculture. But India gives 71 per cent. to agriculture and only 12 to industry. It must be remembered that Bengal with her 45 millions has about the same population as the British Isles. I am sure the accuracy of these statements will not be seriously challenged. This is the testimony of Mr. Montagu and His Excellency the Viceroy of India. In fact 208 millions depend directly upon agriculture in India.

The charge has often been levelled, and not without some reason however, against the intelligensia of our country that they have so far shown insufficient interest in the peasant and labouring population. The imputation may not be warrantable, but it must be candidly confessed that not even the most ardent and enthusiastic lover of the country can soothe himself into the complacent belief that it has been possible for him to consecrate himself to the improvement of the economic condition of the peasantry. The late lamented Mr. Gokhale had appreciated the magnitude of the task which needed a whole army of devoted missionaries. Here is an opportunity for us to vindicate our reputation, to acquit ourselves of the imputation. Speaking of the raiyat, Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford had recorded their deliberate opinion "that until it is made clear that his interests can safely be left in his own hands or that the Legislative Councils represent and consider his interests, we must retain power to protect him." It cannot be doubted that they were conveying a message—a beneficent message of hope and sympathy—to the raiyats. I rest my resolution upon this declaration of policy. There would have been no occasion for pressing my resolution upon this Council, if the peasantry knew their interest and were capable of protecting themselves. Before dealing with the merits of the resolution I hope you will permit me to trace the early history of the jute trade in Bengal. The recorded exports rose from 364 cwts. in 1828 to 11,800 cwts. in 1832-33. In 1882-83 the exports of raw jute amounted to 517,450 tons and the figures reached 768,000 tons in 1913-14. The first power mill was started at Serampur in 1855. The production of the mills in 1919 was about 3,000 tons a day.

I feel no hesitation in saying that the resolution embodies a modest demand for justice. No one can shut his eyes to the fact that the price of raw jute has steadily depreciated and reached such a level as to warrant State intervention. It would be interesting to notice the fluctuations in the average price of the raw material since 1913, the year before Europe was plunged into the great war.

1913	Rs. 10 to Rs. 11 per maund.
1914	" 4 to " 5 at the raiyat's door.
1915	" 7 to " 5 " "
1917	" 5 at the raiyat's door.

It was in 1917 that the mills not only bought their normal requirements but they bought largely in excess of their immediate requirements to the utmost capacity of storing accommodation of which they could get hold. They not only glutted their own godowns but filled hired godowns with purchased jute. The Director of Statistics pointed out that the net profits of the mills had increased from the index of 100 in 1914 to the index of 570 in 1917. These were the pronouncements of the Hon'ble Mr. J. G. Cumming, C.S.I., C.I.E., in 1918 in the Council Chamber of Bengal. The year 1918-19 was one of unparalleled prosperity for the Indian jute mills. The total value of the exported manufactures exceeded 35 million pounds sterling. Of private shipments, Australia, the United States, Chile, Java and Indo-China were the best customers for bags, and for cloth the United States, the Argentina, the United Kingdom and Canada. The consumption by mills would have reached 6 million bales of jute in 1918-19 if they had not resorted to short-time working. The average price of raw jute in 1920-21 has dropped to Rs. 5 per maund. What is the root cause of this depression? The reason is not far to seek. It is because the production has been considerably in excess of the demand. In the language of the Hon'ble Mr. J. G. Cumming, "the low price to the raiyats was due to the fact that the supply of raw jute was greater than the demand." I need not therefore labour the point any further.

What is the present position of the jute trade in Bengal? The following comparative table will be found to be illuminating:—

	Lakhs of bales		Lakhs of bales
Mills' last year's stock carried forward on 30th of June 1920	39	Mills' requirement for 6 months from 1st July to 31st December 1920 on the basis of 6 days' working and from 1st July to 30th of June 1921 on the basis of 5 days' working ...	57
Mills' stock up-country about	16	Shipment from 1st July up to 31st December 1920 about...	14½
Government forecast, 1920-21, about	60	Estimated export to different ports by shippers from 1st January to 30th of June 1921 about	10½
Last year's unsold stocks in the hands of raiyats and middle-men about	17	Country's requirement, about	5
	122

Next season's estimated requirements of the mills would be very nearly 50 lakhs on the basis of 5 days' working from 1st July 1921 to 30th of June 1922. The shipments would amount to about 25 lakhs at the most liberal estimate—the total figure being thus 75 lakhs. If we deduct the last year's surplus of 35 lakhs from the said 75 lakhs, we arrive at the figure of 40 lakhs which really represents the extent of the production of jute which is necessary for meeting all requirements in the ensuing season. It is therefore quite obvious that the next year's production must be limited to about 40 lakhs bales in order that the supply and demand may fairly balance each other and the growers may get a legitimate price for the raw material at their door. It is also essential that the average annual acreage under jute cultivation should be narrowed down from 28 to 15 lakhs. It would be profitable for the tiller to utilise the remaining uncultivated acres for production of paddy. It is a well-known fact that every bigha of land yields 4 to 5 maunds in jute and 6 maunds in rice. Calculating the value of the yield, we find that the tiller makes Rs. 25 at Rs. 5 per maund out of jute and Rs. 42 at Rs. 7 per maund out of rice from every bigha of land.

This being so, it may be said, as it has often been said before, that the cultivator has the remedy in his own hands. No one can deny that he has. But the question is, are the peasantry of Bengal sufficiently well-equipped to exercise the remedy? Do they possess the capacity to master the complexities of the problem and to embark on a campaign for regulating the prices to their advantage by limiting the production? Are they really capable of rallying their scattered forces? Are they really able to take care of themselves? This is the plain issue before us. I wish they were. But the fact remains that the peasantry really needs not only sympathy but protection. Platitudes and pious wishes will not avail. The situation must be faced. The agriculturists, the voiceless millions, destitute, helpless and miserable, have the right to demand State intervention. I appeal to the Government on behalf of that people. I beseech for justice for them. I am sure my appeal will not fall upon heedless and unsympathetic ears. If the Government will yet steel their hearts against them, which I hope will not be the case, if nothing will stir them to sympathy for them, I would make an earnest prayer to Government - to the Minister in charge—to have pity on them. The Government are charged with a sacred duty to protect and defend the helpless, the ignorant, and the poor. Can they shirk this duty—this plain and unmistakable duty which they have imposed upon themselves? There are a thousand and one ways in which the Government can carry out this resolution, if they are only prepared to shoulder their own responsibility. I am sure the Government will rise to the occasion and demonstrate to the country that they really do feel for the distressed cultivators of Bengal.

Before concluding I may invite the attention of the House to the sympathetic utterance of His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay at Seragang in the course of a speech delivered on the 29th August, 1919. His Excellency observed that since there was no doubt that the price of jute had gone down, the cultivators should reduce sowings of jute and increase correspondingly the area under cultivation of paddy.

With these words I commend this resolution to the acceptance of the House.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: I quite appreciate the spirit in which the member for the Mahajan Sabha has moved the resolution. It is undoubtedly a fact that the price of jute for the past few years has not been just as high as formerly and in consequence the growers of this particular crop have been rather badly hit: in some cases the price fetched by jute has not even covered the expenses of producing the same. Mr. Roy undoubtedly thinks that by restricting the cultivation of jute he would be able to secure an adequate price for it. So far this is all right. Because, after all, what Mr. Roy intends to attain, by working along the lines suggested in his resolution, is to regulate the supply according to the demand. Mr. Roy, however, in this connection, overlooks one important factor. Mr. Roy is not quite correct in attributing the cause of this fall in the price of jute to the simple economic doctrine of demand and supply. I will not bore the House by quoting lengthy statistics. I would place before the House one or two important figures of one year only. In the year 1918-19, the total outturn of jute was about 320 lakhs maunds, and the total export of jute from Bengal in the same year in raw material and gunny bags was about 390 lakhs maunds. Besides, there was undoubtedly a large quantity locally consumed. Thus it is quite plain that the supply of jute far exceeded the demand. Therefore it would be apparent to the House that it is not the question of demand and supply alone which regulates the price of jute. It is rather the strong combination of the buyers of jute, which controls its price. What, therefore, is really wanted is a strong combination of the growers of jute. It is up to the big mahajans, whom Mr. Roy represents in this House, to devise means which would enable the growers of jute to obtain an adequate price for their produce. The plan suggested by Mr. Roy is hardly satisfactory and I strongly object to its adoption either by the Government or my countrymen.

Sir, I would be brief. My objection is based on one broad principle. I object to the policy of Government interference in such matters; it is always a sound economic policy to leave matters to adjust themselves in the natural course. If Government once takes upon itself to advise cultivators as to what crops they should grow and how much they should grow each of the thousands of different varieties of crops, the Government would have to set up a huge department which shall have to ascertain what would be the demand of each of these crops, both locally and in foreign countries. Then the Government shall have to take up the rôle of a prophet to foretell such events of nature as rainfall, storms, floods, epidemics and so forth. I hardly expect that the Government is prepared at present to take upon itself such heavy responsibilities.

Then, Sir, there is another important point. Before the middlemen, whose interests Mr. Roy has apparently in view in moving this resolution, are allowed to dictate to our raiyats in these matters through the official channels, the views of the raiyats as well as of their landlords should be definitely ascertained. On behalf of the landlords, I should say at once that we do not think that things have come to such a pass when we should practice non-co-operation with the customers of one of our staple crops, on the lines suggested by Mr. Roy. I undoubtedly deprecate the combination of our customers which has forced down the price and I would whole-heartedly welcome any concerted action on our part which would help us to break the combination without causing further economic disturbance in the prevailing conditions. We ought to remember that replacement of our jute cultivation by paddy would not only seriously affect the price of rice and thereby reduce the income of our raiyats, but would throw out of employment a large number of day labourers in the country, whose services are utilised in producing jute. It should be borne in mind that even a quarter of their number would not be required for producing rice.

Before I sit down I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Roy wants to curtail the area under jute cultivation for only one year. Well, Sir, Mr. Roy might have been inspired by best of motives and perhaps he sincerely wants to help the cultivators, but I really fail to understand how by reducing only one year's outturn he expects to help the raiyats. Of course, I doubt not that this would considerably help the middlemen to dispose of the stock in their hands, most probably at a considerable profit. I, Sir, as a grower of jute would strongly object to make any sacrifice for the middlemen. Sir, it is the middlemen, who are our real enemies, and the sooner these sharks disappear, the better for the country.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I rise to a point of order. Is my friend entitled to make any reference to the middlemen?

The PRESIDENT: There are no middlemen here.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I do not defend the middlemen.

Mr. J. CAMPBELL FORRESTER: I rise to a point of order. I object to the use of the word "sharks" in connection with middlemen.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: I oppose the resolution and I appeal to the House to reject it.

Mr. J. CAMPBELL FORRESTER: I find that the member who has just sat down has absolutely been working on what is exactly my own opinion on this subject, and I feel that much of what I could say, he has said for me.

I would call the attention of the Council to the fact, however, that we have been in active existence for about one week and during that time we have had on the agenda 26 resolutions and amendments. Out of that 10 have been withdrawn, 7 carried and 9 lost; that goes to show that the resolutions have not had sufficient consideration before they were brought forward and little to recommend them, and much of the time of the House has been wasted; I would place back this resolution in that category.

If we go back to the facts as regards jute, we find that in 1827 we began to export jute; then we find a very rapid increase in the cultivation of the fibre in Bengal, Northern Bengal and Assam. After all, the cultivation of jute in Bengal is a small affair; it amounts to $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. as against $56\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of rice. As regards the effects of jute cultivation on the price of rice, if you will take the figures you will find that in Bengal, for example, we have—

For rice	22 million acres.
For jute	$2\frac{1}{2}$ million acres.
For other food-grains			$2\frac{1}{2}$ million acres.
For oilseeds	.	.	$2\frac{1}{2}$ million acres.
For tobacco			$\frac{1}{2}$ million acres.
For sugarcane	.	.	$\frac{1}{2}$ million acres.

Supposing we assume, for the sake of argument, that jute has reduced the area under rice cultivation; we want to see how the reduction of the growth of jute will help to raise the area under cultivation of rice. The question is, would the cultivators grow jute, or would they not grow it? Raiyats like to grow jute because it pays them better; they will continue to grow it if left alone; they make more out of it than rice. Jute is an early crop and is harvested at a time when the raiyats are, as a rule, particularly in need of money—when they are hard up: further, jute can be cut in an emergency at an early stage bringing relief immediately to the raiyat. Rice, on the other hand, takes long to grow and the price realised for it barely meets their demands.

I wonder what would happen if this resolution were passed by the House and Government advised the raiyats to grow rice. Supposing the rice crop turned out a failure, could you blame the raiyats if they then abused the Government for giving them that advice and then asked to be compensated for their loss? The raiyats will blame Government for interference with their cultivation. This is a matter which must be treated by the head and not by the heart. I wonder if it is really the consideration of the raiyat only that has caused this resolution to be brought forward. We know for certain that this resolution, if it is passed, will be of considerable value to those who are holding large stocks of jute and gunnies. I would ask the mover of this resolution to take Adam Smith's (a great authority on Economics) advice. He lays special stress on the fact that natural liberty supersedes Governmental interference.

We are not wanting in sympathy for the raiyats. We all know that our wealth comes from the land and all right-thinking people respect those toiling millions, men, women and children, who are toiling on, wrestling with nature to extract an existence from the earth—unsophisticated simple men and women. All right-thinking individuals wish to protect them from being exploited and used by agitators, and I fear if you pass this resolution, that is what will happen.

Now, Sir, reference has been made to the middlemen, and the mover of this resolution has given us a long string of figures showing the profits of the mills. Did he mean to infer that these large profits made by the mills were the reason of the small prices paid for jute? If so, he is entirely wrong, for the war played the most important part in both the profits of the mills and the low price of jute, because exports were interfered with; the question is purely one of economics. He draws a very pathetic figure of the poor raiyats, a class of people that we are all in sympathy with; but what is wanted to improve their lot is education, and I am very pleased that a member has moved the previous resolution on the subject of agricultural education. The raiyats want to be educated as to the kind of crop to grow. Jute is a more profitable crop to them than rice. Jute will cost Rs. 7 a maund; if the jute is good jute, you can get a higher price for it. The raiyats require to be educated to grow a better class of jute; therefore, it is up to us to educate the raiyat to improve the crop.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I feel it a great privilege to speak on this matter, because the question was partially discussed by me in the old Council. I brought to the notice of the Council the fact that it was necessary that some advice be given by Government for the cultivation of paddy in areas which were abandoned by the raiyats. I held that view, and therefore I think it necessary to support this resolution. No doubt there are difficulties in the way. The law of supply and demand is a factor to be reckoned with. The resolution is in a very modest form. It says that the advice of Government is necessary for the purpose of inducing raiyats to abandon the sowings of jute for the purpose of the cultivation of paddy. The resolution only asks Government to be an adviser, and that they should impress upon the raiyats the necessity of the matter. It should be left entirely to the raiyats to consider the matter and if they think fit and proper they may abandon jute sowings and take to paddy. It is a matter of general complaint in agricultural areas that paddy cultivation is on the decrease, and jute cultivation is on the increase. It depends on the efforts of the landlords; if they think fit and proper they can induce the raiyats to take up the cultivation of paddy on a larger scale. Facts and figures are more eloquent than speeches, and I notice that facts and figures have been brought before the House and they show that the cultivation of paddy is decreasing. The problem is to be solved. I therefore, think it to be my duty to support the resolution, notwithstanding the difficulties which have been pointed out by the member representing the landlords.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: Though I recognise the good intentions which have actuated the mover of this resolution and others who have supported it—and no one can be more desirous than I am to see a substantial and permanent decrease in the price of rice—I must oppose the resolution. The area brought under jute cultivation in any year depends primarily on natural and economic causes. First, there is the question of rainfall. If it is unfavourable at the time of ploughing and sowing, want of sufficient moisture may throw large tracts out of jute cultivation. On the other hand exceptionally favourable rainfall may induce the cultivators to extend the area on which they normally grow jute. But the cultivator will mainly look to the profit which he will derive from the cultivation of jute as compared with the profit which he might obtain from the cultivation of rice or any other crop. If, after allowing for the extra labour and cost involved in the steeping and rotting of jute, he thinks it will be a more profitable crop to him than rice, then if his land is equally suitable for either crop, he will be inclined to grow a greater quantity of jute and a smaller quantity of paddy. If, on the other hand, he considers that rice will be the more profitable, he will put the greater area under that crop. Thus in 1906-07 the price of jute was high and, as a result, there was a considerable increase in the area brought under jute in 1907 and 1908. In the latter year there was a heavy fall in the price of jute, which continued for the next two years and was accompanied by a rise in the price of rice. This was reflected in a decrease of roughly a million acres in the area under jute cultivation in 1909 and 1910, as compared with 1908. A rise in the price of jute in 1910 and 1911, coupled with a fall in the price of rice, was followed by an appreciable increase in the area under jute cultivation. The collapse of the jute market after the outbreak of war in 1914 resulted in a decrease of over 800,000 acres in the area under jute cultivation in 1915, compared with the previous year. These figures support my contention that the area which the cultivator puts under jute depends on the profit which he expects to derive from it.

In my opinion, Sir, Government would be exceeding its legitimate functions if it attempted, by putting pressure on the raiyat, to interfere in this matter. It would be no more justified in telling the raiyat what crops to grow than it would be justified in telling a shopkeeper what goods he must stock. It will, I presume, be admitted by every one that the cultivator is entitled to consider his own interests first and to grow the crop from which he expects to derive most profit. I do not agree with the mover in his estimate of the raiyat's abilities. The average cultivator, though his education may be deficient, is a shrewd and intelligent man, fully capable of looking after his own interests, and he stands in no need of advice from Government in a matter of this kind.

Further, I hold that Government by interfering in this matter would not only be exceeding its legitimate functions but would be taking on itself a very dangerous responsibility, because the results of its intervention may be far-reaching and cannot be clearly foreseen.

To take the case of jute, the raiyat prima facie may expect a higher price for his smaller quantity of jute, if he so restricts cultivation that the demand exceeds the supply. But this Government, though they may influence the supply in the manner suggested, have no power to influence the demand. It depends on many factors, such as the existing stocks of raw jute held by the mills, the stock of gunnies and the demand for them in the markets of the world. It may be that the mills, if they are carrying large stocks of raw jute, could meet a shortage of supply by reducing the demand and so keep prices down. If this occurs, the raiyat will not be compensated for having less jute to sell by getting a higher price for it. It is equally impossible to foresee what the consequences of the proposed action would be on the jute mills and jute presses, which, in 1919, gave employment to no less than 284,000 workers. It would also probably affect the jute export-tax, which, in 1919-20, yielded 2 crores and 88 lakhs of rupees to the revenues of the country.

I know, Sir, that many people fear that jute cultivation is extending at the cost of rice cultivation and that the commercial crop is ousting the food crop. But figures show that this is not the case. In 1907, the area under jute cultivation was 3,482,900 acres. Last year it was only 2,205,000 acres or 1,277,000 acres less than in 1907. In the six years, from 1907 to 1912, the area under jute exceeded 3 million acres three times. In the last six years it has never exceeded 2½ million acres.

It is also generally assumed that a decrease in the area under jute cultivation means an increase in the area under rice. But this assumption is not borne out by the facts. Thus in 1918 there was a decrease in the area under jute, as compared with 1917, but there was at the same time a decrease in the area under rice. In 1919, there was an increase in the area under each crop, as compared with 1918, and last year there was a substantial decrease in the area under each crop. It therefore by no means follows that a decrease in the area under jute connotes an increase in the area under rice.

In 1912, Sir, the Indian Jute Mills Association urged the creation of a special department of Government for the purpose of supervising the extension of jute cultivation in Bengal. In 1914 the Dundee Chamber of Commerce asked that Government should use its endeavours to encourage the extension of jute cultivation. On both occasions the Government of Bengal refused to take direct action for the extension of the area under jute, on the ground, firstly, that the area under any particular crop must depend on the profit which the cultivator expects to derive from that crop, as compared with the profit which he might derive from any other crop, and secondly, that Government would be exceeding its legitimate functions if it brought any pressure to bear on cultivators in this matter. I adhere to that attitude now, and I ask the Council to reject this resolution.

Babu JOCENDRA NATH ROY: I beg to oppose the resolution before the House. The resolution itself makes a recommendation, but adduces no argument in support of it. It is difficult to understand why the freedom of the cultivator to cultivate the crop he likes and finds profitable, should be interfered with and the machinery of the Government should be set in motion to "impress upon him the necessity of restricting the sowings of jute." Where does that necessity, one is tempted to ask, exist save in the imagination of economic oracles, who speak without facts and figures? Jute growing is confined almost entirely to the Ganges-Brahmaputra delta in the Presidency of Bengal and the province of Assam and the economic importance of the fibre may be judged from the fact that in 1913-14 the total value of raw jute and jute manufactures exceeded 60 crores of rupees. Yet we read in the "Statement exhibiting the Moral and Material Progress of India in 1919," the production is far short of the demand. Under the circumstances, it would be disastrous to ask the cultivators to abandon jute for any other crop.

I am aware, Sir, that an agitation is going on to decrease the area under jute which has increased by 400 per cent. during the last 40 years, because, consequent on the war, the value of jute has come down a little. But that was unavoidable. The following list of jute-spinning and weaving mills in countries outside India is approximately correct:—

United Kingdom	30
Germany	36
Austria-Hungary	17
France	32
Italy	25
Belgium	23
America	16
Russia	7
Sweden	5
Denmark	2
Switzerland	2
Holland	2
Brazil	2
Norway	1
Rio	1
Total				202

Thus, it will be seen that out of a total of 202 mills, 60 are situated in Germany, Austria and Russia. Before the war, Germany, where the fibre is used in the manufacture of blankets, cheap carpets, etc., was, next to the United Kingdom, India's best customer for raw jute. Her normal requirements were in the neighbourhood of 800,000 bales annually, and 250,000 bales went to Austria-Hungary. So when the war broke out, two of our most important customers could not take jute and, owing to war conditions in 1914-15, exports to all destinations, except to Italy and Spain, showed a considerable decline. The market was glutted and prices came down. Nor was this all. India suffered a sacrifice to meet the requirements of the Allied armies. The contract prices entered into between the Calcutta mills and the London War Office in 1915 for the supply of bags for the Allied armies remained unchanged for three years although the commercial prices had greatly increased. Such are some of the reasons why during the last six or seven years jute has not fetched a very high price. But is that any reason why now, when normal conditions are returning and Germany is again in the market for jute, we should ask the cultivator to neglect the crop which pays him more for a crop which pays him less? It will be false patriotism, and worse economy to do so. I come from East Bengal where I have lived within sight of jute when it was growing, and within scent of it when it was rotting, the scent being not exactly that of the honeysuckle. I know how jute is a source of great profit to the cultivators and supports in addition something like a quarter of a million factory operatives and their dependents. At present there are about fifty mills on the river Hooghly with about 40,000 looms worked by Indian labourers. Those of us who have taken the trouble of studying the condition of the country, know how jute has enriched the people. It has enriched the cultivator, whom it has freed from indebtedness to the mahajan. It has enriched the labourer, for the rates in the neighbourhood of Dacca and Seragang have recently been as high as a rupee a day. It has benefited a vast variety of middlemen and traders. In other words, it has been of immense value to the province and the people.

If now, the area under jute is contracted, and prices artificially raised, what will be the result? Let me quote what the Chairman of the Indian Jute Mills Association said in 1915:—"Whatever else the Germans may be, they are resourceful and persistent; they already show signs of chafing under the excessively high prices that have, in recent years, ruled for a commodity whose principal claim to popularity is its cheapness. Raise the price still further, and you may be sure that the first effect will be to stimulate the search for a substitute, and one of these days some German will find one, and your industry will be in danger of following the path of indigo."

There is a limit beyond which prices cannot be raised. And it would be the height of folly to attempt to raise the price of jute enormously. That would mean our losing our customers. The Agricultural Year Book of 1919 shows how, if the endeavours of the Department of Agriculture in introducing better jute are successful, it will result in an increased output of about 12 lakhs of bales, worth at Rs. 40 per bale, nearly 5 crores of rupees. Instead of attempting to restrict the cultivation of jute in Bengal, I would suggest encouraging the cultivators to use better seeds and thereby get a better return.

With these words, Sir, I beg to oppose the resolution.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I intend to make a few observations. In spite of the moving references made by the mover of this resolution, I think that we ought not to accept this resolution. Government interference in these matters is undesirable; and we ought to give credit to the peasant for knowing his own interests. It cannot be denied for one moment that these people are intelligent and they know what to do for themselves, and they do not need Government to tell them that they had better sow paddy instead of jute. Having regard to the resolution passed by this Council last week in this matter, if they grow paddy which is not to be exported from the country, it seems to me to be a somewhat ridiculous suggestion.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: While I quite appreciate the feeling of sympathy for the poor agriculturists, which must have induced the mover of this resolution to bring forward this motion before the House, I think that, if analysed, it means that these poor agriculturists should be encouraged to extend their paddy cultivation and to restrict their jute cultivation. No doubt, we are apt to put down these agriculturists as rather illiterate people not having much intelligence in their brains, but so far as these agriculturists are concerned, minus the application of scientific improvements, I believe we have yet to learn many things from them. Well, they know better what crop will give them a better yield, and for us to dictate from this House that they might do this or that will only show that we have got some sort of sinister motive. Then, that ought to be a good reason why we should not lightly pass this resolution here. We ought not to give them a chance of crying out "Save us from our friends in the Council." From my own personal experience—I have been studying this question for some years, having often had occasion to travel through the jute-growing districts of Mymensingh and Tippera—my idea is that under certain circumstances jute-growing is more paying than paddy-growing; and, in these circumstances, there is no reason why we should interfere with this natural selection on the part of the cultivators. That being so, I oppose this resolution and hope that the House will not lightly pass it.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: The other day we passed a resolution to stop the export of rice in order to cheapen it for the cultivators. We wanted then that the cultivators should have sufficient paddy for their maintenance throughout the year, and to-day we are going to restrict their jute cultivation, which is their mainstay for paying their rents, and meeting other needs. If we are going to restrict it, we would throw them in confusion. Already by the stoppage of export of rice from India and other circumstances, its price has come down; and now if we are going to restrict jute cultivation, it will deprive the cultivators of the power to defray their expenses for necessaries besides food. Therefore, my suggestion is that before we ask or recommend to Government to interfere with the cultivators in their cultivation of jute, we should think twice before we pass it in this House. I think that it is not the business of ours here to dictate anything to the cultivators. They will adapt themselves to the circumstances, and the law of supply and demand will give them the idea which course they ought to resort to; and therefore my suggestion is that the restriction on jute cultivation would bring a disastrous result on the cultivators as at present circumstanced. Of course, there is no doubt that there is a dullness in the jute market. Perhaps, the exporters of jute may have combined to bring down the price of jute; but it is the business of this House, it is the business of the millionaires, to come together and to devise means how to combat this combination amongst the jute exporters. It is the business of our Hon'ble Ministers, who have given in charity Rs. 16,000 each annually, to make it a nucleus of finding the capital which would bring relief to the cultivators at a time when there is a dullness in the jute market. If that be the nucleus which will pay the interest of a large capital, it may be worked on a co-operative basis and will give relief to the cultivators when they are in need and they will not be compelled to sell their jute at a time when its price is very low; this relief will enable them to sell the jute at the best of seasons at a better price. That is the way in which we ought to move in this matter. Of course, it is well known that necessity is the mother of invention, and I hope that the intelligent minds which have come together here will find some means of combating this problem of the combination of the jute exporters and others who have brought down the price of jute. I, therefore, oppose this resolution.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: I beg to move that the question be now put.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: I beg to second the motion.

The motion that the question be now put was put and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT then put the question.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I ask for leave to withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT: You cannot withdraw it now. You should have done that before I put the question.

The motion was then lost.

Water-Hyacinth.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: "This Council recommends to Government that they be pleased to appoint, forthwith, a commission composed of official and non-official members under some scientific experts, such as Sir J. C. Bose or Sir P. C. Roy, to devise ways and means for removing the scourge of the water-hyacinth and to combat it successfully, before any legislative action is taken, as recommended by the District Boards' Conference."

I presume, the magnitude of the evil, to which pointed attention is drawn by this resolution, is known to the Government, and certain sporadic efforts have been made in the past, to deal with the problem. But I believe the terrible nature of the "pest" is not, and cannot be, appreciated by those who have had no opportunity of seeing with their own eyes, the rapidity with which the scourge is spreading and developing itself into a serious menace to the health, life, and I may add, the very civilisation itself, in those tracts, where it has got a lodgment. The inroads of savage armies, through the frontiers, the incursions of a Timurlane, carrying fire and sword into the country, were nothing compared to the inroads of those tiny plants, floating down the East Bengal rivers, with beautiful blue flowers, very attractive and seductive in their appearance. Sir, during a tour throughout a great part of my own district of Bakarganj, in October and November last, I noticed how the waterways, creeks, canals and small rivulets had been clogged and choked up, making navigation even by small dingis, crafts and country-boats, impossible. The growth of the plant is phenomenal. Within the municipality of Barisal of which I have the honour of being the chairman, the tanks having outlets and connection with the rivers and tidal-khals, have been overspread with the plant within a few days; and even costly and careful clearance, twice within a year, was not able to arrest its growth. Up till now, it has been found impossible to eradicate it. Though big tidal-rivers, such as the Brahmaputra, the Ganges, and their big tributaries, have not been choked up yet, I think the time is not far off when navigation through them will be seriously affected, unless immediate steps be taken to exterminate the scourge. Sir, it is known to many belonging to this House, that through a great part of East Bengal, nay the entire deltaic area, transport and communication are carried on, only through these waterways, which our Hon'ble Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government said the other day had great potentialities. Their stoppage means stagnation of the social, moral and economic life of the country, and death to civilisation. There are no railways, no lorries, no carts and no other means of conveyance, save and except the country-boats. To agriculturists, the menace is no less serious. I have been told, and have also seen with my own eyes, that during flood-tides these plants get into fields and within a few days, by fast multiplication, cover them entirely to the destruction of rice and other crops rooted in the earth. Even when the agriculturists, with infinite labour, dislodge them and throw them into the nearest tidal-khals, they come back with the flood-tide, quite smiling and radiant and recapture their lost ground. It is quite a struggle of Sisyphus to contend against them. It has been said that these plant-pests are prolific breeding-grounds for mosquitoes, and that malaria has overtaken many places where it was unknown before. I remember to have read in some papers, that when the plant begins to flower, it throws out effluvia which are detrimental to health, bringing on influenza and other diseases. In all conscience, the evil is of the first magnitude. If East Bengal, the granary of the province and hitherto the healthiest portion of it, is being rendered desolate by the bringing in of malaria by this plant, I don't know where we shall stand. I omitted to mention one fact, that even fish die out in tanks and jhils overgrown with this noxious herb.

The next question is, how to combat the evil? No doubt our Government has not been entirely unmindful of the problem. It was once suggested, that when collected, it can be used as "fodder." But I have seen cattle browsing on some portions of the plant very reluctantly and casually—perhaps for want of better food. Next comes the idea of its commercial exploitation. Experiments by the Department of Agriculture were undertaken to ascertain its value as a manure or fertilizer. The results hitherto obtained have been very unsatisfactory. According to some it contains 95 per cent. of moisture and, according to others, 75 per cent. However, the quantity of potash obtainable from its ash after burning is so small, that it is nobody's worth while to look to its commercial value. The Agricultural Adviser to the Government of India says: "It is to be hoped that the possibility of utilisation of this pernicious weed will not lead to a laissez-faire policy with regard to its spread. Its extermination and not its commercial exploitation is to be aimed at. The efforts to exploit it commercially, by Messrs. Shaw, Wallace & Co. of this city, offering Rs. 4 per unit of potash, landed in Calcutta, have proved abortive.

In reply to a few unstarred questions, put by my friend and colleague, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, of Tippera, the Hon'ble Minister in charge of the Departments of Agriculture and Public Works, admitted that steps hitherto taken have not been sufficient to check the spread of the plant, and that the question of what further action should be taken to combat the spread of the plant is now under the consideration of Government. I understand that there was a conference of the District Board authorities, and that the only conclusion they could arrive at with regard to this problem was to ask the Government to legislate. Sir, we all know that the provincial legislature of Burma passed a Water-hyacinth Act, namely, the Burma Act No. 1 of 1917. What has been its effect? Has it succeeded in rooting out the evil, even partially? I don't think it has. By the Act presence of water-hyacinth was declared to be a "public nuisance." Provision was made for issuing notices upon owners and occupiers of places, growing hyacinth, to root them out and, on their failure to do so, it was to be done by public bodies, costs being recoverable as "arrears of revenue" from owners and occupiers. Failure to destroy was also penalised. Then what about the methods of destruction? They were to be prescribed by rules. There lies the rub. Hasty legislation is no remedy. Without pointing out a feasible method for destruction, is it fair to legislate? I think not. It is now said that the "pest" is being carried to Bengal along the rivers of Assam. If this is found to be a fact, it is necessary that steps should be taken to arrest its progress, at the source, at any rate before it reaches the plains of Bengal. In South America, its native home, Florida, Australia and other countries, where these plants abound, the people grapple with the problem, by arranging to throw them into the salt water of the seas, as saline water is understood to be uncongenial to their growth and also to destroy them. So it appears to me, that the problem has also its scientific aspect, and has to be studied both botanically and chemically. Anyhow, an organised endeavour should be made without further loss of time to devise means and ways for the extermination of the pest in consultation and collaboration with scientific experts. No money and no pains should be spared to check their depredations, which are likely to desolate one of the most fertile parts of the country. A long, laborious and costly struggle, which is really a struggle for very existence itself, has to be continued for years. It will be a tremendous fight with Nature herself. I am not at all particular about the personnel of the proposed commission. The names of two eminent scientists have been mentioned by way of suggestion merely. I hope the Government will accept the resolution, without dividing the House, on a matter of such urgent public importance.

Maharaja KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY Bahadur: I have very great pleasure in supporting the resolution moved by Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta. At the last District Board Conference we had some discussion about the desirability of taking means to eradicate water-hyacinth. Lately I have made a tour in the interior of my district and I saw with my own eyes what a terrible nuisance this water-hyacinth has become in the river Bhairab passing through the Meherpur subdivision in the district of Nadia. I am afraid, unless something is done to eradicate and check the growth of the water-hyacinth, many of the waterways in Bengal will be similarly affected. It was brought to our notice at the last District Board Conference that the water-hyacinth came to Bengal from Assam. The growth here is surprising, however. One weed covers a large area in the water. One plant covers 300 feet of water in the course of a year. It is therefore highly desirable to consult experts as to how to check and eradicate its growth. I, therefore, support this resolution.

Mr. C. MORGAN: I have much pleasure in supporting this resolution and, in doing so, I am very glad indeed to hear from the mover and from the last speaker that the weed has been brought down to Bengal by the rivers of Assam. Since 1910, I have been accused of having brought it to Eastern Bengal. I understand it is called there "Morgau's Folly." As a matter of fact I did bring some plants, curiously enough from Calcutta, and I know myself from what I have seen with my own eyes that it is one of the greatest pests I have ever seen. The flower is beautiful, and that is all that is beautiful about it. It spreads over paddy-fields and dhan khets and simply ruins everything that comes in its way. Now it has grown so bad that it is a question whether steamers will be able to ply over small khals or rivers. I have not the faintest idea as to how it would be possible to eradicate the pest, but I support the resolution and I am sure that something will be done to do away with this pest.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: The Government of Bengal have for some years past been fully alive to the serious menace of the water-hyacinth. Efforts have been made both by Government and by local bodies to devise means of combating the spread of the plant, but so far without appreciable effect. I believe that a committee of the kind suggested might collect much useful information and be able to put forward practical proposals for eradicating this pest, and I therefore accept the resolution.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: After the Minister in charge has accepted this resolution, it is not necessary for me to say much. All I can say is that most of the members of this Council are aware that in August, September and October last there was a committee sitting in Calcutta to enquire into the causes of high prices of food-stuffs, and that it transpired in evidence that this water-hyacinth was encroaching upon paddy-fields and cultivable lands, and I will only quote one passage from that report: "We have been informed that in Eastern Bengal water-hyacinth has spread to an alarming extent and has covered many places fit for rice cultivation."

If that be so it is high time that Government should take action with regard to this resolution.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: I understand that the Hon'ble Minister in charge has accepted my resolution. In that case, it is hardly necessary for me to say anything in reply.

The motion was put and agreed to.

Infant Mortality.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that a mixed consultative committee of official and non-official medical men and other experts be permanently constituted for adopting measures for the prevention of the increasing rate of child mortality in Bengal."

In moving this resolution I beg to submit that it is very necessary that Government should interfere in this matter. I learn that in Bombay there is a Public Health Association which is active and alert. The Ministry of Madras has appointed a Committee—a consultative permanent committee—with a wide scope of work. If I bring to the notice of the House certain facts and figures, the members will be surprised to see how the rate of mortality—infant mortality—is going up in this province. I have consulted the report of the Sanitary Commissioner of Bengal, and it appears to me that every day infantile death-rate is growing higher. I would bring to the notice of the House the figures showing the rate of mortality, and in this connection I cannot help discussing the question of public health; because the two issues are so mixed up together that it is very difficult to eliminate the rate of infant mortality from the rate of adult mortality. I would invite your attention to certain figures. Of course the members of the House are aware that in dealing with these figures, which are indicative of the high rate of mortality, I have to depend upon the figures supplied to us in the report of the Sanitary Commissioner. In his report for the year 1918 the Sanitary Commissioner says that as many as 142 or more than a third of the total number of rural areas in this Presidency returned a death-rate of over 44 per mille during the year against only 9 and 7 during the two preceding years. In the Ramjibanpur area in the Midnapore district, the death-rate was 69.1 per mille, and in the Khurpai area in the same district the death-rate was 56.9 per mille. In the former area deaths due to fever were 62.4 per mille and in the latter area the rate per mille was 55.8. Murshidabad headed the list last year, and in the year under review it was 104.2 against 61.4, the mortality under head "Fever" alone amounting to 78.6. In the Gangi and Karimpur areas in the Nadia district the death-rates were 88.3 and 81.7, respectively. The death-rate in the Falakata area in the Jalpaiguri district was 70.3 to 78.5, Gokoran in the Murshidabad district, Siliguri in the Darjeeling district, Tehatta in the Nadia district and Sujaganj, Hariharpara, Mirzapur and Bharatpur areas in the Murshidabad district returned the same death-rate—70.3 to 78.5. In 22 other areas the death-rate was 60 to 70 per mille; in 49 areas 50 to 60 per mille; in 60 areas 44 to 50 per mille. So on and so forth runs the rate of mortality. It is sad to relate in this connection that in Bengal, out of one lakh of males about 71,000 die before 30, about 85,000 die before 40, and about 93,000 die before 50. Surely there is no other country so physically poor. In support of my specific point of infant mortality I beg to draw the attention of the Council to certain statements of the present Sanitary Commissioner of Bengal. In his article on Child Welfare, a work published in July 1917, he has given a table showing the proportion of the total number of infants under one year that died in Bengal in the year 1910, for every 1,000 births. In the Maniktala area infant mortality rose to 505.1 per 1,000 births.

The following table of infant mortality is also taken from Dr. Bentley's article:—

			Infant mortality.	Death-rate per 1,000 births.
1912	339,779	212.3
1913	320,662	209.5
1914	340,012	221.4
1915	315,700	218.9
1916	282,407	195.3
1917	300,514	...

In 1916, the death-rate in the district of Rangpur was 255.7 and in Calcutta 249.1. In 1915, the death-rate in the Murshidabad district was 290.5 and in Calcutta 287.6; in the Burdwan district 276.1. In the year 1914, the death-rate at Pabna was 282.8.

The number of deaths in Bengal during the last year was 396,000 over births. A death-roll like this is a matter of grave apprehension. But once more to our Sanitary Commissioner's figures on infant mortality in Bengal and I have done with his figures on the present occasion. In his annual official report he says that altogether 339,649 infants died during 1918, as compared with 300,514 and 282,407 during the past two years—the rates amounted to 22.8, 18.5 and 19.5 per cent. of the births. These figures tell their own tale, and I need not dilute upon them. The figures I have already given indicate that it is not decay, but total depopulation of the country that is staring us in the face. It is the very natural instinct of self-preservation to be sure about the future, but in this matter I contemplate the future with horror. It is no exaggeration to say that the swelling tide of infant mortality is driving the people to desperation. I am fully aware that a committee has been appointed by Government consisting of some medical men, other gentlemen and ladies to inquire about it. But as yet their report has not been brought to the notice of the public. Mere writing of reports will not be sufficient. It is necessary that there should be some publicity, some enthusiasm put into the work. I am aware that in the exhibitions at Nator, Faridpur, Calcutta and Howrah, there was a child welfare section. I am also aware of the fact that His Excellency takes keen interest in the matter, but so far as we know, he has not been able to take any steps to check the high mortality which I have described. In this view of the matter I brought to the notice of the House that it is necessary to appoint a committee consisting of experts, ladies and other gentlemen for putting a stop to this high rate of mortality. While I was making my inquiries, I was told that a certain school had been established at Midnapore, where some ladies took steps to train nurses and dais. These dais were recruited locally. This is a practical step. So far so good. But, Sir, it is necessary that other practical steps ought to be taken in this connection. If schools of the kind are established, then it would be a certain gain. But nothing satisfactory has yet been done. It appears that union boards have got authority to look after the sanitation of their localities. The district boards have got authority too. But what have they done in this connection? The union boards will say that it would mean fresh taxation and so "we cannot proceed in the matter." Already you are taxing us and you ought to save us from further taxation. There is a network of union boards in several districts—but nothing has been done as yet. Therefore, I thought it necessary to move this resolution for the purpose of getting a permanent consultative body appointed—as in Madras—so that the whole thing may be placed in their hands. This committee would be in a position to advise district boards and union boards and other public bodies as to how to proceed in this matter. If this rate of mortality is not checked, we may expect depopulation of the whole province—nothing less than that. I hope the Minister in charge of Sanitation will come forward to support me in this matter. The Minister of Education once said, when addressing a co-operative society meeting, that the population of the rural areas of Bengal was 42 lakhs, the total population being 45 lakhs. What has been done by Government or by the people to check mortality among these 42 lakhs? The mortality rate is appalling, and in the areas where there are 42 millions of people nothing has been done. The Sanitary Commissioner deputed a Deputy Sanitary Commissioner to inquire into this matter and I have got figures showing that 98 per cent. of the infants suffer from enlarged spleen. If that fact is correct, I have every hope that my resolution will be accepted by the Council and that there will not be one dissentient voice. My resolution is a very modest one. I ask for a committee, and I request the Minister in charge of Sanitation to help me in this matter. He takes a great interest in this matter and we worked together in this connection in the same field. Both of us at one time thought that the matter was of great importance and I hope and trust that he will show his sympathy for the people and the infants of Bengal. With these words I move my resolution.

Dr. HASSAN SUHRAWARDY: I rise to support this resolution which has been moved by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur. He has quoted statistics of various districts supplied by Health Officers of Municipalities and the general trend of the struggle for existence as revealed by them, is that the death-rate is at present overtaking the birth-rate. We have to grapple with this question. Child welfare is supported on the one hand by decreasing the number of premature births and miscarriages and on the other by adopting means for improving the health and welfare of the new-born infants. It is a very, very satisfactory thing to notice that people outside the medical profession are taking keen interest in this very important matter. The Rai Bahadur has asked Government to form a committee for adopting measures for the prevention of the increasing rate of child mortality in Bengal. As far as I know there is a child welfare committee already in existence and that committee has done very good work. But I want, Sir, to tell the House that it is all very well to ask Government to do this, that, and other things. The Government has put before us the fact of the high rate of infant mortality in our country and also the great importance of child welfare to the future development of the country. We should not depend on Government entirely. Instead of asking Government to do this, that, and other things, we should ourselves try and do the propaganda work amongst our own people and should not depend on the executive or the Government for our education and material and moral welfare. In my booklet on Child Welfare I have already expressed my views on the subject and I may be permitted to place an extract from it before the House:—

The silver lining in this dark cloud is the fact that not less than five-sixths of this appalling death-rate can be controlled and prevented. Let us, then, start a propaganda for the protection of our children, and the regeneration of our country. It is the sacred duty of every thoughtful Indian. It is the best Swadeshi and Nationalist movement. Government has unearthed for us this secret tale of death and misery, let us not withhold our co-operation in this laudable cause. No country and no nation has gained eminence by being solely dependent on the Executive or the Government for its education and material and moral welfare. Our emancipation will not come from outside patronage but from self-help, from within. The prosperous and the rich amongst us spend thousands and lakhs on philanthropic matters, on unorganised charity and on humanitarian movements such as the protection of cows and dumb animals. These kind-hearted people will certainly contribute generously to alleviate the miseries of slum life, and control the causes of death amongst their brother men, in their own country. Looked at even from the economic stand point, let every capitalist realise that a healthy labourer gives a better value for his money than a weakly, wizened, ill-nourished and ill-developed specimen of humanity, troubled with the burden of an unhealthy family, and feeble with the strain of wage-earning and fatherhood or maternity from immature years.

We all know what trouble the gardener takes to make a little seedling grow under the most advantageous surroundings—away from too much heat or light or draught, so that it may develop into a strong and hardy plant, which can bear the inclemency of the weather. Such is the case with the child. Brought up under hygienic and favourable surroundings the child develops into a robust boy and the boy into a robust man. Heredity is a great factor in determining species, but environment very largely shapes the quality of the genus. In the vegetable kingdom we witness how under the influence of altered surroundings the sweet and seedless pomegranates and grapes of Kabul grown in this country alter into sour fruits, full of seeds, hardly fit for eating. Such is the case with children. If children, when they are born, are looked after with care, they will thrive, but they will not do so if they are not properly looked after.

About a year ago, at the request of the Sanitary Commissioner addressed a meeting at the last Child Welfare Exhibition, and pointed out that from the statistics that the majority of the rate amongst infants was not due to disease, but to debility, was food and proper environment of a child. These are the elements with which we are to grapple and I am sure the Hon. Minister in charge will do his best to take such steps as are necessary in this direction. I need not take up the time of the House any; but what I would point out is that we should not be entirely dependent on Government and on committees, but we should do our duty by propagating good ideas amongst our countrymen, wherever they are.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: The spirit underlying the resolution has our heartiest sympathy. One thing, Sir, has struck me, and I cannot understand what can be the meaning of this, to draw the attention of the mover particularly to that matter. My friend has drafted a resolution, in the first line of which he speaks of a consultative committee. I do not know what my friend means by naming his committee a consultative committee. Only two lines down from that he says that this committee should be asked to recommend measures for the prevention of the increasing rate of child mortality in Bengal. Sir, the little knowledge which I have of committees has made me very sceptical about the successful working of these committees. I cannot understand, if a committee is made a consultative committee, how that can do any useful work, unless authorized to adopt certain measures and given funds and other facilities for carrying out its recommendations successfully. Sir, only about a year ago—as my friend Dr. Suhrawardy has already hinted—there was a committee formed, exactly on the lines which my friend wants now, of which I had the honour of being a member. That committee after a good deal of deliberation made certain recommendations. Now those recommendations have been sent to Government. I, as a member, have as yet not learnt what has been the fate of those recommendations, although many months have already passed away. Then, again, that committee had to encounter the difficulty that they had no means at their disposal. Whatever recommendations they made were like those of a consultative committee. Now what I ask, Sir, my friend to consider is—Is it worth while having such committees, unless the Government want them to do some useful work and provide funds and other facilities for that purpose? I am glad that the Minister in charge of this particular portion of Government is disposed to accept this resolution. I shall be extremely pleased if the Minister will kindly enlighten us as to how this committee can adopt measures, unless facilities are placed in their hands. If only recommendations have to be made, then if any book on this subject was referred to, the book would be quite enough. Any committee will be able to tell you what measures are absolutely essential for purpose of encouraging child welfare, but the difficulty arises when they have to be carried out, and when these things are to be actually introduced into our society. What funds are the Government about to place before that committee, so that their recommendations may be given effect to, so that in the society, from which we come, where the work of child welfare has recently been begun, they are likely to be effective? Sir, in the Calcutta Corporation only for the last six or seven years this work of child welfare has been taken up and a very large sum of money has already been spent over it and for some useful purpose. I understand that the mover of this resolution wants this work to be extended to all Bengal. If any useful work has to be done, a very large sum of money has to be budgeted for the purpose. Will the Minister kindly enlighten us, if he accepts the resolution, whether that money will be forthcoming? Otherwise to form a committee and ask it to make recommendations without giving it facilities for carrying them out, seems to me to be quite an unreasonable and ungenerous proposition. Then I find from what little knowledge I have about the conditions of things in Calcutta that there is enough field for child welfare work in the interior of our country from which most of us come. In Bengal a large number of lives are every day being lost for want of proper attention. We are ashamed to find that there is no organisation—practically none, in spite of all that we might boast of—to look after the children for some time after birth and to attend to the mothers of these children at the time of confinement. Even in Calcutta the arrangement is extremely defective. That being so, who is there so bold as to deny the necessity for work in the mufassal on these lines?

The important point is—what are our resources and what are the facilities which the Government are prepared to place at our disposal, so that this work may be effectively carried out? I am glad that this proposal has been brought before the Council by one who is not a medical man. It shows how outside the medical world there is a strong feeling in this respect, and my friend the Rai Bahadur has done very well by bringing forward at the very first sitting of the Reformed Council this matter for the consideration of the House. I fervently hope, now that the Ministry is presided over by the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea, than whom nobody feels more for us, this work of the committee will be useful and that facilities will be placed in its way.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea): I must congratulate my friend Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur on bringing forward this matter for the consideration of this House at so early a stage. I will say at once that Government have the deepest sympathy with the scope and object of this resolution. Not only that, but Government are prepared to accept the resolution, subject to a reservation to which the previous speaker has already referred. My friend the mover started with the suggestion that it should be a consultative committee, but unfortunately for him he has used the word "adopt"—a consultative committee is to be constituted for the purpose of "adopting" measures, etc. Now it is not the business of a consultative committee to adopt measures; they are to recommend measures which Government may or may not accept. I think my friend laid himself open to an attack by my friend over there—Rai Haridhan Dutt Bahadur. What the mover really means is that the committee should recommend and not adopt, and I hope he will accept the amendment which I have suggested. It is to be a sort of advisory and consultative committee which is to make recommendations for the Minister and Government to consider and then, after the committee have made their recommendations, executive action will rest with the Government. I think that is the position which my friend has taken and that is the position which the Government are prepared to accept, and I hope that this will be endorsed by the whole House. Therefore, in accepting this resolution, let it be clearly understood on behalf of Government that it is an advisory body—a body which will recommend measures for the consideration of Government, and the Government, as the supreme executive authority, will give effect to these recommendations as they think fit. I have just been told that Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur accepts the amendment which I have suggested.

The Rai Bahadur says that the rate of infant mortality in the province is increasing. I might also add that it is appalling. My friend has quoted figures from various districts. I will give the annual figures of death-rate in thousands for children for the years 1910 to 1919. I have got these figures collected by the Sanitary Commissioner. They were 199 per thousand in 1910, 195 in 1911, 212 in 1912, 209 in 1913—here the figures show an upward tendency—221 in 1914—the situation is getting worse and worse—218 in 1915—now there is a drop—in 1916, 195; in 1917, 184—the figure again jumps up—in 1918, 228 and in 1919, 228·2. It is quite apparent that the figures are appalling, and it ought to be a matter of the gravest concern for all of us. I think a committee should be appointed for this simple reason that this high rate of mortality is largely associated with the peculiar habits and modes of life of certain sections of the people of this presidency.

I entirely associate myself with the propaganda work to which my friend Dr. Suhrawardy has referred. There ought to be propaganda work: Government are willing to undertake propaganda work and they have allotted funds for the purpose. But what are the people doing and where is the association of the people in this propaganda work? I hope they will come forward and associate themselves with Government in this work of beneficence. My friend, the mover, has observed that the district boards and the local boards should take up this work. Certainly they might be associated with Government. But here, again, the district boards and local boards suffer from pecuniary difficulties, and if there is any proposal for the imposition of any cess or any tax even for the most necessary purposes, there comes the outcry that the new Government are going to tax the people, which they should not. I deplore this attitude. If you want benefits—substantial benefits—in respect of health, in respect of education, in respect of sanitation, you must pay for them. The law of the universe is that nothing can be had in this world without paying for it. We all know how the English people make great sacrifices for local purposes and for local needs. I was on the committee appointed by the Secretary of State for India to investigate the conditions of local institutions in the United Kingdom, with a view to their applicability to Indian conditions. I must express my admiration for the English spirit of civic devotion which dominates these local bodies in providing sanitary and local needs. I ask my countrymen to imitate the English people, and if you cannot do it, at any rate to try to understand the methods that are followed in England and the United Kingdom.

Reference has been made by my friend, Rai Haridhan Dutt Bahadur, to a particular committee, of which he was a member. I am sorry to have to say that that was a somnolent committee, which did very little work. The committee consisted of 16 members. It has been said that the ideal committee consists of three members, one of whom is always sick, the second is always absent and the third does the work. This was apparently not an ideal committee. My friend was a member. When my friend has referred to that matter, I feel it my duty to call attention to the fact that in 12 months' time they had only three meetings. Since December 1919, they have not met at all. Three months ago they were asked to submit a report, but no report was forthcoming from this somnolent committee. In the meantime we had an ad interim report, and Government, which has been attacked for doing nothing, has given effect to some of their recommendations. We held an exhibition in Calcutta and spent Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 6,000 over that, and we have employed assistant surgeons for the purpose of training dais. Thus we are doing something for child welfare, and we have budgeted some money for this purpose. All that shows the solicitude of Government in this matter.

My friend the mover has referred to an ancient conversation that I had with him about health problems. Well, Sir, I find it a very unfortunate thing to have led a long public life, for the simple reason that you are confronted with statements which you might have made 40 or 50 years back, which you might have forgotten, and with regard to which you might in the altered circumstances have revised your views. Without any reference to that conversation, I desire to put this question to this House—Am I not entitled to change my views in the light of new facts, in the light of new developments? Consistency may be a great virtue, but progress is something better. Mr. Gladstone began his life as the rising hope of the unbending Tories. Remember he supported Negro slavery and yet he ended life as the illustrious leader of the advanced Radical party. I do not in the smallest degree desire to withdraw in any way from the conversation to which my friend has referred. I want to say this. I am ready to do my best to promote the public health subject to one essential condition, viz, that you will place me in possession of necessary funds for the purpose. You hold the purse-strings of the nation and if you can place sufficient funds at my disposal I am hopeful of driving malaria out of the land.

I accept this resolution, subject to the amendment to which I have referred, and I hope that this will be unanimously agreed to by the House.

The PRESIDENT: Permission may be given to the mover of the resolution to amend his motion in the manner suggested by the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee.

Rai MAHENDRA NATH MITRA Bahadur: Sir, I thank the Hon'ble Minister for suggesting -

The PRESIDENT: I do not know if you are replying. I only gave you permission to accept the resolution in its amended form and the discussion will now be on the motion as now amended.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I beg to move that the question be now put. Further discussion is unnecessary.

The amended motion was then put and carried.

Board of Revenue.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: "This Council recommends to the Government that the Board of Revenue be abolished and that no provision be made for it in the next year's Budget."

This resolution is moved mainly on the grounds of economy and efficiency, but before I say anything on the subject, I think I ought to make an explanation as to why the resolution has been brought forward now. At the last meeting of the Council, it was suggested that after the presentation of the Budget a committee or a number of small committees might be appointed to consider what economy could be effected in the cost of administration. In view of this suggestion, the resolution regarding the abolition of the posts of the Divisional Commissioners was withdrawn. It may be thought that I might also just as well withdraw this resolution for the same reason. But I submit, Sir, that my case is quite different, because I take my stand on the unanimous recommendation of a committee—no less than the Royal Commission upon Decentralisation—a committee whose voice is always bound to carry greater weight than any committee that may be appointed by this House. I venture to make this assertion, because the members of that commission were all well-known and experienced administrators, whose opinion always carried great weight with the Government as well as with the people. As an example, I shall only mention the names of a few members of that Commission. The President of that Commission was Lord Hobhouse, who held the most responsible post of an Under-Secretary of State for India; then there was Mr. (now Sir) William Meyer, who afterwards became the Finance Member of the Government of India, and who now holds the most responsible position of the High Commissioner for India in England. Then we had our most illustrious countryman administrator and statesman, the late lamented R. C. Dutt, than whom I do not know of any abler and better lover of this country. These were some of the members of that Commission. Then, Sir, who do you think was the Secretary to that Commission? He was no other than our present senior Member of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler. This was the Commission that took a mass of most valuable evidence regarding the work of the various departments of Government and recommended the abolition of the Board of Revenue in 1909. Can this Council appoint a better committee than this?

Before reading out the recommendations of this Commission, I hope this Council will permit me to trace, in a few words, the history and functions of the Board of Revenue. About the end of the 18th century, Boards of Revenue were established in Madras and Bengal mainly for the purpose of revenue administration. Among the three major provinces, Bengal, Madras and Bombay, Madras has no Divisional Commissioners, whereas Bombay has no Board of Revenue, though there is a Financial Commissioner there.

In Bengal alone of these provinces there has been the double system of administration by a Board of Revenue and the Divisional Commissioners. It may not be out of place to mention that when the Board was first established in Bengal, the Governor of Bengal was also the Governor-General of India, and was busy with the work of extension and consolidation of the British possessions, and that there were no easy means of communication then. The Board of Revenue was then a necessity, which the Bengal of the present day has long outlived. It was reasonable to expect that when the posts of the Governor of Bengal and the Governor-General of India were separated and Bengal and the United Provinces were placed under separate Lieutenant-Governors, that the Board would be abolished, but, instead of one Board, two were created, one for Bengal and the other for the United Provinces, on the ground, I suppose, that "the more the merrier." There are now three Boards of Revenue in the three provinces which have been created out of the one old province of Bengal, but such unnecessary expenditure could not go unchallenged very long. Many people felt that the existence of the Board, where there were Divisional Commissioners, was quite superfluous, and the first authoritative pronouncement came from one of the Boards themselves, when in 1893 the Board of the United Provinces recommended its abolition. Then in 1909 came the weighty recommendation of the Royal Commission on Decentralisation, of which I have already spoken. This Commission recommended the creation of Council Government in all the major provinces where it did not exist and the abolition of the existing Boards of Revenue. This is the recommendation made by them. This is an important matter and I hope the House will kindly excuse my reading out to it paragraph 469, page 163:

But if and when the Lieutenant-Governorships are, as we have already suggested, converted into Council Government, we think that it will be desirable to make the Executive Councils sufficiently strong to absorb the existing Boards of Revenue or Financial Commissioners and to vest in the Government itself such functions, now discharged by these, as cannot expediently be made over to the Commissioners. The Head of the Province would thus share the burden of responsibility with independent and experienced councillors, who would be more useful in this capacity as dealing with a wide field of administration. At the same time, the objections now raised against the reduplication of work and the existence of two separate office establishments would be met.

This is the recommendation, and as the result of this recommendation, Council Government was introduced into Bengal and the proposal for the abolition of the Board was taken up. There was some correspondence on the subject between the local Government, the Government of India, and the Secretary of State regarding the question of its abolition. It appears that the Secretary of State ultimately decided against the abolition. I am sorry that the Government have made it impossible for me to find out why the Secretary of State sanctioned the retention of the Board in spite of the Decentralisation Committee's report. In answer to a question of mine, the Government declared yesterday that they did not wish to publish the correspondence regarding the proposed abolition of the Board of Revenue, because this was of a confidential nature. I fail to understand why the reasons for the retention of the Board should be regarded as confidential, while the reasons for abolition could be published by the Decentralisation Commission. The obvious conclusion is that the reasons for retention must be very weak indeed and cannot bear the light of day.

The Zamindars of Bengal were also to a certain extent responsible for this decision. Their association, the British Indian Association, petitioned Government against the abolition of the Board. The main ground on which they opposed the abolition was that, as the final appellate authority in revenue matters, the Board carried great confidence with the people, because counsel were allowed to appear before the Board and its abolition would prove unpopular. I shall examine this contention later on.

As a compromise between the two contending opinions of abolition and retention, the number of the Members of the Board of Revenue was reduced from 2 to 1 in 1913 and the administration of many of the departments, including Survey and Settlement, Customs, Excise, Stamps, Land Acquisition, and Co-operative Credit Societies, were transferred to Government. In spite of protests—I believe there were some protests, but I am open to correction—that these transfers would spell disaster, nothing untoward has happened so far. From 1913 to 1918, all revisional powers under the Income Tax Department were exercised by the local Government, which had been previously exercised by the Board. Even some of the appellate powers of the Board were transferred to Government by the Decentralisation Act of 1915. If transfers can be safely effected of some of the most important departments, and also of statutory appellate powers in some cases, it passes ordinary comprehension why it cannot be done in the remaining departments.

Let us now see what are the main functions of the Board after this reorganisation of 1913. The Board has now two I.C.S. officers, one Member and one Secretary, and some clerks, the whole costing as much as Rs. 1,39,000 per year. Its functions are mainly :

- (1) Final Court of Appeal and Revision in Revenue matters.
- (2) It is the Court of Wards and the Manager of Government estates.
- (3) General supervision of the revenue work of Commissioners and Collectors.
- (4) It exercises the power of making rules, notifications and orders having the force of law, and executive instructions for the conduct of business in every department under its control.

There are, of course, some other minor matters whose details I need not go into.

The first is the most important and I shall take it up last. With the advent of the new constitution, the number of Members of the Government, including Executive Councillors and Ministers, has been considerably increased. There does not seem any reason why the ordinary duties of the Board of Revenue should not be taken up by some Member of Government or some other official. As regards the supervision of the revenue work of the Commissioners and Collectors and framing rules, notifications, etc., these can be very well managed by the Revenue Member. The Revenue Secretary can easily be of great assistance, as the work done by this Secretary till a month or two ago, is now being done by two Secretaries, namely, the Revenue Secretary and the Secretary for Agriculture.

Then comes the question of the Court of Wards and the management of the Government estates. Except over estates with an income of more than a lakh of rupees (and the number of such estates under the Court of Wards cannot be more than five or six), the supervision of the Board has been merely nominal. This work can be safely handed over to the Commissioners.

Then comes the most important work of the Board, namely, as the final court of appeal and revision in revenue matters. This is the crux of the whole point, and mainly on this ground, the abolition of the Board had been opposed by the British Indian Association. I have the greatest respect for that august body, but I am afraid they took up a rather untenable position then. Even if they had some justification when the number of members of the Board was two, there can be no justification now, when the number has been reduced to one, because the chief value of the Board as an appellate court was that the collective opinion of two Members carried great weight both with the Government and with the public, but since the constitution of the one-Member Board, the value of its decisions has naturally lost weight. While formerly, I believe, the concurrence of both the Members was required to reverse the decision of a Commissioner, now one Member can do that. Even in the High Court, I think, except in a few petty cases, Judges cannot sit singly to hear appeals against the decision of the subordinate courts. The name of the Board, therefore, is a misnomer, and it cannot now carry the same confidence, as the British Indian Association thought it would.

I have heard it argued that the appellate powers of the Board cannot be delegated to Commissioners, because there are several of them, and that hence the individual decisions of one cannot be the same as that of the other. Perhaps one Commissioner may give a different judgment from his predecessor. Similarly, the one-Member Board may give a decision which is contrary to that of its predecessor. When questions of principle are involved, which hardly arise nowadays, the Commissioners may easily discuss these matters at their annual conference and come to a joint decision. This would carry greater weight than that of a single-Member Board.

That the public are not enamoured of the decision of a single-Member Board is apparent from the fact that in many cases, when parties are rich enough to fight their cases in civil courts, they do go to the civil courts, in spite of the decision of the Board of Revenue. The civil court has in many cases jurisdiction to entertain such suits.

The zamindars of the riparian districts must have bitter experience of the decisions of the Board under the Alluvial and Diluvial Act. The civil courts in some of the districts are now being flooded with suits against the decision of the Board. I believe, I am not quite sure, the Hon'ble Revenue Member, the Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan is contesting the Government against a decision of the Board.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): May I rise to a point of order? I do not think that a personal remark of that kind should be made.

The PRESIDENT: Personal remarks should always be avoided.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I did not intend to make a personal remark. In whatever way we may look at it, the one-Member Board as a revenue appellate or revisional court, is not much of a success.

If it is not thought desirable to give these powers to Commissioners, these can easily be transferred to a Member of the Executive Council or to a Member and the Legal Remembrancer sitting together.

This court, I am sure, will carry great weight. Even now the Member of the Board has to go up to the High Court in intricate matters. Only very lately, the Board went up to the High Court in a case from the district of Tippera, and the High Court thought fit to modify some of the decisions of the Board. I have heard it argued that, if these appellate powers were transferred to a Member of the Executive Council, lawyers would not be allowed to be heard, and hence the procedure would be unpopular. And why, pray, cannot the lawyers be allowed to appear? Because it is said that it has been the custom so long, and that executive councillors might come into unpleasant contact with the members of the Bar. What argument is this? Surely this custom or practice is not like the laws of the Medes or the Persians that it cannot be changed? It was not the practice to call swaraj the goal of India, but it has now been done. As regards the question of the unpleasant contact, the argument seems futile and childish. Why, the Executive Councillors are more likely to come into unpleasant contact with the elected members of this Council, and yet they are not kept away from this House. Surely the Executive Councillors do not wish to be kept in glass cases. The days of false prestige are over. I hope, I have been able to convince the House that the cry of popular disapproval of the abolition of the Board has no basis, in fact, and that the appellate and revisional work of the Board may safely and easily and with more efficiency be transferred to other hands.

Now, Sir, it may be argued that the Member of the Board is a busy officer with much work to do, and that the abolition would be a disaster as far as efficiency is concerned. I emphatically declare that the Member has not sufficient work to do in the Board and I am sure that the House will agree with me, when I enumerate the extra work that has been foisted upon him to keep him busy. First, he is to work as the Chairman of the Calcutta Port Commissioners. Is not there any other suitable and capable man who can do this work? Then, he is the President of the Sanitary Board. Why, I do not know. Then during the last great war, he was also the President of the Exemption Tribunal and the Selection Committee of the India Defence Force; and last but not the least, I believe, he is the President of the Zoological Gardens. It has long been conceded that a Civilian is an expert in almost all the branches of administration, but this is the first time that I have heard of the services of a Member of the Board of Revenue required inside the Zoological Gardens.

I think that the above list will be a sufficient indication that the Member of the Board cannot have much work to do in the Board itself. From whatever standpoint the question may be looked at,—whether from the ground of economy or efficiency,—it seems clear that the Board is redundant and may be easily done away with. There is absolutely no necessity of keeping its staff of Secretary and clerks at the headquarters of Government, where there are now Secretaries enough to take up the work of the Board amongst themselves.

As regards the necessary delegation of powers, I think one single Amending Act may easily settle that. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler was the able Secretary to the Royal Commission on Decentralisation, and I sincerely hope and appeal to him that he will have some respect for the recommendation of that authoritative body and support this proposal. Only lately, the question of the abolition of the Board of Revenue was brought before the Council in the United Provinces and Madras. In the United Provinces Council, the Government said that they would consult the landlords on this point, and on that assurance, the resolution was withdrawn. In Madras, where there are no Commissioners, the question of the abolition was put forward, and the Government did not take an unsympathetic view and the resolution was withdrawn. I sincerely trust that we shall get the same sympathetic treatment in Bengal from our Government. With these few words, I beg to move the resolution.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: I rise to oppose this motion. Of the various grounds on which I do so, the first and foremost ground is that it is too early, premature and unreasonable. The resolution proposes that recommendations be made to Government that the Board of Revenue be abolished and that no provision be made for it in the next year's Budget. The next year's Budget takes effect from the 1st April next; are we to understand that from that date there will be no Board of Revenue and no arrangement will be made to divide the duties of this branch of administration amongst other branches? My friend has argued that the most important work of the Board of Revenue is to hear revenue appeals, but if we are going to change that practice, the laws of the land must be changed, so that, the work now done by them might be done by Members of the Executive Council, as suggested by Mr. Dutt. The wording of the resolution is awfully childish. The other day the Council passed a resolution that the number of Members of the Executive Council be reduced to two and, if we now move Government to transfer the work of the Board of Revenue to the four Executive Councillors our position will be ridiculous. The Board of Revenue is an important branch of the administration, and it will take a long time to abolish it and divide its work among different officers and different branches of the administration. My friend should have come forward with a reasonable proposition, suggesting that the matter be considered by a committee to introduce the system which is prevalent in Bombay. I ask my friend to withdraw the motion for the present and to come forward with it afterwards, in a proper form and with definite suggestions.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I do not wish to press the last part of my resolution, I wish to withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT: You cannot withdraw it without the leave of the Council.

Rai NALINAKSHA BASU Bahadur: I wanted to support the resolution, but after hearing the speech of my friend on my left (Babu Nitya Dhone Mukherjee) I oppose it.

Babu FANINDRALAL DE: The Board of Revenue has long been considered a department of doubtful utility. So far as pure revenue matters are considered, one of the two I mean the Commissionership of a Division and a Board of Revenue is certainly redundant. Of the three major provinces, Bombay has no Board of Revenue, Madras no Commissioner, but Bengal has got both. The Commissioner of a Division is generally the medium of communication between the District Officer and the chief revenue authority, and he is also the appellate authority in land revenue matters from the orders of the District officer. He is entrusted with the duties of inspection, general control and sanctioning or refusing certain expenditure. Thus nearly the whole of the administrative work of the Revenue Department is vested in the hands of the Commissioner. Since 1912, the major portion of the duties of the Board of Revenue, such as land records, surveys, excise, salt, customs, income-tax, opium, land acquisition, etc., have been transferred to several independent departments. Only land revenue, cess and several other minor subjects are left in the hands of the Board. Though the number of Members have been reduced to one, but still it appears that this even is unnecessary. The Royal Commission on Decentralization declared that, with the advent of the then larger Councils, this department can be abolished and its duties taken up by a Member of Council. This argument holds with greater force to-day, when the few duties of the Board can now safely be distributed among the various members and Ministers. In the United Provinces and Madras similar resolutions have already been sympathetically received by the Government, and there is no reason why the same will not be accepted here also. The argument that it is the final appellate court in intricate revenue problems need not be seriously considered, as with the reduction of the number of Members of the Board to one, the value of the collective opinion in such cases is gone. Nothing stands in the way of a Minister or Executive Member, assisted by the increased number of Secretaries, taking up this function. This will also save nearly Rs. 1,20,000 annually and this is no trifling sum in these days of financial tightness.

With these few words, I beg to support the resolution.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: We have had four speeches up to now with regard to the motion before the House, namely, that recommendations be made to Government for the abolition of the Board of Revenue in Bengal. Of the four speakers, two have opposed the motion. With regard to Mr. Fanindralal De, who has just sat down, I am sure the central idea of his is economy. One must overlook a lot of things which he said, which he would not have said if he had studied the question more seriously. Therefore, the gentleman to whom I have to reply is at present the mover of the resolution. The mover of the resolution has tried to wax eloquent and at the same time he has tried to be sarcastic. I have no quarrel with him either for his eloquence or for his sarcasms, because it is my duty as a Member of Government to lay the facts of the case as clearly as it is possible for me to do so for this House to judge whether a sufficiently strong case has been made out for the abolition of the Board of Revenue. Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta began his speech by saying that he was actuated by motives of economy on the one hand and efficiency on the other. Regarding economy, it is very easy to advocate that. Regarding efficiency, it is quite a different pair of boots, and it is natural that gentlemen who are not fully aware of what the Board of Revenue stands for—although I must admire the amount of knowledge that Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta has been able to acquire on the subject—would be led astray. But the main argument on which he has laid stress, is that of the Commission, on which my colleague on the left happened to be, fortunately or unfortunately, the Secretary, and he has appealed personally to the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler—though he was not here at the time when the appeal was made—that he would help him in obtaining the abolition of the Board from Bengal. I do not know what the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler thinks of the proposition, but what I would like to point out to the mover of the resolution is that it is quite true that the Decentralisation Commission did recommend the abolition of the Board. It is equally true that, on the recommendations of that Commission, the Government of India consulted local Governments, and it is further true that, after consulting the local Governments, the Government of India arrived at the decision by which we now have one Member of the Board of Revenue. Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta then went on in his speech to explain to us the systems prevalent in Madras and in Bombay. In recommending, however, the change, so far as Bengal is concerned, he whether intentionally or unintentionally—he could best himself say—did not bring forward forcibly why in Bombay they had to have a Financial Commissioner, and he rather tried to enliven the Council by the remark “the more the merrier.” Then he went on to give us some past history, and said that in 1893 the United Provinces Government had recommended the abolition of the Board. Then he based his arguments upon the present functions of the Board and why it could not be distributed among the seven Members and Ministers of Government; and then he has mentioned what the functions of the Board are at present, and why could not they be delegated to Commissioners or other authorities or "other officials," according to his own words. I do not know what "the other officials," mean; I hope he will explain in his reply. Then he has mentioned regarding his arguments—I am at present only mentioning them for the enlightenment of the Council, the principal points, on which he has based his case, my reply will follow—that counsel cannot appear before the Members of the Executive Government; that is a fallacious argument; there is no harm in counsel appearing before the Members of the Government, and it is not infra dig for Members of Government to hear counsel, and so forth. Then he has gone on to point out and show that the functions of the Board are no longer what they were before, and lastly, he has made the curious proposal that the one Member might remain, but that as people seem to have lost confidence in the Member being one, so far as the Government authorities are concerned, he might be assisted by the Legal Remembrancer in forming the court.

I think, Sir, those are in brief the arguments which have been brought forward by the mover of this resolution.

Now, apart from the question of rules framed in accordance with the provisions of a number of Acts by the Board, and orders and notifications passed which have the force of law, and apart from other functions of the Board, I should like, first of all, to meet his arguments, which, of course, he has tried to meet in his own way, why the appellate jurisdiction in revenue law could not be vested in Commissioners. As we know, in Bengal there are at present five divisions, and he has himself said that we might argue that the decisions of one Commissioner may vary from those of another, and he has tried to meet that argument by saying that the same thing might happen in the Board, by the decision of one Member of the Board of Revenue being different to that of his predecessor. I think that the comparison is not quite correct, nor can it be said to apply in this case with the same force. We have five divisions; supposing a Commissioner of a particular division were to give a decision regarding an appeal in revenue law, which was not correct, according to him, the Commissioner of A division's decision would remain as he had given it, whilst the Commissioner of B division's decisions might be according to the old law. What he seems to forget is that the co-ordinating authority vested in the Board, is the authority which can revise not only the decision of the Commissioner of A division or B division, but of all the five divisions, and bring it into line and make it the decision of the Board as a whole. This could not be done if the decisions were left to Divisional Commissioners. Then again, as I have already said, from the point of view of the Government a single authority for co-ordinating revenue law and procedure is essential, when we have such important functions regarding revenue law vested in the Board of Revenue; and it is also quite clear that even if the Member of the Board of Revenue were to be abolished, we would have to have another authority besides the Commissioners, like what they have in Bombay, and I believe, in the Punjab, the Financial Commissioner. Now, if that be so, it seems to me essential that when the system now prevalent with regard to the appellate authority being vested in the Board of Revenue has worked well—for, no case, I think, has been made out by the mover of the resolution to show that that work is being done badly or unsatisfactorily or that there is a general discontent in the way in which the Board is now discharging its duties—that when we have to accede that such a central co-ordinating authority is essential, I do not see the need of changing the present system, especially when in changing it, it is perfectly clear that we cannot simply delegate these powers to Commissioners, regarding whom a certain member not long ago brought in a resolution which he afterwards withdrew, to abolish them altogether. Then, of course, he has brought the argument that the functions of an appellate court can be exercised by a Member of Government. Well, regarding that, I do not wish to go into the question of custom which, evidently, does not find favour with Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, but I would like just to mention two facts. One is that, however much the word “political” may find disfavour with the mover, it is undoubtedly the fact that from a political point of view it would be totally unsound for a Member of the Government to be an appellate authority, and from that point of view it would be most unsatisfactory that a Member of the Executive Council should sit as a Member of the Board to hear appeals in which counsel appear, and regarding this, it has been decided upon by the highest authority, viz., the Secretary of State, who also agrees that on political grounds alone it is undesirable for a Member of the Government to sit as an appellate authority. He also says there is another thing to consider. Supposing a Member of Government takes up the duties of the Board of Revenue—

The PRESIDENT: I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon’ble the Maharajadhiraja. This is the time for adjournment for the Muhamadan members to offer their prayers.

The Hon’ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: Of course, if the President wishes to adjourn in the middle of an important debate, that is another matter, but on behalf of Government I must press this; however, I bow to the decision of the President.

The PRESIDENT: After adjournment, the discussion will be resumed.

The Hon’ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: It takes away the effect of the discussion when the discussion is an important one.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I rise to a point of order. Has the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja the right to go on after the President's decision?

The PRESIDENT: I have not prevented the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur from going on; I have only said that this is the time for adjournment, if the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur wishes to take more time, he can resume the subject after the adjournment.

Mr. RAZAUR RAHMAN KHAN: Should not the Council adjourn for magrib prayer?

Mr. J. CAMPBELL FORRESTER: Is this not an occasion when the Deputy-President can take the chair in the meantime?

The PRESIDENT: It is not so much for me as it is for the members of the Council. The Council adjourns for 15 minutes.

The Council reassembled at 6-30 p.m.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I have already explained to the mover of the resolution, who, I think, must be praying, as I do not find him here, why it would not be proper to transfer this authority of the Board of Commissioners. I have also mentioned some of the reasons why this transference to Government would not be possible either; and regarding those reasons I think I mentioned two very important reasons: one is that the Board of Revenue in Bengal is in fact the head of several departments and there are many heads of departments subordinate to it, viz., the head of the Land Registration Department, Cess Department, Sale Law Department, Certificate Department, Wards Department, Partition Department, Tauzi Department and last, but by no means the least important, the Khas Mahal Department. It is essential for practical and efficient administration that there must be a head in Bengal for such departments taken en bloc and further, as I have already said, and I should like to emphasise the fact once for all - and that is a very important consideration - namely, the dissolution of the Board would deprive Government of an independent advisory authority on the revenue administration of the Presidency. Such a loss would be increasingly felt, and, if it was thought that the Board should be abolished (and I think that one speaker, Babu Nitya Dhon Mukherjee, pointed out what a number of enactments there were in which the appellate authority of the Board had to be used), and apart from the fact that if it was decided to delegate these authorities, various complications would arise, which we could not estimate off-hand; and Government regard it as a matter of first importance to them to have handy a Board of Revenue which is the acknowledged technical expert on the land revenue administration of the province.

Another thing, Sir. I doubt if those people, who believe in that authority now vested in the Board in the province—and I think that they are a body of very influential men—would accept the position lying down, if the Government were to accept the recommendation of the mover of the resolution. I can, of course, dilate further on the subject; but I think that from the point of view of Government I have clearly stated the main points regarding which it would be inadvisable to abolish the Board of Revenue as a co-ordinate appellate authority.

With regard to the charge made by the mover as to why Government in replying to a question declined to make public the correspondence between this Government and the Government of India and the Secretary of State, my reply simply is this: that the Provincial Government have no right or authority to publish a correspondence with a higher authority without its previous sanction. For these reasons, I beg to oppose, on behalf of the Government, the resolution moved by Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta.

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): As a reference has been made to a body, with which I was connected in a small way, and to my connection with it in particular, it is perhaps desirable that I should say a word on that point. It is true that I was Secretary to the Decentralisation Commission. It is also true that the Decentralisation Commission made, to my mind, a somewhat casual recommendation that the Board of Revenue was unnecessary, but it is unfortunately not true that my influence with that Commission was such as to induce them always to accept the views of their Secretary. Had I been a full member, I am afraid their report would have been further speckled with those little things that so often accompany reports—namely, notes of dissent; but on this particular point I may perhaps mention some relevant facts.

The question of this retention or abolition of the Board is very much one of technical revenue administration. Now, whatever, its other merits may have been, the Decentralisation Commission was not very strong on the revenue side. Two of its members, including the Chairman, had never been in the country before, and two of the Civilian members, namely those from Madras and Bombay, had made their reputation in lines other than revenue, and were not what is ordinarily termed "revenue experts."

Secondly, how did this particular recommendation about the Board come to be made? I can assure the Council, as one of the few people living, and likely to remain so, who have read the evidence which was taken before the Decentralisation Commission, that this recommendation was not made in response to any volume of evidence that was given before the Commission in different parts of India. There was no universal outcry anywhere for the abolition of the Board, but the Commission were very anxious to propose for other provinces the Council form of Government which has now come in, but which in those days was a bit of a rarity outside Madras and Bombay, with which Sir William Meyer and Sir Steyning Egerly were particularly connected. It was hardly relevant to the terms of their reference to make this proposal, but with the Decentralisation Commission, as with other Commissions and people who have to make reports, that fact did not weigh overmuch. They were anxious to make that recommendation and they accordingly made it. Sir William Meyer, however, had a financial mind, and one characteristic of the financial mind is that when it makes a proposal for expenditure it also looks round for a corresponding economy. The Commission were a little apprehensive, as in those days Council Government was regarded somewhat differently from what it is now, and they were anxious to soften the blow; so Sir William Meyer had the happy idea of recommending the corresponding abolition of the Board of Revenue. That briefly, Sir, is the inner history of how this recommendation came to be made by the Decentralisation Commission.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: I fully appreciate the spirit which has moved the mover of this resolution for the abolition of the Board of Revenue; but at the same time we must remember that only the other day we have passed a resolution in which we have distinctly stated and in which we have distinctly recommended, that the number of Members of the Executive Council should be reduced to two. Now, Sir, the mover, just like a lawyer, has given his reasons——

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I rise to a point of order. I am not a lawyer.

The PRESIDENT: I do not think it is a reflection to call a man a lawyer. However, the speaker now knows that Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta is not a lawyer.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: And he has quoted an authority in respect of his argument. Now, Sir, after reading the paragraph to which the mover referred, i.e., paragraph 469 of the Royal Commission on Decentralisation, I find that that paragraph itself is a complete answer to the arguments which have been put forward by the mover. There the Commission recommended no doubt that, when Lieutenant-Governorships are converted into Council Governments, it would be desirable to make the Executive Councils sufficiently strong to absorb the existing Boards of Revenue or Financial Commissioners. The whole question is whether we have made the Executive Councils sufficiently strong to perform all the duties which the Board of Revenue at present exercises. That is the whole question before the House and, if for efficient administration it is required that the number of Members of the Executive Council should be still more increased, it is then and then only that we can say that the duties of the Board of Revenue can be safely transferred to the Members of the Executive Council; until and unless that is done, I think, Sir, it would be quite premature to recommend to Government that the Board of Revenue be abolished. I also wish to point out that, having regard

I also wish to point out that, having regard to the fact that there are certain Statutes and Acts, which distinctly lay down certain provisions under which the Board of Revenue exercises its judicial powers, it would be quite useless to recommend that so long as the present laws and regulations are in force, the Board of Revenue should be at once abolished and no provision ought to be made in the next year's Budget.

Then, as regards the question as to whether really those powers, I mean the judicial powers, which the Board of Revenue now exercises, can be safely transferred to some other quarters, the mover could not suggest any satisfactory solution: at one time he hinted that it might be transferred to an Executive Councillor, who might take the advice of the Legal Remembrancer; but the mover forgets that here the Board of Revenue, as a collective body just like the jurors, as we have got them here, give collective opinion on a particular question; and if really they are the co-ordinate authorities, who exercise their discretion and who exercise their judgment over several Divisional Commissioners, such powers cannot be transferred to a Member of the Executive Council. I think, Sir, there was a cry in this Province, as well as throughout the whole of India, that the judicial ought to be separated from the executive; I do not know whether the judicial powers which the Board now exercise could be again transferred to the Members of the Executive Council. The mover again suggested that the Legal Remembrancer should be linked along with the Member of the Executive Council. Now, Sir, from the very fact that the mover cannot suggest any possible solution by which the powers at present exercised by the Board of Revenue can be safely transferred to some other body, it appears that this is not the proper time when we ought to move a resolution of this kind and, as such, we should reject it as premature.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I am sorry that I have got to oppose the resolution of my friend Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, particularly because the latter part of it seems to be highly open to criticism. I do not like to waste the time of the Council, because my friend, Babu Nitya Dhon Mukherjee, has already said that at the present moment it is quite impracticable, as you cannot at once say that no provision need be made in the next year's Budget—

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: May I rise to a point of order? I have already withdrawn the second part of the motion.

The PRESIDENT: I have not allowed it to be withdrawn.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: All the same, I feel that my friend, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, has made out a very strong case. He has given us all his arguments, not mere ipse dixit, but based on the report of the Decentralisation Committee; and other important Committees which were held in this country. I am sorry that the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler wants to speak in derogation of the recommendations of the Decentralisation Commission; and he, like my esteemed guru, wants to change his opinion. He says: "I was only the Secretary to the Committee;" and if I remember aright his language, he characterises the report as irrelevant and in some places as wrong; and he says that it was merely a sop that was thrown out against the high expense with regard to the Executive Council Government. I think, however, that their recommendations were more honest than at least they have been described to be. And if this sort of argument is made by so able and intelligent a person like the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, I can tell him that with all the great esteem I have had for him for the last 25 years he and I worked together many years ago when we were quite young about 25 years ago—I had a very great regard for his high intelligence.—

The PRESIDENT: These remarks are irrelevant. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler does not require any compliments.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I must say that all he has said is certainly not at all convincing to anybody except to those whose interests it is to see that the Board of Revenue must be there. That is after all the whole question.

Then, the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan has said with regard to the question of economy, that it is easy to advocate economy. With the greatest possible deference to him, I may say that it is easier still for the Government to say that they are opposed to it, and it is to the interests of Government officials to say that they are opposed to it. Therefore, an argument like that carries no weight. So long as the report of the Decentralisation Commission is there, I do not think that any individual or person, however great may be his position, can possibly carry conviction by saying that he is opposed to it, and by giving certain reasons here and there. I do not think that sort of argument will do at all. The fact that the Board of Revenue is an old, effete and fossilized institution, and there can be no doubt about it, as these things were established when British India was of a different character. It is high time that these institutions should now be abolished or at any rate remodelled.

It has been said by the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja that there is so much to be done by this Board of Revenue, and that there will be practical difficulties in altering enactments. Cannot enactments be altered? They are not the laws of the Medes and Persians that they can never be altered.

Another difficulty has been pointed out by my friend, Mr. Syed Nasim Ali, who has said that the Board of Revenue have to do judicial work. The same gentleman would have done as much work if he were a Member of Council as if he were on the Board.

I may say that, in view of the fact that we have now got our Members and Ministers, it is time enough for us to think whether we should not ask some of the Members to take up this work. To my mind—and I speak subject to correction, and this feeling is entirely my own—these Hon'ble Members have not got much to do; and we should not be allowing their intelligence to rust through sheer want of work. Therefore, it is time that we should give them some work so that intellectual rheumatism might not set in. That is a point which is very legitimate and pertinent to the present question.

There are some other arguments that have been advanced against this resolution; and I do not think it necessary to go into the details. But, so far as this question of economy is concerned, I am entirely with my friend Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta. I would point out that in view of what has already transpired, we, the non-official members of this Council, think that at any rate we should rather have the Divisional Commissioners to go first of all, because somewhere about Rs. 6 lakhs could be saved thereby, and that we had better not rush through this matter. It is admitted that the Divisional Commissioners are mere post offices.

The PRESIDENT: We cannot listen to any arguments regarding the Divisional Commissioners. That resolution was lost.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: The motion was not lost but withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT: It does not matter. We are not discussing the Divisional Commissioners in connection with this motion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Very well, I shall not mention anything about the Divisional Commissioners. With regard to a certain class of officers whom we do not want, it would be the best thing to get rid of them first; and we should thereby save a larger amount of money than by running against the Board of Revenue. Now, one thing is certain, and that is that in the course of a few years this Board of Revenue has to go. Nothing that is old, effete and fossilized can possibly stand in spite of any amount of official efforts to prop it up. The time is coming when the Board has got to go; and at the time, when it goes, those Hon'ble Members, who now say that if it goes the work of Government will be stopped, or at any rate their successors, would wonder how it was kept for such a length of time. When we have a thing, we think that it is impossible to do without it. When I have got a father, I think it is impossible to remain in this world without a father or mother; but when my father dies and after a few months or years I find that I am going on all right. So the world will not stop when the Board of Revenue is abolished, and this Government will not collapse. We have got to find out some other machinery, which will adapt itself to the circumstances. The laws will have to be changed and that will take time. Therefore, this resolution of my friend is, to a certain extent, premature. I would rather be satisfied with merely recommending that the Board of Revenue be abolished—which means nothing more than a mere pious hope often expressed but never cared for, and I would now ask my friend to withdraw this motion. But we might keep it for our future reference. We must remember that we are new to the situation: we must remember that the whole situation is new to us. We have not yet got the ropes of the Government in our hand; we do not know which rope to pull; so let us have some knowledge first; and after a while when we have got the necessary knowledge by examining the conditions existing throughout the country, and the working of the Revenue Department, then it will be time for us to say: "Now, let us abolish this thing altogether and we shall not tolerate it any longer."

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: The mover of the resolution, the other day, had a resolution about the abolition of the Divisional Commissioners, and so far as I understood him he withdrew that resolution. He withdrew the resolution to make it more comprehensive to include the Board of Revenue also in it and to come up after some time. I submit that now the Board of Revenue has attracted the attention of the mover on the ground of economy, and the mover says that the Board of Revenue now consists of one officer, but there were two officers before. I think now the argument he has advanced is that because there are not two officers or three officers who could consult together, and it is only one officer, therefore his opinion is not worthy of being taken. If it is an argument on the ground of economy, I think that the abolition of one officer is not a very important matter for this House to take into consideration. Again, we see that everywhere there are two appellate courts from the lower court. There are the Munsifs, there are the Judges and there are the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court. In revenue matters there are the Collectors, there are the Commissioners of Divisions and there is the Board of Revenue. I think every one of us knows that there ought to be at least two appellate courts above the lower court in order to ensure true judgment. I think that as we are situated now, the Board of Revenue is a necessity and we cannot do away with it altogether. Therefore on these considerations I oppose the resolution.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I move that the question be now put.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: May I rise to a point of order? Have I not, as the mover of this resolution, the right of reply?

The PRESIDENT: No, not after it is moved that the question be now put.

The motion that the question be now put was put and agreed to.

The original motion was then put and lost.

Adjournment.

The PRESIDENT: I am asked by the Secretary to tell the members that there will be a ballot for resolutions to-morrow, at 10-30 A.M. The Council stands adjourned till 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council, assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Wednesday, the 23rd February, 1921, at 11 A.M.

Present :

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 82 nominated and elected members.

Resolutions

(under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest).

Vocational Education.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur : " This Council recommends to the Government—

- (1) that immediate steps be taken for preparing a scheme for the furtherance of vocational education and that practical effect be given to the same by opening special classes in all Government and aided schools in Bengal with the help and in co-ordination with the Agricultural and Public Works Departments, and authorities of workshops and mills, where possible;
- (2) that financial provision be made to carry out the scheme as early as possible; and
- (3) that the services of the Director of Industries, Bengal, be utilized for the purpose as Commissioner for the proposed special test examinations."

In moving this resolution I may be permitted to say at the very outset that in these days of growing democracy the most democratic thing will be to solve the bread problem of the country and solve it in a practical way by making people self-reliant and, needless to add, self-supporting. The only method to achieve this result is to impart vocational (and it may be termed industrial) education, with particular attention to manual training, to the young children and youths of the country. That education ought to be of such a sound and practical character as will enable the learners to chalk out a road for themselves and then proceed on their own initiative. It has been truly said and said over again that the prosperity and independence (I presume industrial independence) of India is closely associated with the development of her agriculture and industries, her internal provision for her necessities. In all other countries vocational education—call it technical education or by any other name you please—and manual training form the most essential feature of the educational system. The necessity and ever-growing importance of introducing an elaborate practical scheme of vocational education, making manual training an essential feature, cannot be too strongly pressed home in the minds of our administrators. The poverty of the country due to economic pressure has assumed the character of a most uncomfortable contingency no longer to be overlooked. We must end or at least mend the situation and it cannot be indefinitely postponed. The common sufferings and sacrifices of our people have been great, and I humbly think that it will be no part of wisdom or statesmanship to prolong the situation. Indeed, if I be permitted, I ought to speak out my mind and say that it will be supreme folly not to supply a frame for the play of the forces which go to form the economic life of the country.

All the disquieting features of the present-day situation tend to prove that the bread problem has become the problem of all problems. Want and privation have made the people restive and no wonder for they are in for a desperate struggle for their very existence. There is the growing number of the unemployed youths, whose exclusively literary education has made them "misfits," so to speak. We must come to their help and deal with them in the way they have a just claim to be dealt with. Chronic scarcity, high prices, and want and privation in consequence, have made the people desperate. That in itself is not a pleasant situation. The bread problem, therefore, must be solved. Further neglect of vocational education and manual training will be aggravating and make the situation bad.

"It is a crying need of Bengal to find vocational employment for men of education and intelligence in rural Bengal." So said, not long ago, the Hon'ble Minister for Education. Is it necessary for me to add that vocational employment can never be secured for the youths of the country without giving them vocational education?

The large number of unemployed youths in Bengal are anxiously waiting for a message of hope in this new era from the talented Indian Minister for Education and from the Reformed Council. Let that message of hope be one of lasting benefit to this country. Nothing is more gratifying than that all the wise heads have been put together to evolve a system of vocational education and manual training fully adapted to the requirements of the country, and there is not a safer way of reducing the number of unemployed. The other day I read that our gracious Sovereign the King-Emperor, on a royal visit to a particular London district, assured a deputation of unemployed men that he would do for them all that was in the power of His Majesty, and would see that their condition was ameliorated. Gracious words, and how graciously spoken! Will it not be in the fitness of things that His Excellency the Governor of Bengal in Council, the new Ministers, who are known to be the apostles of patriotism and notable standard-bearers of education and progress, and the cultured members of this Council—the peoples' friends and representatives—conjointly send forth a message of hope to the young children and the large number of unemployed young men of the country in the language of our Sovereign that henceforth all that should be done for imparting vocational education to the children of the soil, will be done and that no plea will be allowed to stand in the way.

However, as it is, it seems that almost all the Provinces and Presidencies in India are giving points to Bengal in the matter of vocational education and this is humiliating. Bombay does better in many things, and in the matter of vocational education surely it has not done badly. The Sydenham College of Commerce, Poona College of Science, Deccan Agricultural College and many other technical and industrial schools are the best of their kind. The United Provinces are also ahead of us in the matter. The poor Central Provinces are also striving hard for industrial education. Madras can very well take pride in what it has been able to do. Among other things the best enlightened Presidency is very successfully working out a programme of vocational education, styled as special tests technical examinations on all subjects. These examinations are controlled by the Government Commissioner for special test examinations. The scheme has proved a great success. Last year 20,000 pupils appeared for technical and special test examinations, and the amount of fees realised from the examinees was Rs. 2,14,503. The expenditure amounted to Rs. 1,97,824, leaving a balance of Rs. 16,679 in the hands of the examination Commissioner. Can Bengal claim to possess any scheme of technical education which may attract even a few hundreds of our countrymen? I am aware that there is one for leather tanning. This is a very poor record. Bengal abounds in coal mines and yet we have no college of mining. I am aware of the fact that there is a mining section in the Sibpur Engineering College and three or four centres in the coal fields for delivering lectures on certain days to apprentices in coal mines. There are people who think that these are only makeshift arrangements and Bengal should have at least one first grade college of mining. As for sending abroad students for technical education, Rai Bahadur Jogend a Chunder Ghose's association can show better records of its efforts and success. Since the partition days Bengal has not got even an agricultural college of its own and it has been thought only two vernacular agricultural schools one at Dacca and another at Chinsura, are enough for Bengal, and we are to remember that the area of the country is 68,000 square miles and at least 90 per cent. of its population entirely depend on agriculture. Well, we have the prospect of a coming agricultural institution of better type than that of Dacca and Chinsura. No doubt we have to wait long for this prospective agricultural institution of a comparatively superior type. I say this in view of the fate of the proposal technological institute in Calcutta. It will no doubt be news to the members of this Council that after so many years a reduced scheme for this proposed institute has been submitted. We have a weaving institution at Serampur and a few weaving schools, perhaps six or seven in number, in outlying places. I am afraid this will not make much of a headway in reviving, developing and expanding the almost dead weaving industry of Bengal. In Bihar, in the Shahabad district, spinning classes have been opened in all schools. I desire that that method should be followed and in a class or classes attached to all the schools of Bengal for vocational education, in which I include manual training in handicrafts. I also read the report of the Department of Industry, Bengal, and I met with disappointment. One thing which attracted my attention was the training of the artisan class, and I found that the apathy of the Education Department in this matter has been adversely commented upon by implication. We have all heard in the last sitting of this Council what the Hon'ble Minister for Agriculture and Industries said as to the Government's programme of mechanical training and agricultural and industrial education. I must, however, confess to my feeling of disappointment, for the programme is quite inadequate to the growing needs of the country. Though I am not so ungrateful as to forget that practical effect has been given to the scheme of training a considerable number of apprentices in the Ranchapara Workshop and turning them after four years' labour there to the mechanical class of the Sibpur Engineering College. I do not know why the same method cannot be adopted and arrangements be made for the admission of mechanical apprentices in the East Indian Railway, Bengal-Nagpur Railway Works, Russa Engineering Works and many other engineering works and workshops, as well as in paper and other mills of the country. I may add here that the Upper India Paper Mills (which is a first-class paper mill) have trained a large number of apprentices in mechanics and mechanical engineering and all of these apprentices have been well provided for. This training of students in railway workshops, engineering workshops, mills and factories forms the first and last item of all industrial training and technical education not only in all Western countries but also in Japan. Students from this country who go abroad for industrial or technical education have also always followed this course. Here, in Bengal, a similar method has been adopted to give instruction in mining to the apprentices in collieries. What is necessary now is the expansion of this system of technical and industrial education in co-operation with the authorities of different railways, workshops, mills and factories. We may not meet with success in all places, but I cannot persuade myself to believe that the authorities of all kinds of institutions will be so ungenerous as to forget their own traditions and refuse help and co-operation in a matter on which the very existence of the people of Bengal depends. The soil of Bengal is providing them with enormous wealth, and I am bold enough to repeat that they cannot afford to be apathetic or ungenerous. That is not a trait of the British character. Once convinced of the utility of a thing, the Englishman will grudge nothing for the benefit of another individual or community.

I have been very particular in saying that Bengal requires a message of hope. Circumstanced as we are, direct initiative of the State is necessary for imparting vocational education and manual training to the young children and youths of the country. The action has been long overdue and even now it will do grace to our position in this Reformed Council if we take up the matter in right earnest and prove ourselves practical.

The Government have been always in the habit of saying "financial stringency." Therefore I am in mortal dread of that inevitable pronouncement, "financial stringency." I am, however, prepared to begin with a modest—I should say very modest—scheme of vocational education and manual training. My scheme is practically the same as is now being followed in giving mining instruction in a few centres in the Bengal coal fields. I want that a class or classes be added for amins, surveyors, draftsmen, estimators and computers in all high schools in the localities where there is an Executive Engineer's division, and members of the local Public Works Department there be appointed as teachers for a fixed allowance. I hear already this very policy has been adopted in mining instruction. Mechanical classes are to be opened in localities where there are workshops in a mill; classes for handicrafts are to be attached in schools where there exist certain activities in handicrafts. Weaving and spinning classes are to be added to schools where there exists the industry to a certain extent—places like Tamluk, Garhbeta, Ghatal, Khanakul, Dantan, Indas, Sonamukhi, Haripal, Kaikala, Gurope, Dhannakhali, and also in other places where the industry is not already dead. Agricultural classes should be opened and added to all schools in agricultural localities. Permanent machines will not be required in all institutions. Peripatetic teachers will do for some time to come. In fact, a practical modest scheme will not require such a huge sum as to at all frighten the Government and this Council. It is reported that Government have neglected vocational education. Remove that reproach by all means. We have had many committees on industrial education—the Industrial Commission, Inquiry and report by the Hon'ble Mr. Cumming and another by Mr. Swan, and perhaps many others too. The country has formed its own opinion of committees and commissions. These have been known to be pleas for shelving matters of urgency on which public opinion is very strong. Association of ideas is bad and association of ideas has made committees instruments for pacifying public demand. The situation should no longer continue in that way. The country and its people have been taught to think for themselves. They can see through diplomacy—the worst move.

Bengal has an area of 68,000 square miles. The country has also mineral resources, a fertile soil, and teeming millions. But Bengal is poor—on the starvation point—and why? There is something wrong, gravely wrong. It will be very apt to say in the words of Mr John Bright:—

I must say that it is my belief that if a country be found possessing a most fertile soil and capable of having every variety of production, and notwithstanding that the people are in a state of extreme destitution and suffering, the inference is that there is some fundamental error in the Government of that country.

Yes, there is a fundamental error in our educational system, and that requires to be removed.

Finally, I am to add that I am no advocate of a sterile policy and programme. What I desire is a will to work, and zeal and earnestness for prompt action. The issue is one of first importance, and I request this Council to be a party for sending forth a message of hope to the young people of Bengal by recording their votes in support of my resolution, and need I add that I not only expect solid votes but a unanimous vote of approval.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved “that a mixed committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to investigate the question of vocational and technical education in this Presidency, to collect expert opinion and information relative thereto, and to make recommendations with a view to the initiation of a comprehensive scheme for the promotion of such education.”

The object, which the mover of the original resolution has in view, is entirely the same as I have in view. The difference is in the modus operandi. In the first place, I entirely agree with him that public opinion is insistent on, and I should say that public opinion is clamouring for, industrial and technical education in this country. The army of unemployed young men, disappointed graduates, briefless lawyers, starving clerks, all tend to show that the education now in vogue has given too much attention to the literary side of it and neglected the practical side of education. The University Commission also dealt with the subject and I find that they recorded this opinion:—

We have been deeply impressed by the general disregard among University students in Bengal of the possibility of finding careers in practical—professional and technical—work, other than law and (to a less extent) medicine, by the deficiency of opportunities for obtaining training for such careers, and by the consequent over-crowding of courses of purely literary study. This disregard has its root in historical and social facts which especially affect the classes from which the bulk of the students are drawn. But it must be amended, and any scheme of educational reform which does not place in the forefront the need for such an amendment must fall short of the country's needs.

Well, I must say that the time has entirely changed. The occasion for reference that is made to historical and social factors, which led to this disregard of industrial and technical education, has passed away. People belonging to the highest families, to the highest strata of society, are anxious to find careers in other than purely literary vocations, and the want of such facilities—of such opportunities—is keenly felt by the community. I think it will be admitted by everyone—both by those representing Government here and those representing the people—that the root cause of the present discontent is the fact that there is the want of opportunity for technical and vocational education, which will solve the bread problem, which is now confronting us throughout the length and breadth of India. I think therefore that it is high time that Government should take this matter in hand in right earnest and prepare such a scheme, as they are in a position to do with the aid of their experts, with a view to introducing a comprehensive system of vocational education in this country. My amendment differs from the resolution of Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur in this respect—that I do not agree that Government should be committed to the particular line of action, which he has suggested in his resolution. He has suggested that special classes be opened in every school in this Presidency to give vocational, or whatever you may call it, and technical education. I do not think, Sir, that we should ask Government to commit themselves to that line of action, because I am not quite sure whether that is the practical way of meeting this demand. Workshops may be required and agricultural classes without farms attached to them will be useless. You will have to train teachers as well. I believe there are 600 schools in this Presidency, and I do not know whether you have got 60 competent teachers in this Presidency to teach the different branches of technical education, including agriculture. I think therefore, Sir, that this subject requires very careful consideration on the part of Government, and therefore Government should not be asked to commit themselves to a particular line of action, as suggested by my friend. Further, although I have suggested the appointment of a committee to advise Government in this matter, I think, Sir, that if the Government were to prepare a scheme with the aid of their experts, that is to say, to do the spade work, and publish it for the information not only of the members of this Council but also of the larger public outside, and ask for public opinion on the scheme prepared by Government, perhaps then it may be necessary, in the light of the opinions expressed both here and outside, to appoint a committee to co-ordinate the views that are expressed from different quarters. Therefore, I am prepared, if Government so desire, to omit that portion of my amendment which demands the appointment of a mixed committee at this stage. I am willing to defer it till a scheme is prepared and placed before the public, but I hope, Sir, that the scheme will not only be published, but will be laid before this Council for discussion, and I am sure this large and representative Council—representative of the different interests in this country and of all parts of the Presidency—will take the deepest interest in this question and will be in a position to offer their suggestions, and perhaps the Council may be inclined to appoint a mixed committee to consider the scheme prepared by Government.

I do not think it necessary to enlarge on the subject. The importance of the subject is, I am sure, admitted on all hands, and I do not think that any lengthy speech is necessary to impress it on the Government. I only hope that no time will be lost in giving effect to the wishes of the Council and of the public in this matter. Before the next autumn session of this Council I earnestly hope that a scheme will be published and placed before the Council for consideration.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): I intervene at this stage of the debate, as the object underlying this resolution and the amendment is acceptable to Government. The Government are as conscious of the urgency of this problem as the mover of the resolution and the amendment. As we are agreed that it is very desirable to prepare a scheme for the furtherance of vocational education, I and my friends over there talked over the matter informally, and at this stage I desire to place before the Council the amendment which, on behalf of Government, I am prepared to accept. The amendment is this: "That steps be taken for preparing a scheme for the furtherance of vocational education and that practical effect be given to such a scheme as early as possible." If the mover of the original resolution and the mover of the amendment would accept it, I do not propose to detain the Council by lengthening my remarks.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I thankfully accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): I think permission may be given to the mover of the resolution to amend his motion on the lines indicated by the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter. The amended resolution stands thus: "That steps be taken for preparing a scheme for the furtherance of vocational education and that practical effect be given to such a scheme as early as possible." The debate will now proceed on the basis of the amended resolution, if any one wants to speak.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I should like to make one observation in this connection. This very subject has just now been engaging the serious attention of all missionary bodies throughout this country. A commission which was appointed by the Conference of British Missionary Societies in England, presided over by Mr. A. J. Fraser, the son of the late Sir Andrew Fraser, after visiting America, the Philippines, Japan and Ceylon, made an all-India tour throughout this country and their report has now been issued. The booklet is entitled "The Village Education in India." I know that Mr. Hornell and the Hon'ble Minister in charge of Education are perfectly aware of this book. I mention for the general information of this Council that there is a large mass of information to be found in this book, and, if I mistake not, the subject will be taken up in right earnest at the end of this year by the National Missionary Council of India, when provincial reports will be taken up by this Council, and in this very book it has been suggested that there should be co-operation between Government on the one side and the missionary bodies on the other, in order to avoid re-duplication. Where there are well-equipped Government institutions they will be availed of by missionary bodies. I know a huge amount of money is likely to be spent on this subject. People in England are greatly interested in this, though of course this book has been written with one definite object in view, namely, the education and uplifting of the large masses of Indian Christians throughout the country; but the underlying principles are just the same and I hope that the Government will see their way to have some kind of co-operation with missionary bodies in this matter.

With these few remarks, I have very great pleasure in supporting the resolution as amended by the Hon'ble Minister in charge.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): I am in agreement in this matter with my colleague, the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter. I am prepared to have a scheme prepared for the furtherance of vocational education in consultation with him and with the expert heads of departments, such as the Director of Industries and the Director of Agriculture. This Government, Sir, are fully alive to the importance of vocational education, and have already initiated new developments in technical and agricultural education from which they expect satisfactory results. But I recognise the desirability of having a complete scheme drawn up to guide our future developments.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: May I inquire if it is the intention of Government to publish the scheme before giving effect to it?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: Government will have no objection to publish the scheme.

Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: Vocational education is an absolute necessity and should be introduced as soon as possible. It is admitted on all hands that vocational, agricultural, technical and industrial education should be imparted to our students. In the District Boards' Conference His Excellency the Governor has expressed the desire that arrangements should be made to introduce vocational training at certain stages of general education. The question of unemployment is a serious question. When poor parents see that their sons are not very useful members after giving them a costly course of education, their disappointment knows no bounds. I therefore support the amendment moved by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur for the formation of a committee on the lines suggested.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I thank the Hon'ble Minister in charge for his having kindly assured this Council of the preparation of a scheme for vocational education in Bengal. But I am sorry to say,

Sir, that the scheme has already been prepared by Government and the only course left to Government is nothing but to give effect to it as early as possible. It appears from an official report, Sir, that it was in the year 1908 that the Hon'ble Mr. J. G. Cumming recommended the establishment of a technological institute. Then in the year 1912, a Committee was appointed by Government to prepare a scheme. That Committee consisted of official and non-official representatives of the Calcutta University and the Calcutta Corporation. Then, Sir, in the following year, the Government of India represented the matter to the Government of Bengal and Colonel Atkinson and Mr. Dawson were requested to prepare a scheme, and I understand that a scheme was prepared. Then after a few months the Government suggested to Mr. Hornell to prepare a practical scheme, which has already been prepared. The only course left is to give effect to that scheme as early as possible. I am sorry to find, Sir, from an official report that a conference was convened in Belvedere last year and the result of the conference is not so hopeful as I had expected it to be.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: Is my friend speaking on resolution No. 30 about a technological institute?

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: No, I am speaking on the amendment. I beg to submit that instead of the word "early" I should say "immediate steps should be taken."

The PRESIDENT: You have not given notice of any amendment, and the mover of the amendment has accepted the Hon'ble Minister's amendment.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: What I beg to submit is that immediate steps should be taken to give effect to the scheme which has already been prepared by Government and that necessary provision be made in the Budget.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: After what has fallen from the Hon'ble Minister, it is not necessary to go into the details of the necessity of such an institution for this country. My only suggestion for the present to the Hon'ble Minister in charge will be that, like many other schemes that were prepared by Government and were dropped, this should not meet the same fate. It requires a tremendous lot of money and it will be absolutely necessary for the Minister in charge to find out the sources which will give him that much money necessary for the fulfilment of the object we have in view. I do not think I am competent to make suggestions, but I hope he will leave no stone unturned to make this scheme a success, even if it be necessary to borrow money for the purpose.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: I may assure Babu Amulya Dhone Addy that although the word "immediate" is not there, we shall not lose any time in preparing the scheme.

As regards the observations of Maulvi Ekramul Huq, I may say that we are fully conscious that, in order that the scheme may be effective, the financial side of it must not be ignored, and when the time comes and when the scheme is published, I shall deem it a great pleasure to have helpful suggestions not only from the members of this Council but from the public outside.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I know that the Hon'ble Minister in charge is fully aware of his responsibility, and I am quite confident that he will do all that lies in his power to give full effect to the scheme as early as possible.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I accept the amendment which has been suggested by the Hon'ble Minister, but as I have said, Sir, I understand—and I want it to be clearly understood,—at least that is my view,—that the scheme when prepared will be laid before the Council. There is another point on which I must lay special emphasis and that is this. Whatever scheme may be prepared by Government, I hope it will be a comprehensive scheme regardless of the money that is at present at the disposal of Government, either this year or next year; it may be a progressive scheme, like another university for imparting technical education in this Presidency. I hope that will be borne in mind and that the preparation of the scheme will not be restricted to the amount of money that may be at the disposal of Government. We want a complete scheme.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I am very thankful to the Minister in charge of Education for proposing certain modifications to the resolution which I have already submitted to the Council. There has been a discussion as to the meaning of the words "as early as possible." I take it that Government will give practical effect to the scheme not only in Calcutta but also in rural Bengal. Calcutta is not Bengal. So my object is that Government will be pleased to give full effect to the scheme which is under preparation as soon as possible in every part of the province.

With these words I again submit to the Minister and also to the Council that effect be given to the scheme as early as possible.

The amendment was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The amended resolution was then put and carried.

Postponement of Resolutions.

The PRESIDENT: I am sorry to say that Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur is ill and is absent from the Council. He has asked me to postpone his resolution about the establishment of an agricultural and technological institute, and under the proviso to rule 74 (2) I have agreed to postpone the resolution to the meeting of the 4th March.

The next resolution covers a large part of the ground of the resolution of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, and it is desirable that these two should be taken up together. The mover of the next resolution, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, has also agreed to postpone his resolution, and that is also postponed to the meeting of the 4th March.

Rai HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: May I inquire whether it would be within the power of anybody else to move the resolution in the absence of the proposer, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur?

The PRESIDENT: It is in my power to allow the resolution to be moved by another member or to postpone it, but having regard to the fact that I have already decided, to allow a postponement, I postpone the resolution.

Price Lists of Jute, etc.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: "This Council recommends to the Government to take steps to circulate in Bengali, to all the union boards, municipalities, and co-operative societies of Bengal, weekly statements of the price of jute, cotton, oilseeds and other country produce, prevailing in the foreign importing markets."

This is a very simple proposal, and I sincerely hope that the Council will accept this suggestion.

The main object with which I move this resolution is to give the agriculturists accurate information about the price of their commodities in foreign markets, so that they may not be cheated by, or placed at the mercy of, middlemen and profiteers, and also that they may decide on the basis of accurate information which crops to grow and to what extent. In short, I want the peasant to be placed on a footing of equal advantage in his dealings with the buyers of his produce, which he is not at the present time. In the course of the discussion about the resolution regarding the proposed restriction of the growth of jute at yesterday's Council meeting, I think, Sri Ashutosh Chaudhuri said that the cultivator was a shrewd and intelligent man and knew his business well. I quite agree with him as far as his shrewdness and common sense are concerned, but mere shrewdness does not carry a man very far. He must have knowledge and education, so that he may utilise his natural intelligence to the best advantage. But unfortunately our cultivators are lacking in that knowledge and information, which alone can guide them along the right way about their own business. How is the cultivator to get that knowledge and information? This Council well knows the extremely poor state of education that unfortunately prevails in this country. The peasant has practically hardly any education to speak of. If he were as well educated as his brethren in other countries, like England, America or Japan, then he might himself have studied the market reports and found out for himself what price his commodities were fetching in the foreign markets of the world. In America or Japan, the agriculturist always knows what price his produce is fetching in outside markets and can hold on or sell out according as circumstances require. The wheat and cotton growers of America always keep in touch with foreign market quotations and know their position fairly well, but here, in India and consequently in Bengal, the poor peasant is quite at the mercy of the middlemen. He does not know what price the merchant and middlemen are getting at the foreign importing markets for his goods, and he has to be content with whatever the middlemen choose to pay him. Is it not an extraordinary thing, Sir, that in Bengal, where jute is practically a monopoly of the cultivator, the price is dictated not by the cultivator but by the merchants and middlemen? It is all very well to trot out the threadbare argument of supply and demand but, whereas the merchants know what the supply is going to be, the producer does not know what the demand will be. What an unequal fight, and all this because a cultivator, though a shrewd man, has not the requisite knowledge.

The Government is already doing the arduous task of supplying useful information to the merchants and middlemen. The Bengal Government, through their Agricultural Department, take particular pains to publish forecasts of the supply likely to come into the market—forecasts, preliminary as well as final, of jute, cereals, pulses and oil-seeds. This is practically for the benefit of the foreign buyers and middlemen and is done in good time long before these products come into the market. Information is published mainly in English, which is Greek even to the educated agriculturist. The effect is that the foreign buyers are in a position of advantage, because they are able to anticipate what supplies they are going to have. If forecasts of supplies are to be published at all, I hope the Government will see that they are published in Bengali also. But what really concerns the producer of jute, cereals and oil-seeds is that a forecast of the demand of the foreign markets is also published, so that he may decide how much of any of these commodities he has to produce and bring to market with advantage, raising the price to the maximum and drawing the maximum amount of profit. These forecasts can be easily calculated, if foreign prices of commodities are compared from week to week and from year to year. For want of these guiding factors, the Bengal peasant has to produce blindly, often growing more or less of any commodity, so that he cannot sell all that he produces or falls short of what he might sell with the utmost advantage. This blindness is indeed one of the numerous causes of scarcity in India, for, as it often happens, and as it happened last year, the Bengal peasant produced more jute than there was market for. If the jute growers had always been supplied with information regarding the price of jute every year, he might easily have compared the price in March last with the price in the previous years and he would not have grown as much jute as he actually did. He would have produced more rice, and there might not have been any scarcity at all. Let us take the case of tea, for instance. The tea producer is always in touch with the foreign market-prices of tea and varies his supply accordingly. I know it to be a fact that on account of the dull state of the tea market this year, many gardens are deliberately producing less tea and some gardens have even burnt some of their stock of tea. If they had got no information about the price in foreign markets, they would have gone on blindly producing as much tea as they could and their position would have been much more critical than now. They would have been in the same boat as the peasants in Bengal, who grew jute and such other things.

Let us now turn to another aspect of the case. In reply to a question of mine, Government supplied me with figures, day before yesterday, about the export of the chief products of Bengal. I shall only quote the figures for the last official year.

In 1919-20, the quantity of raw jute exported was 586,168 tons, raw cotton, 26,738 tons, rice, 91,236 tons and oil-seeds, 160,843 tons. Total 8½ lakh tons, or about 2½ crore maunds of raw materials were exported.

I simply shudder to think what enormous profit the middlemen have made out of this huge amount of export. I know from the prices published in Commerce and some other papers that last year cotton, rice and oil-seeds were sold at a very high price in foreign markets. If the cultivators knew what the exact prices of these commodities were, he would certainly not have been at the mercy of the middlemen. If he could get an extra price of 4 annas per maund, he would have been richer by 60 lakhs of rupees. Let us pause to consider what this means. Does this Council wish that this 60 lakhs should go to the pocket of the middlemen or to the pocket of the peasant?

Yesterday the Council decided that Government should not interfere with the liberty of the cultivator in the matter of choosing which crop to grow. I have no quarrel with that decision, but surely, it is the duty of Government to supply the cultivator with accurate information as to what price his produce is getting in the foreign markets. In an agricultural country like Bengal, this seems to me to be the primary duty of Government. Let Government supply the information and then let the cultivator decide for himself which crop to grow and to what extent. Without this information, without this knowledge, the cultivator, with all his shrewdness, is just at the mercy of the foreign buyers, middlemen and profiteers.

Now the question arises how to supply this information to the cultivator. As I have said before, if the cultivator had education the matter would have been very much simplified, but unfortunately education in this country is extremely backward, and, until and unless things are materially changed, the cultivator cannot be approached directly. We can, however, take the help of the three agencies I have mentioned, which are in the closest touch with the people. Union boards and co-operative credit societies are mainly composed of educated agriculturists or their representatives. If these agencies are supplied with a list of prices every week in Bengali, these can reach the peasant in the village in the most convenient way possible. The co-operative credit societies and union boards have great potentialities for the improvement of the cultivator. The information about prices supplied to them will be a source of great power to the peasant. As regards townspeople and cultivators living in towns, they can be approached through municipalities, and therefore I have included these bodies in the scope of my resolution.

Then comes the question of cost and how to get the information. Papers like Commerce, Capital and some other papers get this information without much difficulty. Reuter's agency may be utilised by Government for this purpose. As far as I have been able to calculate, I think in the near future there would not be more than 10,000 union boards, co-operative societies and municipalities all combined together. During the 52 weeks in the year 5 lakhs of hand-bills would have to be sent out. Taking the postage at half an anna per hand-bill and the cost of staff, paper and printing I worked out the whole amount to about Rs. 30,000. This is really a very small sum considering the immense benefit that the majority of the agriculturists will derive from this scheme. With these words, I commend this resolution to the acceptance of the Council.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I need not hardly tell the Council that I have great pleasure in supporting the resolution which has just been placed before the House.

Yesterday I had the misfortune to bring before the House a resolution for the reduction of the area of sowings so far as jute was concerned. In the course of the debate it transpired that the sense of some of the members was that peasants were sufficiently capable of taking care of themselves and protecting their interests. Upon this resolution the Hon'ble Minister was pleased to make a statement that it was the look-out of the peasants themselves, that they understood their interests, and he expressed his sympathy with them on behalf of Government.

This resolution conveys a request to a sympathetic Government to supply information to the peasants regarding the price of jute, cotton, oilseeds, and other country produce. Let them have this information in order that they may protect their own interests. This is an extremely modest demand. Mr. Montagu and His Excellency the Viceroy have expressed the view—their deliberate conviction—that the peasants are steeped in ignorance, but the sense of this Council was the very reverse of it. I will assume that Mr. Montagu and His Excellency the Viceroy held an enormous view on the matter; but I venture to say with confidence that, in the absence of information as to what is the extent of the demand for his produce by the manufacturers and by the foreign ports, it is impossible for the cultivator to know what quantity it would be necessary to produce, in order that the demand and supply might balance each other. At the present moment the price of jute has dropped to the level of Rs. 5 per maund. As most of you know, a bigha of land produces only 5 maunds of jute, and calculating the value of this yield of jute at Rs. 5 per maund, we find that the peasant can get only Rs. 25 out of every bigha of land on which he grows jute. Look at the other side of the picture. If he grows paddy in that bigha of land what does he get? The yield of rice per bigha of land is 6 maunds at least; the peasants might get from 1 bigha of rice-grown land Rs. 42 calculating the price of rice at Rs. 7 per maund I refer to this matter only to show that the cultivators do not understand their own interests and that they do not get sufficient information on a subject upon which their very livelihood depends. There is no doubt that the supply is considerably in excess of the demand, and, if the peasants were taught to regulate their produce according to local and foreign demand, their position would not be so precarious and miserable.

My friend, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, in his resolution merely makes a demand for the supply of information to a class of men who have not the slightest tincture of education and who need it most.

With these words, I support this resolution.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: To my mind there cannot indeed be any question as to the importance of the resolution. It is absolutely necessary that the peasantry should know their own interests. The hon'ble the mover of the resolution aims at arming them against the cunning of the middlemen. Hitherto the peasants were quite an inarticulate class, but fortunately for them, through the support of their votes, many persons have been able to get a seat in the Council, and it is up to them, as the representatives of this inarticulate class, to press their interests before the House.

As the question of providing the peasantry with information as to the actual state of the market, in which their produce can fetch the best value, is an important one and necessary for their welfare, I hope the whole House will not at all find it difficult to agree to what is contained in the resolution of the mover and that Government will accept it.

Maulvi SHAH ABDUR RAUF: It is with great pleasure that I beg to support the resolution moved by Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta. One who has got any idea of the village life in Bengal and of the wretched condition of the agriculturists knows full well how these illiterate people are duped by middlemen who make a large profit out of the labours of these poor agriculturists. Moreover, these people are deep in debt and cannot sell their articles to their highest advantage; the mahajans to whom they are heavily indebted always buy up their produce at very cheap rates; now, if these agriculturists had any idea of the price of their produce, they could easily have disposed of them to their own advantage.

If this resolution is accepted by the Government and by the House as well, you will see what immense good will result from it.

In this connection, I would beg leave to suggest that in order to facilitate the receipt of these leaflets, over and above the three agencies mentioned in this resolution, the village headman of each thana, too, be provided with a leaflet so that it might reach the right quarters.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: My friend, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, has brought forward his proposal no doubt with the best of motives. Sir, coming here as a representative of this city, I am very loath to do anything or to take any step that might offend our mufassal friends and especially because I myself feel that I have not got that knowledge of the mufassal which members coming from the mufassal have. That is the reason why I am very diffident in my support or even in my opposition to this motion. But there is one thing which I have not been able to understand and I would like to say a few words upon that. My friend, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta (mover), and our friend Mr. Tarit Bhushan Roy, who has supported the motion, have been eloquent about the cultivators being enriched with this information; but what I have failed to understand is how leaflets, even if written in Bengali and circulated to the union boards, municipalities and co-operative societies, would reach the cultivators. I hope when my friend gets an opportunity to reply he will explain that to us.

Sir, nobody is more conversant than Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta with the fact that most of the cultivators are illiterate people. May I inquire from him how these illiterate people will be able to read, even if written in Bengali, the leaflets which he wants the Government to circulate? I personally feel that this may serve a good purpose only after we extend primary education and teach the cultivators the A.B.C. of the Bengali language. But before doing so, to issue leaflets even in our vernaculars, though it might be a good project, would not serve the purpose for which it is meant.

Then my friend has suggested that the expenditure would come up to Rs. 30,000. May I ask my friend to consider whether this sum could not be more usefully spent on spreading education among these people, so that within a short time they might improve by lessons of primary education and go to places where this information could be obtained for nothing? Under the conditions at present obtaining, I am afraid, that the leaflet which the unions and societies may receive will find their way to the waste paper basket; for if I am not far wrong, there must be a great gulf between union boards, municipalities and co-operative credit societies, and the cultivator, in the field.

I am very anxious, Sir, that these cultivators should not be despoiled of their just rights; nobody is more anxious in this matter than myself and I hope that every possible help will be given to these cultivators to produce and sell their articles to the greatest advantage to themselves. But the state of things has not so developed that any advantage can be gained from the proposal which the mover asks the Government to take up.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: I must oppose this resolution. It will be admitted that if such a statement is to be of any use at all, it must be accurate, intelligible and up to date. Government have no means of preparing such a statement. In the autumn of 1914, after the outbreak of war when the cultivators of Eastern Bengal were thrown into consternation by a collapse of the jute market, the Government of Bengal thought that the situation might be improved, if periodical statements showing the price of jute in Calcutta were circulated among the cultivators. The idea had to be abandoned owing to the difficulty of obtaining reliable figures. If this difficulty was felt in obtaining the Calcutta prices, it would be greatly enhanced in the case of the prices prevailing in foreign markets. The Director of Statistics compiles statements of the prices in certain foreign markets of a number of articles, including those enumerated in the resolution. But these statements are prepared from periodicals received by post. The figures are therefore belated and of value for statistical purposes only. Moreover, the prices quoted do not in many cases refer to articles of Indian origin. I do not think that the circulation of statements of the kind suggested by the mover would in any circumstances serve a practical purpose, but certainly it is not desirable that Government should circulate figures which may be out of date and misleading.

Certain information regarding the prices of Indian exports in foreign markets is cabled out to this country in Reuter's Foreign Market Reports. This information is already available to the public, as it is published in the daily papers. But it is of value mainly to the great wholesale and exporting firms of Calcutta and would be of no use to the cultivator. As an example, Sir, I quote the following report which was published recently under the heading "Jute":—"Daisee No. 2, new group Dundee, January-February £32-10-10, actuals, 1st marks Dundee January-February £36-10-0, sellers." Doubtless this report is of value to jute brokers and exporters, but I confess that it conveys no information to me, and even if it could be translated into intelligible Bengali, I am sure that it would neither benefit nor interest the cultivator. These, Sir, are the two sources from which an attempt might be made to compile a statement of the kind proposed, but I think it is clear that such a statement would be of no practical value to the classes among whom it would be circulated. The cost of preparing and circulating these statements to municipalities, union boards and co-operative societies (which alone number roughly 6,000) would be very considerable and would be money thrown away, while, as we have learned from the Budget which was presented to the Council on Monday, we are in no position to indulge in extravagances. In the circumstances which I have explained I hope that the mover will withdraw this resolution.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I am glad that I have got the support of the mufassal members; that was only natural; and I am most glad that I have heard the speech made by Dr. Haridhan Dutt; that is just what I expected from a Calcutta member. However, it is evident from what he has said, that he does not know what 6,000 co-operative societies are doing in Bengal. In these societies, taking on an average of nearly 30 members per society, there are nearly 2 lakhs of agriculturists who are taking advantage of these societies, who are learning through the office-bearers of those societies the benefits of co-operation. They are learning how banking is done, how to keep accounts and control expenditure and many other useful things from these societies. If these societies were conversant with information as to the daily price and fluctuations in the price of goods produced in this country, all these 2 lakhs of members would get the information the next day. Perhaps Dr. Haridhan Dutt does not know, that these co-operative banks sometimes get circulars in Bengali from the Department of Co-operative Societies; they circulate these to all members who are put in possession of all the information contained in these circulars. Every month, there are meetings of these societies, and the members discuss these matters; they then discuss with the village people in turn any information as to the fluctuations in the price of jute, oilseeds and other country produce. All this is of prime interest to them, and, if they know how the markets are fluctuating, they, in turn, inform the village unions. Perhaps my friend does not know that in the villages, in the cool of the evening after the day's work many of the people sit together over their hookahs and talk over these matters. I hope he is satisfied that this information, if supplied to all these co-operative societies, will be really circulated among the agriculturists.

As regards union boards, perhaps it is not known that they are composed entirely of the representatives of these agriculturists. They have been formed for the benefit of the agriculturists. If there is any cause for their existence at all, it is their duty to circulate information of this nature among the villagers. If they do not do this, there is no reason for their existence; they ought to be abolished.

Then he says that the motion is premature and that it ought to be taken up after primary education has been spread among the masses. If we are to wait till then, we will have to wait for a century. For example, I happen to be connected with one of the small municipalities—not anything so large as your Corporation—and there, along with

Mr. Biss, we discussed the problem of primary education for the small town of Comilla. We found that to start some small schools in Comilla, we required Rs. 24,000 capital expenditure and Rs. 10,000 recurring expenditure. The municipal commissioners decided that as water-works were more important, they could not now pay anything for primary education. Thus, the question of primary education has been dished, and is likely to be dished indefinitely if the municipalities are in need of money for other objects. So far as the Government are concerned, I am afraid Government will find it very hard to find any money for primary education, especially with a budget which shows a deficit of 2 crores.

Then, Sir, he says that Rs. 30,000, which I have suggested will be required for this purpose, might be utilised for primary education. This is a mere drop in the ocean. You cannot do anything with this sum, as the number of municipal towns, village unions and district boards is too numerous. Information through the co-operative societies will be of immense advantage to all the peasantry in Bengal.

I am sorry that the Minister in charge of Agriculture has thought fit to oppose this resolution. I never expected it. From what I can gather from the sense of the Council, the mufassal members, at least, are unanimously of opinion that such information would be of the greatest use to the peasantry. What are the grounds for opposing it? He says that the information would not be accurate, would not be intelligible. I believe, Sir, there is a Director of Statistics who is being paid a very high salary. What is he doing? His primary duty is to see that this information is accurate. The Minister says that the Director does get information, but that concerns produce which is not of Indian origin. What business has he to draw his pay from India, if he cannot supply particulars of articles of Indian produce? About prices, the Hon'ble the Minister has been pleased to say that if they were obtained by post, they would be out of date. I suggest that arrangements might be made with Reuter's Telegram Company to send this information by telegram. I believe that some of the newspapers, Commerce, Capital, etc., have made such an arrangement and they are able to get this information. I do not see why Government should not take this trouble for the benefit of the agriculturists; it is no trouble at all it is only part of their duty.

The Hon'ble the Minister in charge read out some reports which he said he could not himself understand. I confess, Sir, I do not understand these reports. The way in which these reports are published in the papers shows that they are not meant to be understood by the agriculturists. They are mainly for the benefit of the exporters; that is my complaint. I want them to be published for the benefit of our own men.

Then he said that the cost would be very considerable. What is the cost? I have myself made some calculations; I went to considerable trouble in making these calculations, and I find the amount is not more than Rs. 30,000. Surely this is not a very large sum to spend for the benefit of lakhs of agriculturists; Government spends 11 crores over a budget; surely they can afford to spend Rs. 30,000 for the agriculturists who represent the majority of the population of Bengal. An zamindar could spend Rs. 30,000 for the benefit of his own tenants. I cannot conceive why the Bengal Government should say that Rs. 30,000 is a big sum to spend for the benefit of so many agriculturists. It is not fair; it is intolerable.

With these words, I beg to commend the resolution for the acceptance of Government.

A division was then taken with the following result:—

The PRESIDENT: Before we adjourn, I may mention that I understand Mr. Kerr wishes to make a statement with reference to a matter which has been engaging the attention of the Council.

The Tramway Strike.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr Kerr): I am glad to be able to announce that the Calcutta Tramways strike has been settled. The terms of settlement are as follows:—

“The men will return to work to-morrow morning, with the exception of one driver whom the Company is not willing to take back.

“ Allowance will be made during the first week after work is resumed for those men who have gone home during the strike; men who resume duty within a week will receive on the 1st March, or as soon as possible thereafter, the pay for the days they worked during the month of January before the strike began.

“The Company will investigate the grievances set forth in the unsigned petition which was received by the Company on the 25th of January, and will announce their decision within one week of the resumption of work. If the men are dissatisfied with the Company's decision, Government will, within one week of receiving information as to such dissatisfaction from the representatives of the strikers, constitute a committee to investigate their grievances.”

I think these terms are satisfactory to both sides. There is one thing I should like to add. I know that this question has raised much interest both in this Council and outside it, and I am grateful to the Council for the forbearance they have shown in abstaining from discussing the matter while the negotiations were in progress.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to Monday, the 28th February, 1921, at 3 P.M.

THE BENGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

(Official Report of the First Session.)

VOLUME I—No. 4.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Monday, the 28th February, 1921, at 3 p.m.

Present :

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 98 nominated and elected members.

President's Speech.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda):

We meet here to-day under the shadow of a great misfortune. The greatest Bengali—nay, the greatest Indian of his age—passed away last night, leaving us to-day much poorer than we were when we last met. Sir Rash Behari Ghose was a man of whom any country in the world may be proud. In Bengal he has filled every place of honour, and, wherever he has gone, he has left the impress of a great and powerful mind. He was for years a member of the Bengal Legislative Council as well as of the Imperial Council. His work here as well as in the other Council is well known to the country. Of a life so eventful it is difficult to speak without preparation and it would be wrong to pick up only a few facts and to dwell on them. A great deal will be said, and from every platform, of his great personal qualifications and of the services which he rendered to the country. That task I would leave to others better fitted to discharge it. I was for over twenty-five years in intimate touch with him. I think I voice the sentiment of this Council and of the people of Bengal in general when I say that take any phase of his character, take him as a scholar, as a jurist, as a benefactor of his country, or as a patriot, he was the greatest Bengali of his age and towered far above the rest. Our only consolation is that he has died full of years and full of honours, and a grateful country mourns his loss. I propose with the permission of this Council to convey to his brother and through him to the other members of his family an expression of our great sympathy with them in their bereavement.

I ought also to mention that a representation was made to me by several members of this Council to adjourn the Council on this occasion. As I could find no precedent of this kind and this day was specially fixed by His Excellency for certain Government business, I did not see my way to adjourn the Council. I hope, however, you will show your respect for the deceased by carrying this resolution in silence standing in your places.

The resolution was carried in silence, all members standing.

Starred Question

(to which an oral answer was given).

Additional Legal Remembrancer.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to say whether it is true that a few years ago when the number of political *détenu*s and suspects was very large and their cases very complicated sanction was obtained from the Secretary of State for the creation of a special post under the designation of "Additional Legal Remembrancer" to deal exclusively with political cases at a salary of Rs. 3,500 a month?

(b) Is it true that on the release of the *détenu*s on a general amnesty by His Majesty the King-Emperor and for want of a sufficient number of political cases this officer is now being employed in ordinary criminal cases?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking early steps to abolish this special post?

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): (a) The Additional Legal Remembrancer was appointed to deal not only with political cases but also with cases of organised crime, of commercial fraud and with such other important prosecutions as might be entrusted to him by Government. The pay of the post was at first Rs. 2,500 a month, which was recently been increased to Rs. 2,500—100—3,000 a month. His present salary is Rs. 2,900.

(b) He is employed in important criminal prosecutions relating to organised crime and commercial fraud and also difficult and important cases of the Excise Department.

(c) The retention of this post for one year from 1st February, 1921, has been sanctioned by the Government of India recently. The question whether the post should be abolished or retained and, if so, in what form, will be examined in the light of further experience.

Unstarred Questions

(answers to which were laid on the table).

Expenses of the Bengal Secretariat.

1. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the expenses of the Bengal Secretariat, including the superior, ministerial and menial staffs of each Department for the Reserved and Transferred subjects separately under the following heads:—

- (i) designation of office;
- (ii) salary of each officer, with allowance, if any;
- (iii) whether held by European or Indian?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): It is impossible to show the expenses of each Department for the Reserved and Transferred subjects separately, as some Departments deal with both Reserved and Transferred subjects. A statement is laid on the table, showing the cost of the establishment of each Department.

Malaria in the Vishnupur subdivision.

2. Mr. AJAY CHUNDER DUTT: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, are being taken for the suppression of malaria in the subdivision of Vishnupur?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the number of deaths from all causes that occurred in the subdivision of Vishnupur during the last three years, specifying the number of deaths in each year?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): (a) The District Board of Bankura contemplates the appointment from next year of two itinerant doctors who will for the most part work in the subdivision of Vishnupur and distribute quinine amongst the poor. The Board also propose to treat school children in a selected area of the subdivision with prophylactic doses of quinine during next year. There are seven dispensaries in the subdivision, and during the last three years 112, 143 and 131 pounds respectively of quinine were distributed in the form of medical treatment to malaria patients attending them. During 1919-20 Government made a grant of 34 pounds of quinine and 66 pounds of cinchona febrifuge to assist the local authorities, in 1920-21 a similar grant of 38 pounds of quinine and 76 pounds of cinchona febrifuge was made by Government.

As soon as the union boards are formed within the subdivision the District Board propose to depute their Sanitary Inspector to help the union boards to adopt measures for the improvement of sanitation in their respective areas.

(b) The figures are reported by the Sanitary Commissioner to be as follows:—

Year	Number of deaths
1918	22,942
1919	11,035
1920	9,608

Irrigation works in the Vishnupur subdivision.

3. Mr. AJOY CHUNDER DUTT: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state what progress, if any, has been made in the irrigation works which have been undertaken by the Salbund, Deshbund and Bankada Irrigation Societies in the subdivision of Vishnupur, as also the period within which the said works may be expected to be completed.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): There is a proposal to establish a Co-operative Society at Salbund to prepare and maintain a dam for irrigation purposes. On the 4th December, 1920, the Superintending Engineer, Central Circle, wrote that he would give the District Engineer instructions for the preparation of the project. The applicants for the registration of the Society are awaiting the detailed plans before subscribing their shares.

The Bankada irrigation scheme has been abandoned after inquiry by the Assistant Registrar, and the plan and estimate of the scheme put forward by the Deshbund Irrigation Society are being examined by the District Engineer.

Projects of the Sanitary Board.

4. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state which of the recommended projects of the Sanitary Board the Government contemplate carrying out in 1921-22 and at what approximate cost?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: A statement is laid on the table.

Water hyacinth.

5. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries been drawn to the difficulty and inconvenience of communication caused to the people and the damage done to the crops by water hyacinth?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what steps have already been taken and what further steps Government contemplate taking to exterminate this danger?

(c) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister been drawn to the pollution of drinking water by the water hyacinth?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that this pollution is a contributory cause to the periodical outbreaks of cholera and other epidemics which occur in these parts of Bengal?

(e) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what steps are being taken to preserve tanks from the encroachment of the plant?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a), (b) and (c) The member is referred to the answers given to the unstarred questions Nos. 26 and 34 asked by Mr. Tarit Bhushan Roy, M.L.C., and Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, M.L.C., respectively, at the Council meeting held on the 7th February last.

(b) The answer is in the negative. Cholera is contracted by swallowing a germ derived from the discharges of a cholera patient or carrier, most frequently in polluted water, but sometimes in contaminated food. The disease is almost invariably spread in Bengal by water polluted with human excreta, and, so far as Government are aware such pollution is not effected by the presence of water hyacinth. So far as malaria is concerned, it is possible that water hyacinth may be of some value, for water thickly covered with it rarely shows anopheles larvæ.

(c) Copies of Revenue Department circulars Nos. 5381-85, dated the 3rd July, 1919, and Nos. 2107-11 Agri., dated the 26th February, 1920, are laid on the table. The following extracts from the reports of the Commissioners of Divisions on the working of district boards in 1919-20 show the action taken by district boards:—

Burdwan Division The attention of the district boards was drawn during the year to the desirability of adopting by-laws on the lines of that adopted by the Dacca district board for the eradication of water hyacinth. The Burdham and Hooghly district boards have decided to frame by-laws accordingly, and their applications for the necessary sanction are awaited. While proposing tentatively to adopt a similar by-law, the Midnapore district board is inclined to doubt the legality of the rule, and it has asked for the advice of the Government pleader in the matter. The board is also inclined to think the task stupendous. The necessity for taking action in the matter is however obvious.

Presidency Division Practically no progress was made during the year towards removing this pest, except within the jurisdiction of the Sadar local board in the district of Nadia, where it was removed from a bil at a cost of Rs. 25 only. On receipt of the Bengal Government, Agricultural Department letter Nos. 5381-85, dated the 3rd July, 1919, the district boards of the 24-Parganas and Murshidabad requested the local boards and union committees to induce the villagers to take steps for the eradication of the plants from the waterways within district board areas, but no reports have been received from them regarding the result of their efforts in this direction. The people in the 24-Parganas looked to the district board for allotment of special funds for the purpose, as most of them are not in a position to bear the necessary expenses. The District Engineer, 24-Parganas, issued instructions to his subordinates to remove the plants from roadside drains. It is reported that this was done in certain places, but unless they are removed from private lands and bils there can hardly be any permanent improvement. The Jessore district board is collecting information with a view to preparing a comprehensive scheme for the eradication of the plants from the waterways under the control of the district board. The channel from Afra Trimohuni down to the Singia railway station within this district is full of water hyacinth. The Eastern Bengal Railway Company is vitally interested in this channel, and the District Magistrate has asked the Agent of the Eastern Bengal Railway to take steps for the destruction of the plants from the channel in question.

The district boards of Nadia and Murshidabad are of opinion that no good results can be achieved in the matter unless some sort of legal compulsion is put upon the people. The district boards of Murshidabad and Khulna are considering the desirability of adopting a by-law similar to that framed by the Dacca district board in accordance with the instruction of Government contained in their letter No. 2408 Agriculture, dated the 26th February, 1920. Copies of this Government letter have been forwarded to all the district boards of this division on 2nd March last.

Rajshahi Division. The district board of Rangpur spent Rs. 75 for the removal of water hyacinth in the Gaibandha and Nilphamari subdivisions. Nothing was spent by any other district boards under this head.

The Pabna district board proposed to adopt a by-law similar to the one framed by the Dacca district board for the destruction or removal of water hyacinth.

Dacca Division. The chairman of the Mymensingh district board reports:- "From the part estimates prepared by the District Engineer it was found that the cost of destroying the weeds from khals and bils in the district would certainly be not less than 1 lakh. It was, therefore, practically impossible for the board either to finance or to carry out a scheme of complete eradication without any legal power and the assistance and co-operation of the zamindars and tenants of the district. Besides, it was thought that partial eradication of the weed in any area would be of no use unless all the neighbouring authorities and the public work in conjunction."

The district board of Faridpur spent about Rs. 4,000 for the purpose of eradicating water hyacinth in the Kumar river from Talma to Fatepur and Bhanga to Balogram, where the traffic was almost stopped in April, 1919. In September and October last, when the price of rice grew abnormally high, the distress in Kotwalipara became keen and the Board advanced Rs. 2,000 to clear water hyacinth in khals of Kotwalipara in the shape of relief work.

Except removing the plants growing in some of the important district board khals in Bakarganj, no systematic attempt could be made for destroying this pest. The District Engineer of Bakarganj reports that unless the adjoining districts, viz., Dacca, Faridpur, Mymensingh and Khulna, from which the plants are spreading over that district with the tide, join them and work on one plan, it is not possible to destroy it. It is reported that, if necessary, the Bakarganj board shall approach the Divisional Commissioner for holding a conference of all the district boards in the division for the purpose of working out a joint plan on action.

The report of the district board of Dacca is silent on this point."

The following extracts from the reports of the Commissioners of Divisions on the working of municipalities in 1919-20 show the action taken by municipalities:

Burdwan Division In the Serampore and Rishra-Konnagar municipalities the Ryland channel and municipal tanks were cleared of water hyacinth and notices were issued on private persons to do away with the water hyacinth and complied with. In the Uttarpara, Bardyabati, Bhadreswar and Arambagh municipalities steps were taken to eradicate the water hyacinth and in the Arambagh municipality some private tanks infested with the pest were also cleared. In the Bansberia municipality the water hyacinth, which existed within the municipality, has almost been destroyed and the Commissioners have framed a by-law on the lines of the by-law adopted by the Dacca district board for the eradication of water hyacinth which has been sent up to Government for confirmation. No steps were taken by the Hooghly-Chinsura and the Kotrung municipalities, as no water hyacinth is said to be found in these municipalities.

Since the close of the year the Ghatal municipality in Midnapore has decided to adopt a by-law for the eradication of water hyacinth. No report on the point has so far been received from the other municipalities, whose attention is being drawn to the matter.

Presidency Division—In the Maniktala municipality eight notices under section 200 of the Bengal Municipal Act were issued, of which six are reported to have been complied with. Steps were taken to eradicate water hyacinth, which appeared in an old tank within the Kustia municipality. In the other municipalities in the district of Nadia and in the municipality of Jessore no water hyacinth is reported to have been found. In the Kandi municipality no special measures had to be taken, except formal requests and notices on private owners to eradicate the pest which has not yet got a firm hold on the waterways and tanks. No water hyacinth is now noticeable, as, owing to the prolonged drought, the shallow waterways have dried up. In the remaining municipalities no measures were taken to eradicate the pest during the year.

Rajshahi Division No systematic action was taken by any municipality to eradicate water hyacinth. The Bogra municipality has drawn up a draft by-law on the subject and Rampur Boalia is the only municipality which did something by clearing two ditches. There is no water hyacinth within the municipalities of Jalpaiguri, Dinajpur, Rangpur, Pabna, English-Bazar, Old Malda, Nawabganj, Sirajganj, Darjeeling and Kurseong.

Circulars referred to in reply to unstarred question No. 5 (c)

Nos. 5381-85 Agri., dated Calcutta, the 3rd July, 1919

From—The Hon'ble Mr. M. C. MACPHERSON, I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Revenue Department,

To—All Commissioners of Divisions.

I am directed to address you on the subject of eradicating the water hyacinth (Eichhornia Crassipes) known also as the "blue devil," kachuri, lagori, or bilati para, wherever it is found in the Presidency.

2 The proxivities and dangers of the plant are now well known, that there has been a considerable increase within recent years is a matter of common knowledge.

For some time past, the best methods of checking the spread of the pest have been under the consideration of the Agricultural Department. Apart from the use of its leaves as fodder, though their nutritive value is low, and its more obvious use as fuel, two methods have been found in the extended destruction and utilization by the people of the plant, either dried and rotted for use as a fertilizer, or in the manufacture of ash from a certain type of it for the same purpose or for sale for the extraction of potash. The plant is peculiarly suitable for this purpose, because, although 95 per cent. of it is composed of water, its characteristic constituent is potash. This has been amply confirmed by experiment. When the weed cannot be profitably used, the only suitable method of extermination is by burning every particle of it.

3 Copies of a pamphlet issued by the Government of India, a Press Communiqué, dated the 25th June, 1917, a pamphlet prepared by Mr. R. S. Finlow, the Fibre Expert, dated the 9th November, 1917, and of a notice issued recently by the Agricultural Department on the subject of the "water hyacinth" are forwarded for your information and of the District Officers, District Boards and Municipalities in your Division. Your attention is also invited to a Pusa Bulletin No. 71 of 1917 entitled "Water hyacinth—its value as a fertilizer" by R. S. Finlow, B.Sc., F.R.C., and K. McLean, M.Sc. From the agricultural point of view, the use of the whole plant as a fertilizer is the most suitable means of the disposal of the weed. Something has already been done on those lines. Demonstrations of its value have been made through the agency of the panchayats in the district of Dacca, and the Director of Agriculture is being requested to make arrangements where practicable, for demonstration in other districts where the water hyacinth is a pest. The commercial value of the ash of a certain type of the weed when properly treated has also been demonstrated by the Agricultural Department. A considerable amount of ash has been made out of the plant, but its commercial use has been restricted by the difficulty of making a proper selection of the weed, of affording proper treatment and of preventing adulteration in addition to the high freight due to the large bulk of the ash which is required for the production of a small amount of potash. The weed can only be used economically, therefore, in the following ways:—

- (1) as a fertilizer;
- (2) in the form of ash as a fertilizer,
- (3) as fodder; and
- (4) as fuel.

4 On the other hand, though, according to the latest reports, an increasing quantity of the plant is being used by the people in certain areas as a fertilizer, and, in particular, as fodder for cattle and also as fuel, I am directed to remove any impression there may be that the above measures for the utilization of the weed are likely to result in the complete clearing out of the channels, water-courses and pools in Bengal or in preventing the insidious increase of a pest which has taxed the energies and resources of other countries to eradicate. The Governor in Council desires to emphasize the fact that the danger from its growth is such that prompt extermination is the first consideration and that the question of its utilization, where it can be done without fear of the plant being exploited and fostered for commercial gain, must give place to that of its complete extinction. The proper agencies for such extermination are the local bodies, such as District Boards, Local Boards, Union Committees and the Municipalities. His Excellency in Council is accordingly of opinion that, whether or not arrangements can be made to use the plant profitably, it is the duty of these local bodies to eradicate the pest by all means in their power.

I am, therefore, to request you to impress upon the District Boards, Local Boards, Union Committees and Municipalities in your Division, wherever and immediately the pest appears, the necessity of taking prompt and active measures for the complete eradication of the water hyacinth, in particular, from all waterways, the progress made thereon should be reported in their annual reports. I am to add that action is already being taken by the Public Works Department for the extinction of the plant in canals and *khal*s maintained by Government or declared under the Canals or Embankment Act.

No. 2107 H Agri. dated Calcutta, the 26th February, 1920

From—The Hon'ble Mr. M. C. McARTHUR, I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Revenue Department,

To—All Commissioners of Divisions

I am directed to refer to this Department circular Nos. 5381-85, dated the 3rd July, 1919, in which you were requested to impress upon the District Boards, Local Boards, Union Committees and Municipalities in your Division, the necessity of taking prompt and active measures for the eradication of water hyacinth, wherever it appears, and in particular from all waterways in Bengal.

2. I am now to forward, herewith, a copy of a letter No. 16596, dated the 12th December, 1919, from the Agent, Bengal-Nagpur Railway, from which it will be seen that in spite of the efforts made by the Company to eradicate the pest from certain railways lands, the lands have become re-infected on account, it is reported, of the want of co-operation on the part of the Civil authorities. [I am, therefore, to request that you will be so good as to impress upon the local authorities concerned in your Division the need of taking concerted measures in any campaign against the pest.] For all Commissioners excepting Burdwan.

[I am, therefore, to request that you will take steps to concert such measures as may be necessary to secure co-operation between the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company and the local authorities in the matter of eradication of the pest. In this connection a copy of my letter No. 2115 Agri., dated the 26th February, 1920, in reply to the Agent, Bengal-Nagpur Railway, is forwarded for your information.] For Burdwan Commissioner only.

3. In this connection I am also to invite your attention to the new by-law (copy enclosed) framed by the Dacca District Board for the destruction or removal of water hyacinth from all lands and waterways in their occupation and to suggest that a by-law on similar lines may be adopted elsewhere.

By-law.

Any person having possession of, or control over, any land or water on or in which there exists any water hyacinth shall, if so required by a notice in writing signed by the Chairman or Vice-Chairman of the District Board, a Local Board or a Union

Committee, or by the District Engineer, destroy or remove such water hyacinth within the period mentioned in such notice. Provided that such notices

- (a) shall be issued simultaneously for the whole of an area to be defined by the District Board, a Local Board or a Union Committee and bounded by rivers or large khals, and
- (b) shall not be issued oftener than once a year.

Technological School in Calcutta.

6. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state when the School of Technology in Calcutta will be ready to begin the practical work of training?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: It is expected that the Calcutta Technical School will be ready to begin work in June, 1922.

Primary and Middle English Schools in Manikganj and Tangail.

7. Ex-soldiers of the 49th Bengali Regiment.

8. Maharaja KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state what steps have been taken to provide the ex-soldiers of the 49th Bengali Regiment with suitable posts?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the names and appointments of all such ex-soldiers as have been actually provided?

(c) If all these men have not been provided, will the Government be pleased to state whether they are considering it advisable to provide them with posts in the police department as assistant sub-inspectors or with higher appointments, in preference to others?

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) Attention is invited to the Government resolutions No. 2184 P.—D. of the 27th July, 1918, and No. 2706 P.—D of the 22nd September, 1919, announcing concessions in the matter of securing civil appointments under Government to those persons who rendered service in connection with the war.

In carrying out the policy announced in these resolutions the Bengal Employment and Labour Board was used as an Employment Bureau for discharged Bengali soldiers, and up to the 31st March, 1920, when the Board was dissolved, employment had been found for 421 discharged Bengali soldiers, of whom 395 obtained appointments in the service of Government. Since then the Political Department has been continuing the work of helping men discharged from military service to secure employment. The claims of candidates with a record of war service are put forward for vacant appointments under Government and also private employers.

(b) Details of all names and appointments have not been kept, but from inquiries made up to October last it has been ascertained that 779 appointments have been secured for persons with war service. Separate figures for ex-soldiers of the 49th Bengalis are not available. The figures are not a complete record of employment obtained, as all appointments made are not reported to Government.

(c) The policy of preferential treatment for persons who have rendered war service announced in the resolution of the 22nd September, 1919, is still being carried out, and the claims of those applicants qualified to be assistant sub-inspectors of police are brought to notice, but all are not necessarily suitable and it would be impossible to guarantee the employment of all.

Report of the ministerial officers salary committee.

9. Maharaja KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state when the report of the ministerial officers salary committee is likely to be published and when the Government propose to give effect to their recommendations?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The Committee have been instructed to submit their report by the 31st March, 1921. Until the report is received it is not possible to state whether it will be published or from what date effect will be given to any measures which may be decided upon in consequence of the recommendations of the Committee. A provision of Rs. 45 lakhs has been proposed in the Budget for the purpose of improving the pay of ministerial and menial establishments during the year 1921-22.

Broad gauge railway line between Ranaghat and Santipur.

10. Maharaja KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state whether the construction of the broad gauge railway line between Ranaghat and Santipur has been sanctioned?

(b) If so, when is the actual work of construction of the line likely to be taken up?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether it is in the contemplation of Government to open a railway line from Krishnagar to Jellinghee via Meherpur?

(d) If so, when is the work likely to be taken up?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur)

(a) and (b) The Government of Bengal have no information later than the announcement contained in Government of India, Railway Department (Railway Board), notification No. 605 P.—16, dated the 20th August, 1920, which was republished as Calcutta Gazette notification No. 6R., dated the 31st August, 1920, to the effect that a further detailed survey for a line of railway on the broad gauge from Churni Bridge on the Lalgola Branch of the Eastern Bengal Railway to Santipur has been sanctioned.

(c) and (d) The reply is in the negative.

Cost of the Administration of Justice.

11. Colonel A. J. PUGH: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state the approximate annual income of the Bengal Government under the head of Administration of Justice (including Judicial Stamps), and also the approximate annual expenditure under the same heads.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: Statement of receipts and charges of the Civil and Criminal Courts for three years 1917-1919 is laid on the table. The figures for 1920 are not available at present.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 11 of receipts and charges of the Civil and Criminal Courts for the three years 1917-19.

Electoral roll for Europeans.

12. Colonel A. J. PUGH: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department been drawn to the unsatisfactory manner in which the electoral roll of Europeans entitled to a vote for the Bengal Legislative Council was prepared?

(b) Who was the officer responsible for the preparation of a correct roll at the last election?

(c) What were the materials from which he prepared that roll?

(d) Were any steps taken to check the results, especially by verifying the income-tax returns?

(e) If so, what was done? and by whom?

(f) What list of income-tax payees was submitted by the Income-tax Department to the registering officer?

(g) What is the number of European employees whose income-tax was paid to the Collector of Income-tax by their firms for the year ending March, 1920?

(h) Was any separate register kept of such payees?

(i) Was such register sent to the registering officer to enable him to include such payees?

(j) Were such employees included in the electoral roll?

(k) Is the Hon'ble the Member able to give the total number of Europeans in the Presidency and Burdwan Divisions who paid—

(i) income-tax; and

(ii) rates and taxes to the Corporation?

(l) If so, will the Government be pleased to give the figures?

(m) Are the Government contemplating introducing machinery for carrying out the functions of revising barristers in England, so that a complete and corrected roll may be available at any moment an election becomes necessary?

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) There are three European constituencies of the Bengal Legislative Council, viz., the Presidency and Burdwan, the Dacca and Chittagong, and the Rajshahi constituencies. In October of last year the attention of Government was drawn to the unsatisfactory nature of the electoral roll of the first of these constituencies, but no complaints have been received in regard to the rolls of the other two.

(b) The registering authority was responsible in each case for the preparation of the roll, the actual work of compilation being done by District Officers and, for Calcutta, by the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation. The registering authorities were the Member of the Board of Revenue, the Commissioner of the Dacca Division, and the Commissioner of the Rajshahi Division, respectively.

(c), (d), (e) and (f) Under instructions from Government the rolls were prepared in the following manner. A combined list was prepared of Europeans and Anglo-Indians who were qualified as electors under the rules, that is to say, by the occupation of a building, or the payment of municipal or cantonment taxes or fees, or by the payment of income-tax, or by reason of a military qualification. A separate list was prepared under each head of qualification, and a combined list was made therefrom after eliminating duplicate entries. The Collector of Income-tax compiled a list of income-tax payers in Calcutta, and forwarded it to the office of the Corporation, where it was combined with the municipal list. Similar lists of those resident outside Calcutta, who had paid income-tax in Calcutta, were forwarded to District Officers.

As there is no official record of Europeans, as distinct from Anglo-Indians, a letter was addressed to each person named in the combined list, giving the definitions for the purpose of the franchise, of the terms "European" and "Anglo-Indian," and requesting him to indicate on a postcard enclosed, on which electoral roll he believed himself to be entitled to be entered. From the replies received the European electoral roll was prepared, but as answers were not received from approximately half the persons addressed, there were unavoidably some instances of omission and wrong entry.

The draft rolls so prepared were then published, and 15 days were allowed for the admission of claims and objections. Very little use was made by the public of this opportunity of correcting mistakes and omissions in the rolls. Subsequently, when the attention of Government was drawn to the matter, another period of ten days was allowed, and though this fact was advertised widely through the Chamber of Commerce and otherwise, the response was not very marked.

It will be understood that the official records from which the rolls were compiled were designed and are maintained for purposes other than the preparation of electoral rolls, and that in view of the limited time the only course was to make the best use of the material available.

(g) It is impossible to answer this part of the question because Government have no means of knowing who are Europeans as defined in the electoral rules.

(h), (i) and (j) It is understood that firms who pay income-tax on behalf of their employees are required to submit a return showing the names of such employees and the amount of income-tax paid in respect of each.

These returns, it is believed, are generally but not invariably furnished by firms. The names of the employees, so far as they were contained in the returns, were included in the lists furnished by the income-tax authorities, and were inserted in the rolls.

(k) and (l) Here, again, it is impossible to give the information required for the reason given against (g).

(m) The electoral rules, as approved by Parliament, prohibit any alteration of an electoral roll so long as it remains in force, which is normally for three years. The question of the preparation and revision of future electoral rolls will receive the consideration of Government in due course.

Pay and prospects of sub-deputy collectors.

13. Maulvi RAFIUDDIN AHMED: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to inform the Council what were the recommendations that were made to the Government of India for the improvement of the pay and prospects of sub-deputy collectors?

(b) Have the Government received the final order of the Government of India on their recommendation?

(c) If not, when do they expect to receive the final order?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) As the question is still under correspondence with the Government of India the proposals of this Government cannot be laid on the table.

(b) No.

(c) Government have no information as to when final orders may be expected.

Alleged oppression of tenants by zamindars.

14. Maulvi RAFIUDDIN AHMED: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to say what was the revenue of the Government of Bengal in the year 1793 when the Permanent Settlement was granted to the zamindars of Bengal, and what is the revenue at present?

(b) What was the amount of rent realised by the zamindars when the Permanent Settlement was granted?

(c) What is the amount of rent now realised by the zamindars from the tenants?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of giving permanent right in the lands to the tenants in Bengal?

(e) Are the Government considering the desirability of putting a stop to the amount of increment in the rents by amending the several sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE | LAND REVENUE | (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan):

(a) The member is referred to page 258 of Harrington's "Analysis of Laws and Regulations," Volume II, where it is shown that about the time when the Permanent Settlement was made the revenue of Bengal amounted to 1,90,40,380 sicca rupees or 2,03,12,543 Company's rupees. Bengal as it was known at that time does not, however, correspond in area with the presidency as it is constituted at present.

The present revenue demand of this presidency is Rs. 2,76,47,171.

(b) The information is not available.

(c) Rs. 13,04,29,453.

(d) and (e) No.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: Is it a fact that the figures in the answer are calculated on the amount of cesses which include those on rent-free holdings?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I should like to have fresh notice of this question.

Alleged exclusion of an Anglo-Indian from appointment in the Provincial Executive Service.

15. Mr. H. BARTON: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state what action, if any, is being taken on the representation by the Anglo-Indian and Domestic European Association (Bengal), Ltd., regarding the exclusion from amongst those gentlemen appointed to be deputy magistrates and deputy collectors on probation, of an Anglo-Indian lad, although nominated by the Commissioner and Collector of the Dacca Division, and in spite of the further fact that his educational qualifications are of a higher standard than the educational qualifications of those who were given promotion?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: The application of the gentleman in question and the subsequent representation of the Association were considered in connection with the selections ultimately made, but it was held that others had better claims. It is understood that his application for the Educational Department will be dealt with in due course by the selection committee.

Preventive Officers of the Customs Preventive Service.

16. Mr. H. BARTON: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Finance Department be pleased to say whether it is a fact that in certain cases senior Preventive Officers of the Customs Preventive Service, Calcutta, though admittedly capable and although they had filled certain higher appointments satisfactorily in an officiating capacity, have been superseded for permanent promotion to the same appointments?

(b) Was this order of supersession passed on the ground that it was considered that their appearance was against them?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of calling for the papers bearing on all cases of supersession with a view to protecting senior Preventive Officers against such hardships?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the supplementary recommendations by the Collector of Customs, as affecting the recent revision of pay of the Customs Preventive Service, have been accepted by the Government of India and how soon a notification might be expected?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) and (b) The Collector of Customs reports that no such cases have occurred

(c) No.

(d) The matter is under the consideration of the Government of India and it is not possible to say when orders will be received

Rules under section 35 of Bengal Act VI of 1920.

17. Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether any rules have been framed under section 35 of Bengal Act VI of 1920?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to lay on the table the rules framed or draft thereof, if any?

(c) If no rules have been framed, when are such rules likely to be framed?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Draft rules have been framed and published for criticism

(b) and (c) The member is referred to the draft rules published on pages 322-332 of the Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette of the 9th February, 1921.

Agricultural and dairy farms.

18. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state the number of district agricultural farms that are being maintained at Government expense?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to lay on the table a statement in tabular form showing the expenses incurred on account of each of these farms and the income derived from the sale of their produce during the last calendar year?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether all district agricultural farms are conducted mainly for experimental purposes?

(d) Is there any Government agricultural farm managed with a view to show what profit can be earned by improved methods of agriculture?

(e) If the answer to (d) is in the negative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether the Government are proposing to start such farms?

(f) Are there any dairy farms attached to the district agricultural farms?

(g) If the answer to (f) is in the negative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether Government are considering the desirability of starting such dairy farms in the immediate future?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI Khan Bahadur: (a) Seven.

(b) A statement supplying the information is laid on the table.

(c) No. For the present, experiment in the true sense of the word is confined as far as possible to the central farms at Dacca and Chinsura.

(d) It is one of the objects of the district agricultural farms to show that increased profits can be earned by improved methods of agriculture but no farm is managed with a view to showing a profit on its working.

(e) The scheme in regard to the future development of farms provides for a demonstration and seed farm in each district. In the latter the results of experiments which have been successfully carried out at the central experimental stations will be tested under the varying conditions of each particular district. These farms will also constitute the centre for all agricultural activity in the district. In some district subsidiary privately owned seed farms are already springing up, which depend on the district farm for seed and advice and for the training of their farm hands.

(f) No.

(g) No.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 18 (b), showing the receipts and expenditure of the farms under the Department for the year ending the 31st December, 1920.

(b) Excludes the value of Katakata and Indrasail paddy seeds amounting to Rs 4,156-5- made over to the Seed Store.

(c) Newly started farms.

Platform to the Azimaganj city railway station.

19. Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state what order, if any, has been passed on the representation made some time ago to Government by the local public praying for the provision of a platform to the Azimganj city railway station (Nalhati Branch, East Indian Railway)?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: The member is referred to the answer given to unstarred question No. 34 by the Hon'ble Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on 1st July, 1920.

Railway line from Sainthia through Kandi subdivision.

20. Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state the reasons which have delayed the taking up of the construction of the proposed railway line from Sainthia, East Indian Railway, which will run through the subdivision of Kandi in the Murshidabad district?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: Construction cannot be started until the Railway Board have come to a final decision in regard to the alignment and until that alignment has been surveyed in detail and a project sanctioned.

The Government of Bengal have expressed preference for the northern-most of two alignments between Berhampore and Bhairamara, which were suggested as alternatives, as a result of a reconnaissance survey of the locality.

The Government of Bengal understand that the detailed survey required to complete the project has been deferred owing to want of funds during the financial year 1921-22.

Receipts of railway fares on the Eastern Bengal Railway system.

21. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the actual railway receipts in fares received during the last three years separately from 1st, 2nd, intermediate and 3rd class passengers, respectively, in the Eastern Bengal Railway system?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: The member is referred to pages 34 and 38 of Appendix 6, Volume II, of the Administration Report for the year 1919-20 on Railways in India, published by the Government Central Press, Simla.

Ad-interim allowances to ministerial officers of the Settlement Department and inclusion of that Department into the scope of salary revision committee.

22. Maulvi RAFIUDDIN AHMED: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Revenue Department be pleased to state whether the clerks in the Settlement Department have got any share in the grant of rupees fifteen lakhs sanctioned as temporary allowance to ministerial officers in Government Resolution No. 13631 F., dated the 1st September, 1920? If not, why not?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the present Salaries Committee will also inquire and report about the pay and prospects of the ministerial officers of the Settlement Department? If not, why not?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) No. The clerks of the Settlement Department belong to temporary establishments whose pay is fixed from time to time by the Settlement Officers and the Director of Land Records in accordance with the qualifications of each clerk and the nature of work performed by them.

(b) No. Under the terms of reference the Salaries Committee are to inquire into the pay of the permanent ministerial and menial establishments only.

Draft order apportioning cost of settlement operations in the Nadia district.

23. Maharaja KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state whether it is intended to publish a draft order of apportionment of cost to be recovered from landlords and tenants in connection with the Survey and Settlement operations in the Nadia district, before the final orders are passed?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that such a draft order would give the landlords and tenants an opportunity of discussing or objecting to any proposals before the passing of final orders?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) There is no provision in the law for the publication of draft orders of apportionment of costs under section 114 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and there would be practical difficulties in the way of publishing such orders. In accordance with the present practice, orders of apportionment will be published in the Gazette for general information.

(b) The Settlement Department recognise that there are abnormal conditions in Nadia district, and therefore propose to publish apportionment orders for only three thanas in which these conditions prevail.

to a minor extent instead of publishing them for the whole of Block A. The orders will be circulated among the public and will enable the result of the assessment to be considered before orders are issued for the rest of the district.

Maharaja KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge please name the three thanas in regard to which the apportionment will be made?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I am afraid that I have not got the names of the thanas with me. I shall, however, get them hereafter.

Silting up of the Dhaleswari river and the insanitary condition of the Munshiganj subdivision.

24. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation been drawn to the silting up of the river Dhaleswari and its outlets?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the result has been that navigation even by country boats has become inconvenient during the greater portion of the year and that the Munshiganj subdivision of the Dacca district is converted into a malarious tract for want of pure drinking water?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what steps are being taken to restore means of communication and to free the said tract from malaria and other epidemics?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): (a) Yes, but there has not been any serious silting of late.

(b) Navigation is restricted during certain seasons of the year, the Munshiganj subdivision is not, however, reported to be malarious.

(c) To restore and keep up navigation, bandalling work to train the entrance is taken up annually, and some dredging has also been done when dredgers were available for this purpose; so far as the reference to malaria is concerned, the question does not arise.

Blockade in the Kalukhali sluice-gate in Murshidabad.

25. Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware to what a great extent the blockade in the sluice-gate at Kalukhali, in the district of Murshidabad, has rendered the jheel water insanitary and has affected and impaired the productivity and fertility of the large tract of outlying arable lands?

(b) If so, what steps, if any, have been taken or when are they proposed to be taken, to improve the existing condition of things?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) The abandonment of the Kalukhali sluice has not had the effects indicated in the question.

(b) Drainage cuts to connect low areas and to drain them back to the river were made, but it has been ascertained that these channels are closed by villagers at times to suit conditions for growing aus crop. The question as to whether this practice should be put a stop to, will be investigated.

Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether it is not a fact that Dr Bentley recommended the opening of the sluice-gates?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: We have got no information about that.

Paddy in the Sadar and Vishnupur subdivisions.

26. Mr. AJOY CHUNDER DUTT: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state what quantity of paddy was grown in the Sadar and Vishnupur subdivisions of the Bankura district in the years 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919 and 1920, and the amounts that were exported out of the said district during the abovementioned years?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what amount of paddy was imported into the district of Bankura during the years 1916 to 1920?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what amount of paddy is required for local consumption every year in the Bankura district?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) (b) and (c) A statement showing the estimated outturn of paddy in the Sadar and Vishnupur subdivisions of the district of Bankura in the years 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919 and 1920 is laid on the table. The information asked for in the rest of the question is not available.

Statement referred to in reply to unstarred question No. 26, showing the quantity of paddy grown in the Sadar and Vishnupur subdivisions of the Bankura district for the years 1916 to 1920.

Years	Outturn (Sadar subdivision)	Outturn (Vishnupur subdivision)

Discussion of the Budget.

The PRESIDENT: I would remind the members of the Council that the discussion of the Budget must be finished on the 3rd March, that is the time allotted by His Excellency the Governor. Also that there is a time-limit of 15 minutes for speakers other than the Members of Government and Ministers explaining heads of the Budget. I would also draw the attention of the members to the provision of section 89 (1) of our rules, which runs as follows:—

On a day to be appointed by the Governor, subsequent to the day on which the Budget is presented and for such time as the Governor may allot for this purpose, the Council shall be at liberty to discuss the Budget as a whole or any question of principle involved therein, but no motion shall be moved at this stage, nor shall the Budget be submitted to the vote of the Council.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I am sorry that I cannot congratulate the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr for the Budget which has been placed before us for consideration and discussion. I find great difficulty in understanding the Budget as it stands. I shall very shortly point out a few heads with regard to which I complain. We have to face a deficit. It is abundantly clear that our revenues do not come up to our expenditure this year. It is also an admitted fact that our revenues are not elastic; but apparently the expenditure has gone up this year by over 2 crores of rupees; and we have to fall back upon our balances, and it is said that we must draw upon our balances and appropriate a very large portion of them for meeting the deficit. It is admitted that a large proportion of this sum could have been utilised in one way or another; and yet Rs. 2,08,31,000 has got to be drawn from this balance which is admittedly bad finance; the Hon'ble the Finance Member himself has said that it is bad finance. I would call your attention to the two matters in this connection. The balance which we are going to use this year is the balance which has been described as an "unduly swollen" balance, and which really means that money, which was available to us in former years, was not spent by us, and therefore it will be necessary to inquire how we are claiming to apply this balance to meet our deficit. Sir, in this connection I should like to call the attention of this House to the amount of the balances as I find it stated in the Budget of 1920, page 311. The closing balance was placed at Rs. 3,43,42,000. Of this, Rs. 20,00,000 represented the prescribed minimum closing balance of the province, which must be kept in tact, while Rs. 1,69,32,000 represented the unspent balances of Imperial recurring and non-recurring grants or sums which were earmarked for specific purposes, as detailed below. The free provincial balance, therefore, amounted to Rs. 1,54,10,000. Now, they were earmarked in this way:—

			Rs.
Balance of Imperial grants for Education	98,33,000
Balance of Imperial grants for Agricultural Education	69,000
Balance of Imperial grants for Sanitation	60,51,000
Ranchi Lunatic Asylum	9,79,000

giving us Rs. 1,69,32,000. The minimum closing balance was Rs. 20,00,000 and the available free balance was Rs. 1,54,10,000. Therefore, we find that the closing balance was earmarked to the extent of Rs. 1,69,00,000. Now, what it is proposed to do with this balance is that the earmarked is to go; that is to say, we want this money for purposes other than those for which they were earmarked. I should like the House to consider how far that could be justified and I should like to call the attention of the Ministers, who are principally concerned with this matter, as to how they have allowed this money to be dealt with without asking that it should be applied for the purposes for which they were earmarked. Now, Sir, in this connection, I find that my friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, raised this question last year and he said that, when we had this balance, he failed to understand why this heavy sum should still be allowed to remain idle. I am not referring to what happened previously, because I find that at one time Sir William Duke said that schemes were not ready and, until the schemes were matured, they would not be able to use the money. Of course, the maturity of schemes may cover a long period. I should like to know what is said with regard to this; I imagine that a considerable proportion of the schemes has matured, and, if inquiries be made, it will be found that the schemes which were under consideration in 1913, at least a great many of them, have now matured. Now that they have matured, these grants, which should be applied for particular purposes, are no longer available for those purposes, but they are going to be utilised to meet the general expenditure, and therefore I submit that it would be wrong to use them in this way. I also shall call to your recollection Sir Henry Wheeler's reply to Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri; he thought "no doubt that it was the duty of the Government to advance the millenium, but that they could not do it at the time." The question of the millenium must now depart and it is now a question merely of meeting our needs or starving the province. This is what he said:—

Another general issue was raised by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, who seemed to advise us to signalise the last year of the old official Government by spending in one grand blaze every penny of which we are possessed. As I understand him, he could like to see the whole of the three or four crores of our balances cast into the budget in the form of grandiose schemes of expenditure. The suggestion has something to recommend it, and possibly, we officials would rather like to have gone out introducing, or at any rate, accelerating to the best of our power, the millennium.

Of course, that hope must vanish now, but I doubt if the suggestion would commend itself to the Ministers and I would like to hear what the Ministers have got to say. There are also practical difficulties. In the first place, there is a point, beyond which we cannot conveniently draw on our balances. We could not do that last year, but I find it can be conveniently disposed of this year in one grand blaze. And Sir Henry Wheeler further said:—

We have reason to believe that we and other provinces have already drawn on them to the utmost extent which would be welcomed by the Government of India, which is this matter after all stands in a position of our banker, and secondly, there is a practical point, beyond which we cannot spend money during the year, even if we go through the formality of putting it in the Budget.

Sir, that was the answer given by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler. Leaving aside the hidden sarcasm in that speech, dealing with Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri's observations, what the Finance Member now proposes is to spend this amount in one grand blaze, and he has to apply the whole of this for general purposes; and the millennium which Sir Henry Wheeler was not able to anticipate at that time and which he was perfectly ready to help forward has now gone, because the revenue that we are going to get is not elastic, it cannot be increased by leaps and bounds. The deficit has got to be met. But it cannot be met except by applying these balances; and, therefore, although we are living in the expectation of something cropping up, now, what we are doing is that we are going to dispose of the earmarked balance for other purposes, and I do not think that it is right to call upon the House to do so. I am not forgetting, in dealing with this matter, the Devolution Rules; and I should like to call attention to the rules which deal with this question of utilising this earmarked balance in this way. It may be said that rule 14 (7) of the Devolution Rules empowers the Government to do this. The rule runs as follows:—

The following sources of revenue shall, in the case of Governors' provinces and in the province of Burma, be allocated to the local Government as sources of Provincial revenue, namely:—(a) balances standing at the credit of the province at the time when the Act comes into force.

Therefore, by that clause, it becomes part of our Provincial revenue and, therefore, being part of the Provincial revenue, it may be said, that it may be disposed of in this manner; that is to say, it loses its earmark, and that is the interpretation which has been put upon it, which, I do not think, is accepted by a large number of the members of this House. It is a question which has always to be borne in mind—although it may be possible under the law and the Devolution Rules to utilise our balances for purposes other than those for which they were earmarked. The question is whether it is right to do so, may it not do great harm? So far as the sources of revenue are concerned, I do not want to detain the House by suggesting various means by which some money may be raised; but there is one point, which I would like the Finance Member to note, that is “Fisheries.” I find that, so far as “Fisheries” are concerned, they yield us a very small revenue. It has been held by the High Court, and even by the Privy Council, that so far as the tidal and navigable rivers are concerned fisheries may be let out by the Government, and what I would suggest that the Government may consider how far it is practicable to do so; we have got large navigable and tidal rivers, and we have got a vast sea-littoral. It should be considered whether it is possible to utilise this source for purposes of revenue. I would further suggest, with regard to this matter, whether it is not possible, having regard to our taxation rules, to raise some money from stamps. We have got some power to deal with stamps. I would venture to suggest for consideration, whether or not it is possible for us to raise the stamp duty on petitions from 8 annas to Re 1. The standard has not been raised for a great number of years, and I believe that from 1865 there has been no increase; there is another class of petitions for which a one-anna stamp is levied, and that class may be raised to 4 annas. This would undoubtedly increase our revenue to a very large extent.

Then, there is the terminal tax, which we are able to impose; and I would call attention to the jute coming into Calcutta. No doubt, the Calcutta Improvement Trust is taking something from jute; but, so far as we are concerned, we might be able to introduce something in respect of the jute coming into Calcutta or into Chittagong; that is to say, to levy a terminal tax on jute, which it would be competent for the Bengal Legislature to impose. Beyond these suggestions, I have nothing more now to say with regard to the means for raising our revenue.

In the Budget the expenditure has been allocated in this way:—65 per cent. of the expenditure has been reserved for reserved subjects and 35 per cent. for transferred subjects, which, I am told, is much the same, as has been allocated in previous years. The increase amounts to Rs 2,65,00,000. Now, with regard to this what has baffled me completely in regard to the Budget as presented is that it is divided into “Voted” and “Non-voted.” I find no indication at all as to how these amounts have been calculated. I have noted the rule in the Devolution Rules which relates to this matter, but before I deal with “Non-voted” items, I should like to call attention to three matters which I find on page 2 of the Budget. There we have three expenditure items:—

Outlay on waterways not charged to revenue.

Loans and advances by the Bengal Government

Loans between the Central Government and the Government of Bengal.

The PRESIDENT: You have exceeded your time-limit.

Mr. W. R. RAE: It is for your consideration whether Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri should not be allowed to go on. We should like him to go on.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: If you will permit me I will offer only a few more remarks. I am not in the habit of taking up time at any length.

The PRESIDENT nodded acquiescence.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I refer to these particular instances, because I think that this is a matter which requires careful consideration by the House. I mean the loan between the Central Government and the Government of Bengal, which is Rs. 86,58,000. That loan we are going to repay. With regard to that you will find a reference on page 27 of the Budget. This sum it will be remembered carries a low rate of interest. The Budget says, "As it has been decided to repay in full to the Government of India, from the accumulated Provincial balances, on the 1st of April, 1921, all sums advanced by them to the local Government up to the end of this year, no interest will be payable to the central Government in 1921-22. Now who has decided that? "As it has been decided to repay in full" my question is—who has decided it? Now on page 2 you will find that it does not come under the head "Non-voted." It does not come under the head "Demand for grants." It is under neither of these two heads. Who has decided it then? If this money has to be paid, I think we ought to have a voice in its disposal. But it has been taken for granted that the Government, rather the Finance Member, can immediately pay it back. Then we find the next item is an outlay of Rs. 70,00,000; this is going to be borrowed by the Government. We know that loans of this kind cannot be raised now except at a very high rate of interest. We are going to borrow Rs. 70 lakhs—Rs. 50 lakhs from the Government of India and Rs. 20 lakhs from the public at a high rate of interest. Is that sound finance? and what is the sanction? With regard to this may I call your attention to rule 23 of the Devolution Rules, which provides:—

Any moneys which, on the 1st day of April, 1921, are owed to the Governor-General in Council on account of advances made from the provincial loan account of any province, shall be treated as an advance to the local Government from the revenues of India, and shall carry interest at a rate calculated on the average rate carried by the total amount owed to the Governor-General in Council on this account on the 31st March, 1921. The interest shall be payable upon such dates as the Governor-General in Council may fix. In addition, the local Government shall pay to the Governor-General in Council in each year an instalment in repayment of the principal amount of the advance, and this instalment shall be so fixed that the total advance shall except where for special reasons the Governor-General in Council may otherwise direct, be repaid before the expiry of 12 years. It shall be open to any local Government to repay in any year any amount in excess of the fixed instalment.

Therefore, when the Budget says that it has been decided to apply this money, I want to ask, who has decided it, how it has been decided without waiting for the sanction of this House? That is a question on which I want to have more light thrown.

There is another matter and it is about the "Voted" and "Non-voted" items. I would ask you to look at the Budget to say if you are able to discover on what principle the "Voted" and "Non-voted" grants have been allocated. There is one rule which deals with this matter, and that is rule 72 D (3), which says:—

Nothing in the foregoing sub-section shall require proposals to be submitted to the Council relating to the following heads of expenditure —

- (a) contributions payable by the local Government to the Governor-General in Council;
- (ii) interest and sinking fund charges on loans;
- (iii) expenditure of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law,
- (iv) salaries and pensions of persons appointed by or with the approval of His Majesty or by the Secretary of State in Council, and
- (v) salaries of Judges of the High Court of the province and of the Advocate General.

Under what head do several of the "Non-voted" items come? If they come under any head, they come under sub-clause (iii) of rule 72D. If this is so, I should like to know the references to the laws which have prescribed this expenditure. Certain amounts have merely been mentioned as "Non-voted." Take any item, say "Forests." You will find a large amount put down as "Non-voted." Why "Non-voted"? On what principle does one amount become "Non-voted" and another amount "Voted." I want particulars.

There is another complaint. I would ask the House to look at page 132 of the Budget. If a Budget of this kind was placed before any Joint Stock Board I do not know what would happen. We are supposed to have detailed accounts on this page; and what are the detailed accounts? In six lines you have got detailed! accounts of Rs. 1,48,00,000. What are the details? How are they to be voted for? What information have we about the matter? Is it expected that members of the House should go to the departments for the details, and then discuss the matter here? That is my complaint. There are heads which have not been explained, and the principles upon which divisions have been made have not been enunciated. My submission is, that time ought to be allowed and explanations given, before the Budget resolutions are brought forward.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I do not envy the position of my friend the Hon'ble the Finance Member, He is not responsible for the allocation of revenues under the Reform Scheme, which, by a process of manipulation, which need not be repeated here, has hit Bengal hard. That does not, however, absolve him from the responsibility of the Budget for the year 1921-22, and any blame due should rightly be borne by him. The actual revenue collection for the year is estimated at Rs. 9 crores and 71 lakhs and the expenditure at Rs. 11 crores and 80 lakhs. Besides this amount, provision has been made to pay the Government of India the sum of about Rs. 86 lakhs, the amount lent by the Government of India to municipalities, district boards, agriculturists and others in Bengal, these being henceforth debtors to the Government of Bengal and no longer to the Government of India, and advances to be made by the Government of Bengal of the sum of Rs. 14½ lakhs. The net result is that the Government incurs an expenditure of Rs. 3 crores and 7 lakhs from the unspent balances which have accumulated for years. Expenditure over income is always bad finance, and it is certainly not justified by saying that this year the excess has been met by drawing upon the unspent balances. The Budget has been so framed that by incurring new expenditure this year we are committed to an increasingly larger expenditure in years to follow, while concealing from our view the projects we are committed to take the case of the Public Works Department Budget 41B. The expenditure in original Civil Buildings is shown simply as Rs. 71,68,000, without showing the details. Now, on inquiry from the Finance Member, I learnt that out of this sum it is expected that about Rs. 7 lakhs will be spent on works in connection with the partition of Mymensingh, but, by spending this Rs. 7 lakhs, we are committed to the total expenditure, which I am certain you will be surprised to hear amounts to Rs. 75 lakhs. This relates to one district only. There is also the expenditure in connection with the partition of Midnapore, the total expenditure for which amount to about Rs. 20 lakhs. Common sense tells us that, when you cannot meet your expenses from your income, the policy is to retrench the expenditure or to try to increase your income. You cannot shut your eyes to facts, and the Government of Bengal cannot say that they were not cognisant of facts. They should have tried to follow a clear cut policy since the beginning of 1918— at least since July 1918— when the Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms was published, and taken the public into their confidence. The public are entitled to know what the Government have been doing since that time, but I am afraid they have not been able to shake off their old habits and ways of thinking even now. The Finance Member explains the deficit mostly on two grounds,—(i) that we have to make a contribution to the Government of India of Rs. 63 lakhs, and (ii) that the provision of Rs. 46 lakhs had to be made for the revision of the ministerial and menial establishments. It will be, however, seen that the total expenditure of the Government of Bengal, if taken on the present basis during 1918, was Rs. 8,50,28,000, and in 1920 Rs. 8,10,00,000, while the present income is estimated to amount to Rs. 9,71,82,000. The deficit is therefore not due mainly to the two causes mentioned by the Hon'ble Finance Member, but to the fact that the Government of Bengal, knowing full well the situation to which they were drifting, have entered into other commitments, which have exhausted any possible increased incomes. In this connection, I would like to ask the Hon'ble Member to give separate figures of the total increased cost owing to the revision of the pay of the Imperial and Provincial Services separately. The injustice and unfairness of the arrangement proposed by the Financial Member will be apparent, however, from the fact which I state below. Ever since 1912, the Government of India have been giving annually large special grants—both recurring and non-recurring—for the improvement of education and sanitation of this Presidency. When complaints were made in this Council in 1913 that Government were not spending the money specially granted by the Government of India for sanitary purposes, the then Finance Member, Sir William Duke, replied that the question with Government for years past had been not a question of funds but of getting properly prepared and matured schemes on which to charge these funds. When, however, all these schemes were prepared, war had broken out, and the Government did not spend these sums; the result was that at the end of the official year 1919-20 there had accumulated with the Government of Bengal a sum of Rs. 1 crore and 23 lakhs earmarked for certain specified educational purposes, for which it had been allotted by the Government of India, and Rs. 63 lakhs for sanitation. During the year 1920-21, the Government of India made a grant of a further Rs. 17 lakhs for educational and sanitary purposes. I could not get from the Hon'ble the Finance Member the exact sum that would remain unspent on the 31st March, 1921, but I think it would be something like Rs. 2½ crores. All this money has been granted by the Government of India for certain specific educational and sanitary purposes, and the Government of Bengal had been all along enjoined, and they have themselves publicly declared, that the amount could not be spent for any other purpose. Now, as soon as the control of the Government of India over the Budget has passed away, and we have what we call provincial autonomy, all promises are swept away and the Government blandly proposes to divert the whole amount to general purposes. I should like to know, and the public would like to know, whether this has been done with the consent of the Ministers. After all, whatever we may say, there are moral obligations and public faith even in administrative matters, and whatever you may say about technical or legal rights, this money cannot be diverted to other purposes.

The fact stands that the Reforms have not brought in that era of educational and sanitary progress which many of us hoped to see. On the other hand we find that the money, which had accumulated under these heads, is being misappropriated for other purposes. Then I find that besides the scheme for the supply of pure water to the riparian municipalities, which amounts to about Rs. 40 lakhs, there are matured schemes for the supply of water and for drainage in mufassal municipalities to the extent of about Rs. 65 lakhs, many of which have received the administrative approval of Government. If the Minister in charge of the Public Health Department does not keep any account of them, I can let him know the facts and where to get them.

The following are some of the projects administratively approved:—

			Rs
(1) Serampore Water Supply Extension	1,00,286
(2) Comilla Water Supply	3,65,000
(3) Patnakhali Water Supply	27,500
(4) Basrihat Water Supply	9,930

We have got matured schemes costing about Rs. 65 lakhs.

We are told that, under the power vested under rule 32 of the Devolution Rules, His Excellency the Governor has allotted 65 per cent. of the revenues for the administration of the reserved and 35 per cent. for that of the transferred subjects, and I have tried to find out from the detailed figures if the orders had been loyally carried out.

The opening balance is estimated at Rs. 3 crores and 44 lakhs. Deducting from this the sum of Rs. 1 crore and 1 lakh to be invested on loans there remains about Rs. 2 crores and 43 lakhs, and, of this amount, if we exclude Rs. 20 lakhs, which is to be treated as a permanent opening balance, the whole amount remaining should properly belong to the heads under Education and Sanitation, but the entire amount has been treated as part of the general revenues. As regards expenditure, excluding Public Works Department and the contribution to the Government of India, we find that the Budget estimate amounts to Rs. 2,66,62,000 under "Transferred heads" and Rs. 6,95,27,000 under "Reserved heads". From the "Transferred heads" are to be excluded certain items and they should have been shown separately. I now give my reasons for excluding the Public Works Department. The expenditure incurred by the Public Works Department for new work has hitherto generally been credited to that head of expenditure for which the work was being constructed. In any case, that should be the proper procedure. Police buildings should go under Police and Court buildings under Law and Justice, just as University buildings should go under Educational and Hospitals under Medical. That is common sense. From the figures of certain major works, the original estimates for which exceed Rs. 1 lakh, it appears that in the coming year it is proposed to spend Rs. 28 lakhs in buildings for reserved subjects against Rs. 10 lakhs for transferred subjects. If the correct figures were available for all items it would not be difficult to show that the main expenditure of the Public Works Department is for the reserved departments, and we, therefore, need not go far to seek the reason by which during the present year it was found necessary to transfer to the Public Works head allotments from other heads for new works and works in progress (vide page 7 of the Budget). The reason is to so manipulate the figures that it would seem that large expenditure was being incurred for the administration of transferred subjects, while really it was not so. The days of such jugglery with figures, I thought, were past, and both the Budget and the Civil estimates are silent as to the projects for which the Council will be asked to give the Executive a blank cheque to the amount of Rs. 1 crore and 50 lakhs. I hope the Finance Member will see that both the Budget and the Civil estimates give the detailed schemes. In this connection I must tell him that the form in which the Civil Budget estimates for 1921-22 has been prepared is not only not satisfactory, but it rather confuses one. All along the Civil estimates contained the detailed figures which enabled any one to go into and check any item he thought doubtful. I refer my friend to the head "General Administration—Civil Secretary." He will find that it is specifically stated that there is one Under-Secretary in the Political Department drawing Rs. 12,000. In the estimates for 1921-22, it is simply shown as "Under-Secretary—Rs. 45,000." Now this cannot be correct. The word used is singular and can refer to one person only, but his pay certainly cannot be Rs. 45,000. I tried to find out the pay of the officer who looms so prominently in the Presidency, the Director of Information. This could not be found. I wanted to find out from the estimates the total expenditure on the Intelligence Branch of the new Police—the Branch which worked the Defence of India Act and about which no one in Bengal need to be told anything. I find from the Civil List there is one Deputy Inspector-General of Police in charge, but I could not get the other gentleman anywhere—either in the Civil List or in the Civil estimates. They have been so cleverly concealed. So I had recourse to my friend, the Finance Member, and I got the figures only this morning. I hope the form of the Civil estimates will be altered so as to make those informations available. Here, I may mention, that in the year 1913-14, the year before the war broke out, the Budget estimate on Police amounted to Rs. 95,82,000 and that on Education to Rs. 1,34,88,000. The actual expenditure in 1919-20 was Rs. 1,43,95,000 and Rs. 98,23,000, the Budget estimates for the year 1920-21 were Rs. 1,50,32,000 and Rs. 1,21,42,000, and the revised estimates Rs. 1,63,25,000 and Rs. 1,07,85,000, respectively. The figures proposed for the coming year, Rs. 1,90,85,000 and Rs. 1,26,07,000, respectively, are still more illuminating. They require no comments, and no wonder that discontent is rampant in the land. What propaganda work can the Director of Information do to counteract the evil effects of such crushing facts? It had been my lot to harp year after year upon the inefficiency of the present Education Department of the Government of Bengal compared with that of the Police. I find the Reforms have made the situation worse. This will be made more clear from the fact that while provision has been made for Rs. 1 lakh only for primary education in the mutassal for 42 millions of Indians under the new Primary Education Act, which is a transferred subject, large grants have been proposed to be made for European and Anglo-Indian education, as this is under a Member of the Executive Council who is not responsible to the Legislature.

It would not be out of place here to mention that I wanted information from the Director of Public Instruction as to how the amount Rs. 1 lakh allotted for primary education last year has been spent, and, on my reminding him on Friday last, I was told that the Secretary to the Education Department has told him that they would be given after the Minister in charge of Education had seen them. The fact, however, stands that the information has not been supplied to me as yet, although the Finance Member promised that all such information should be supplied freely. Here I must plead the cause of the teachers in Government schools, for whom, I see, that a provision of Rs. 3½ lakhs has only been made. I am told that the total number of men in the Subordinate Educational Service would be something like 2,000 and it does not appear that much improvement will be effected by a provision of Rs. 3½ lakhs.

We have grave doubts as to whether there is any necessity for a grant of Rs. 1,30,000 for preparation of paper work in the High Court or for any extra grant to the High Court.

The present Budget deals with the highest amount of expenditure, and it cannot be hoped that in the near future Government will be able to spend a larger amount from income, even if the export duty on jute is granted to us. The prospect of the extension of education and improvement of sanitation and development of industries do not seem bright to me under the new regime. We have heard times without number that the Ministers have been placed in charge of "nation-building" departments. My countrymen will now be able to know how this will be achieved.

The PRESIDENT: Gentlemen, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that we have only four days for the discussion of the Budget. At the rate of 15 minutes for every speaker, we can only have 16 speeches at each sitting, and the result would be that in four days we can only have 64 speeches. I hope, therefore, that the members will try not to exceed the time-limit.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr is entitled to the fullest sympathy of this Council in the difficult task with which he finds himself confronted at the very commencement of his tenure of office as Finance Member of Bengal. It is most unfortunate that the first Budget which he has to present to this Council should announce a deficit of more than Rs. 2 crores. The Hon'ble Member, however, is optimistic about the future, and I am sure all of us in this Council share the hope he has expressed that before the time comes for dealing with another Budget our position, so far as our annual receipts are concerned, will have materially improved. Sir, I quite realise the exceptional circumstances under which the present Budget had to be prepared. The Devolution Rules containing the final list of Provincial subjects and lists of Reserved and Transferred subjects and also rules regarding allocation of revenue and other financial arrangements were published as late as 16th December, 1920. The present Government of Bengal was constituted on the 3rd January last, and the Budget had to be presented to the Council within six weeks of the formation of Government. I can well appreciate, therefore, the difficulties under which the Budget had to be framed.

Now, coming to an examination of the Budget itself, I find that a remarkable feature of it is that a very large amount, a little over Rs. 2 crores, come under the category of Non-voted, or, in other words, which is not to be voted upon by the Council. The Government of India Act, 1919, no doubt provides that certain proposals of expenditure are not to be submitted to the Council for its vote. A bare narration of the heads of expenditure which are excluded from our vote will at once convince everybody that the principle underlying this provision is perfectly sound. These are the heads of expenditure:—

- (1) Contributions payable by the local Government to the Governor-General in Council;
- (2) interest and sinking fund charges on loans;
- (3) expenditure of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law;
- (4) salaries and pensions of persons appointed by, or with the approval of, His Majesty or by the Secretary of State in Council;
- (5) salaries of Judges of the High Court of the province and of the Advocate-General.

Now these exceptions, which correspond to the Consolidated Fund charge in England, are, it must be admitted, a curtailment of our valued right to assent or refuse to assent to proposals of expenditure. They must, therefore, be very strictly construed. They must be construed in the way which a penal section is construed, viz., that the scope must be severely limited to the object for which it has been framed. I have already mentioned that in this Budget, a very large amount of money has been withdrawn from our vote. Now, if the items of expenditure which have been withdrawn from our vote were all covered by sub-section (3) of section 11 of the Government of India Act, 1919, I would have little to say. But, looking into the details, I am perplexed to find items of expenditure which I venture to think cannot possibly be covered by sub-section (3) of section 11 of the Government of India Act, 1919. Let me give to the Council some instances of expenditure which have been withdrawn from our vote. In page 25 of the Budget estimate for 1921-22, hon'ble members will find, under the head "Survey and Settlement—Office Establishment—Peons," Rs. 848—non-voted. Then again in the same page, under the sub-head of "Contingencies—Job Work," Rs. 10,756—non-voted. Further, in the next page, under the sub-head of "Salaries—Deputy and Sub-Deputy Magistrates," Rs. 60,000—non-voted. Also in the same page, under the sub-head "Establishment—Steam-launch—Boat and Elephant Establishment," Rs. 1,000—non-voted, "Servants," Rs. 6,000—non-voted; "Temporary Establishment," Rs. 11,000—non-voted. There are instances also in the next page. Let me give you some. Under the sub-head "Allowances—Travelling Allowance"—Rs. 20,000—non-voted. Again, in the same page, under the sub-head "Contingencies—Diet and Travelling Allowance to Witnesses," Rs. 12,00—non-voted, "Liveries to Peons," Rs. 500—non-voted. Then in page 28, under the sub-head "Contingencies—Purchase and Repair of Typewriters"—

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The hon'ble member is under a misapprehension. These items relate to the excluded areas of Darjeeling and the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: The Budget is strewn with items of expenditure, which, I submit, cannot possibly be covered by sub-section (3) of section 11 of the Government of India Act, 1919. I would like to ask the Hon'ble Member by what process of reasoning or by what ingenuity items of expenditure like these have been brought within the exceptions provided in sub-section (3) of section 11. As I have said already these exceptions are a curtailment of our right to vote supplies, and we must be perpetually on our guard that no elasticity, as is attempted here, is given to them by construction or otherwise. Some day reserved subjects will come to us, and we shall have more complete control over them, but some items of expenditure, as in England, must always remain not to be voted upon. It is, therefore, most important that we should challenge this attempt to bring within the category of "non-voted" items of expenditure which cannot possibly come within the purview of sub-section (3) of section 11 of the Government of India Act, 1919. I may say at once that I do not wish to impute any motives to any one for perpetrating what appears to me as a serious infringement of our right to vote supplies. In the absence, however, of any explanation, it does seem that the Budget has been carelessly framed. It may be that in the great hurry in which the present Budget had to be framed, some amount of confusion was inevitable. At the same time, however, when haste or carelessness results in a serious infringement of one of our most cherished rights we must condemn it.

Sir, there is one other matter, with which I should like to deal before I close. I find, Sir, from the Budget that the reserved departments are going to have Rs. 8 crores and the transferred departments Rs. 4 crores. Thus the great vital departments which have been transferred, will have considerably less money at their disposal than the reserved departments. Now, is this fair? The departments which have been transferred, have been described by the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee as the "nation-building" departments. That description, if I may say so, is quite appropriate, for upon the activities of these departments depend entirely the progress and welfare of the people of this province. But, Sir, while there is no lack of appreciation of the importance of the transferred departments, there is, I fear, a woeful lack of ambition on the part of the Ministers who are in charge of them. Where is the evidence of any large constructive policy which they have in view? It is true that they assumed office only on the 3rd January last, and perhaps it is too early yet to pronounce any judgment upon what they have done. But at the same time we must bear in mind that the span of their official life is only three years, and, while it would be foolish to expect so early that they should be engaged in building noble structures, it would be quite within the limits of reasonableness to expect to see them at least start burning bricks. And you cannot have bricks without straw. Now let us examine for a moment some of the new schemes which the Hon'ble Ministers desire to carry into execution during the coming financial year. I find that the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri proposes to spend the appalling sum of Rs. 5,000 on five agricultural farms. Then I find that the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee intends to spend an additional sum of Rs. 15,000 on mufassal dispensaries, which works out at less than Rs. 2 per year on each dispensary. And we see that the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter has no higher ambition than to spend an additional sum of Rs. 1 lakh on primary education in the mufassal, which works out at less than a farthing per head of the school-going population of Bengal. Now I should like to ask the Hon'ble Ministers if these new schemes, which I have mentioned, afford any evidence of large or ambitious policies, which some of us would like them to pursue. Sir, I deplore—I greatly deplore—that our Ministers should be content with just carrying on in the first year of their existence. It would be no use saying later that they had not sufficient money. The obvious answer would be that they failed to secure more money. Sir, it is in no carping spirit that I make these observations. I am one of those who are anxious to make the Reforms a success. And that is why I ask the Ministers, our representatives in the Cabinet, to make a survey of the urgent needs of the country and launch out, without delay, their schemes, supported by many-sided activities.

Mr. W. L. TRAVERS: The chief arguments which have been advanced for the payments from the balances of the deficit in the Budget of next year are apparently four. First of all there is the reference which has been made by this Government and supported by this House, to the Government of India for revision of the unfair and unjust policy with which Bengal has been treated in regard to revenue; secondly, there is the point that the time for the preparation of the Budget was very limited; thirdly, we know that the Ministers had lately been appointed to their arduous task and had not the time to examine the necessities of their departments; and fourthly, Sir, I think we may say that trade generally and the chief industries of Bengal are doing very badly. Well, Sir, taking all these arguments into consideration, I think fresh taxation and apparently large new taxation will undoubtedly be necessary for the development of this province and the progress of the people towards a higher standard of health, sanitation and education. We have just gone through the large expenditure involved by the war and I fear, that, if any taxation, and heavy taxation, be imposed two years hence not only will there be dislocation in commerce and interference with trade, but also considerable hardship and discontent among the people. Hence, Sir, I consider that it would have been a wiser policy on behalf of Government to make a beginning in the coming year. I do not know, Sir, if I am in order in directing the attention of Government towards a fresh source of revenue, but I think that there is a growing feeling amongst the educated people of Bengal that larger duties upon the sale of alcohol, of ganja and of opium and its preparations are most advisable. The increase of these duties would lessen much evil, while it would have the effect of bringing in considerably more revenue. If I am permitted to direct the attention of Government towards another source of revenue, I should like to examine the proposal to levy upon all estates say, of over half a lakh, a moderate death duty.

The estimates under the head of Agriculture show an increase of about Rs. 3½ lakhs, a total of Rs. 21½ lakhs. I am one of those who desire to see a much more forward policy on behalf of Government in regard to the improvement of agricultural education. In a country wherein industry, including the tea industry, is very largely agricultural, not only is an immense increase in the weight and quality of the staple crops to be looked for, but there are thousands and thousands of acres of land which only require agricultural knowledge and suitable crops to make them profitable. Although we have recently heard that this is the policy of Government, and we wait to see the result of the two agricultural schools that are in existence, I think there is a very much wider field in respect of agricultural education and that expenditure on agriculture should be speeded up in the next few years.

Under Education one notices an increase of a lakh for primary education, which has already been referred to by the previous speaker. I should like to see this amount spent upon schools wherein only reading, writing and simple mathematics would be taught by teachers fully qualified, who have themselves been taught the art of teaching. To me the whole structure of education appears to be growing more and more unwieldy and more and more top-heavy. It is surely far wiser to spend the money available upon a sound system of primary education as a foundation for all education, than to pour out the funds upon higher schools and colleges with a fertile crop of half-educated and discontented young men, not good enough for a mental profession, while too proud to work upon that most honourable calling of farming of the land. I therefore strongly urge that this lakh should be spent on practical education in the mulassal.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: A careful perusal of the Budget and examination of its figures has not been a comfortable task with me. It did not bring in one's mind much of comfort or hopefulness. A new era has been ushered into existence—an era which was expected to be one of continued progress, and not of difficulties, and hopelessness. I use the word "hopelessness" advisedly for more money has to be found, to-day or to-morrow, and imposition of fresh taxes will be necessary. Therefore a crisis is ahead of us. Administrative progress will be meaningless if it be not based on financial equalities and improved income—leaving a good credit balance for future years. May I request to be told if the present Budget, as it is, gives us any indication of what a good Budget—the first Budget of the new era—ought to be, and ought to have been.

In fact there is no indication of any definite and progressive policy, which was expected to be laid down by the new Government. Schemes have been framed to be accepted by Government, but critics will say, with sufficient justification, that the departmental heads who have framed them have proved too strong for Government. In the concluding paragraph of his note, the Hon'ble the Finance Member has enumerated the subjects which require prompt attention, but so far as can be seen there is no attempt to tackle these problems well. For instance, take first Primary Education. It is said that a special officer is engaged in drawing up a scheme. When the scheme is drawn up and accepted, where is the money to come from? The only extra grant given for primary education in the coming year is a sum of one lakh of rupees, besides Rs. 40,000 for increase of pay of teachers—an increase which was long overdue. These are very poor allotments, to be sure. For, are we not told by all the official and non-official world, both here and in England, that, what the people of this country need is primary education, and that the primary object of the Government is to do all they can in this matter of supreme importance? I therefore ask, in all seriousness, if these two items of allotments for primary education are sufficient to make even a small good beginning. We all know that other Governments of this country are doing much better in this respect. I note that large sums of money, e.g., Rs. 80,000 and Rs. 20,000, are allotted, respectively, for two institutions in which Europeans are interested, namely, the St. Andrew's Colonial Homes, Kalimpong, and the Loreto Convent, Entally. It may, in this connection, be mentioned that the statement submitted by the Financial Department nowhere shows whether these grants are recurring or non-recurring. A further sum of Rs. 50,000 is given as building grants for European schools. The result is that, of the whole of the new allotment of Rs. 4,90,000 for grants-in-aid, a sum of Rs. 1,50,000 is taken away by the European schools.

Take again Agriculture. The net result of the activities of this department has been practically nil. The only achievement this department boasts of, year after year, is the discovery of a new kind of rice and a new kind of jute. It is said that, if these varieties are adopted by the cultivators, the quantity of these two staple products of Bengal will considerably increase. But the question is, assuming that these two varieties will bring in salvation how many of the people have up to late taken to sowing these classes? When were these phenomenal discoveries made, and what addition to the country's agricultural wealth has been made since then? If Government are convinced of the excellence of these two varieties, sufficient energy and money ought to be spent on the propagation of the knowledge among the people, instead of spreading its activities in numerous other directions which, owing to insufficiency of financial backing, produce no results. To illustrate, I may mention Sericulture. Rs. 11,000 is provided for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Sericulture. How will the creation of such an appointment improve this industry?

The creation of such a costly appointment is a useless waste of public money, unless you at the same time put sufficient funds at the disposal of this officer to initiate practical measures for the revival of this dying industry. Instead of doing this, a sum of Rs. 21,000 is provided for a dairy farm in connection with the Dacca Vernacular School. If such a farm is to be opened, this should be done somewhere near Calcutta, where pure milk, even for babies, is a sort of luxury, rather than in Dacca, where milk can be had comparatively easily. Further, if the progress of other departments is suffering for want of funds, what is the immediate necessity of building costly quarters at a cost of Rs. 45,000 for the assistants of the Dacca Farm?

This lack of policy and imagination is indicated by the fact that important departments, like Education, Agriculture, Sanitation and Industry, cannot utilise their Budget grants and savings occur year after year. Such a state of affairs implies either that there is no scope for further expansion of these departments or that the officers at the helm of these departments are not sufficiently enthusiastic over the subjects under their charge.

Now to speak of forests: if the Government are convinced, as every one is, of the potentiality of the forest products, the right course is to develop the department properly instead of wasting money, as has hitherto been done, on fishery, which, during all the years of its existence, can claim no result to its credit.

While some of the most useful departments are suffering for want of money, want of forethought and lack of imagination and boldness, the expenditure of other departments, particularly the General Administration and Police, is growing to alarming dimensions. It is no use trying to set up a full show of a civilised and progressive Government, by opening this branch and that, with full knowledge that Government cannot spend sufficient money for their proper development. If money is scarce, there is all the more reason for the exercise of caution, and concentration of energies on a few chosen subjects, instead of a lavish expenditure without a definite scheme of progress.

It has been stated that the new Government has been confronted with the task of preparing the present Budget within six weeks of its existence. Such a plea is hardly worth consideration. The Ministers and Members are all men who have devoted their life to the consideration of the needs and requirements of the country and the condition of the provincial finance. They have undertaken their present task not without a knowledge of its difficulties, and it can hardly be believed that they have as yet no idea of the line of action they proposed to take.

Turning now to specific heads, I find the provision of Rs. 29,00,000 for Survey and Settlement, as against Rs. 20,00,000, actuals of 1919-20, and Rs. 24,50,000 revised estimate of the current year. This is an exceedingly heavy allotment in the present financial crisis. In this connection it is to be remembered that we had to submit to enforced economy during war period. New proposals for any expenditure were carefully scrutinized and only urgent and unavoidable expenditure was permitted. High prices of food-stuffs and clothing was a grave contingency and the purchasing power of the rupee was greatly reduced; and with all this leeway to make up, and in view of the difficulties in the way of making it up, the Presidency is faced with an unparalleled demand for development in every direction. Owing to financial restrictions during the war, Bengal accumulated certain balances, and it is now proposed to dip deep into this provincial balance to meet part of the pressing demands of the current year, Rs. 2,08,31,000 will be drawn from the balance in 1921-22. In view of all these, there appears to be no reason why some of the settlement operations cannot be postponed till the pressing demands of the more useful departments are met, or the provincial resources are pretty accurately gauged.

Similarly, the very heavy increase against "High Court," under "Administration of Justice," should not be allowed. The revised arrangements introduced in the High Court have produced very widespread discontent and disapproval, and the matter ought to be further examined.

Coming to the Police, it seems that the cost of the Presidency Police, which was Rs. 21,36,000 in 1918-19, is now proposed to be put at Rs. 36,37,000—an increase of nearly 80 per cent. in four years. The Police charge has been the subject of severe comment in the past, but without any effect. The arrangement in regard to the District Charitable Society requires further elucidation than has been given in the Financial Secretary's note. Again, the provision of Rs. 20,000 for increased rent for sergeants' quarters and again of Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land for married sergeants require scrutiny. Considering the class of men from whom sergeants are recruited, the accommodation which is provided for them is certainly too costly, and the palatial buildings at Lall Bazar ought to be an object of envy even of the European merchant princes in the city. The cost of acquisition of land is not the last item under this head. Cost of construction of buildings and cost of furniture and electric lighting arrangements are to be added, and the total bill of cost will be a substantial one. This Council can certainly aptly ask: What is the rental value per mensem of each of the quarters proposed to be provided? Further, what is meant by the "Higher subordinate staff," whose pay is proposed to be raised. Does the term include Deputy Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners or Inspectors only? We all know that the pay of Deputy Commissioners has been already raised, and therefore I have yet to learn why the cost should be so much as Rs. 1,50,000 for giving an increment to Inspectors only, in face of the fact that the pay of the whole of the Inspectors in the Bengal Police will cost only Rs. 2,75,000.

Coming to the Bengal Police, it seems that the cost of the Criminal Intelligence Branch, which includes the Special Branch, has remained almost stationary for the last three years and yet it is claimed that on the improvement of the political atmosphere of the country, the staff of the Intelligence Branch has been reduced. Now that the war has ceased and secret organisations no longer exist, there is no justification for maintaining a separate establishment with an officer of the rank of Deputy Inspector-General.

At the present juncture, when on the one hand, high hopes have been raised in the minds of the people by the initiation of the first stage of responsible Government and on the other hand these hopes are likely to be shattered, owing to the provincial bankruptcy, it stands to reason and prudence that the utmost economy should be exercised in taking up non-productive schemes, so that it may be possible even in the next Budget to make a decent beginning of those useful projects which the Financial Member has mentioned. But from the gloomy picture drawn by him, with revenue showing no signs of steady increase, and expenditure growing up by leaps and bounds, it seems that if the present Budget is not severely curtailed, it will be impossible to make up the deficit. With the rise in the cost of living the charges for subordinate establishment are bound to increase more and more, and I am convinced that a sum of Rs. 46,00,000 provided for the increase of pay for ministerial officers and menial staff will not at all meet the exigencies of the case.

(At this stage the member having reached the time-limit, asked for permission to speak a few words more).

The PRESIDENT: You may speak for 2 or 3 minutes more.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: The provision made for other services, namely, the subordinate educational service, etc., may similarly be found insufficient. I, therefore, appeal with all the earnestness I can command, that every item in the Budget be thoroughly scrutinised to find out where retrenchment is possible or where additional expenditure is not immediately necessary or imperative.

Raja RESHEE CASE LAW: It is unfortunate that the Reformed Council should commence its work under much depressed circumstances with a deficit of over two crores of rupees. The reason for this deficit has been very lucidly explained by the Financial Member while introducing the Budget in the Council. The diminution in the revenue is due mainly to the transference of the Income-tax receipt to the Imperial head. The excess in the expenditure over the revised estimate of 1920-21 is principally due to the high cost of living as a consequence of severe economic stress necessitating an increase of pay in all the services, and to carrying out the necessary improvements that had to be stopped or kept in abeyance owing to the war. I cannot sufficiently admire the Government for the sympathetic consideration and interest displayed by them on behalf of the poor ministerial officers and menial servants, who with their low pay are suffering much in these hard times. Notwithstanding the deficit, our Finance Member has found a way out to tide over this difficulty at least for 1921-22 by utilising the unspent balances which accumulated during the period of the war. In the allocation of definite sources of revenue our Presidency has not been generously treated by the Government of India, as, in all justice, they should have done. We would certainly have been in a very great fix, had there not been the accumulated balances which have so fortunately come to our relief at the present juncture. The heads of revenue allotted to us being already insufficient to meet our expenditure in 1921-22, our difficulty in future years, even in 1922-23, would greatly increase, owing to the increase of our recurring charges, when we will have no accumulated balances to fall back upon. Jute is the special produce of our Presidency, and Bengal alone is entitled to have the income derived from such a source, and it would be sheer injustice on the part of the Government of India, if they claim this right and insist on retaining it in their own hands without giving it up to Bengal. The revenue from this source would greatly relieve us from this difficulty in our financial position.

I should like to state with regard to the Grand Trunk Canal project which would necessarily involve the destruction of many houses, that instructions should be given to make the alignment in such a way as to avoid harassment of poor people as far as possible, so that they may not be homeless, and, at the same time, be subjected to no unnecessary hardships.

I should also observe that in the Budget, provision has been made for the establishment for the preparation of paper-books in the High Court, and the amount is to be realised by means of Court-fees. I should state that according to the new rules of the High Court, enforced in September last, the cost of printing paper-books have been enormously raised, and the former convenience as to payment of printing costs has been taken away, with the result that the number of appeals would considerably decrease. It has become necessary that Government should interfere to lessen the hardship imposed upon poor litigants. The effect of this state of things would be not only to diminish Government revenue, but also to virtually close the door of justice against people seeking redress.

The rate of interest charged on loans advanced by Government to local bodies has been raised to 6 per cent. I can say from personal experience that the incomes of the district boards are so inelastic, that it will not be possible for them to take advances from Government at that rate of interest with a view to construct new roads and make other improvements within their jurisdiction, simply because they will feel the utmost difficulty in paying off interest from their limited resources, and consequently, developments and works of improvements would suffer a good deal.

Our prospects for the future is, as I have stated before, rather gloomy. Though our financial difficulties have been represented to the Government of India with our appeal to accord to us their special consideration, yet, supposing that no such consideration is made, or the consideration turns out to be too inadequate for our purpose, and the revenue derived from jute be not renounced in our favour, then the difficulties of our position may be better imagined than described, and the effect would be the imposition of heavy taxes upon the already overburdened people of Bengal.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: The Budget, which the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has presented to the House is a chapter of disappointments from beginning to end. The most distressing feature of the Budget, as has been already pointed out by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, is the complete wiping off of the last year's unspent balance earmarked for expenditure under the heads of Education, Sanitation and Agriculture. These consisted entirely of Imperial grants specially made for the above purposes, they amounted to nearly a crore and a half of rupees; in spite of our attempts in the past we were scrupulously prevented from drawing upon them on the ground that the schemes were not ready. Most solemn pledges were made to us that they would be utilised as soon as the schemes were ready. The Government, with its well-known apathy towards the cause of education and sanitation, could never find the time to perfect these schemes, and now, with its characteristic antipathy towards these subjects, have thought it fit to forget all about their sacred promises and diverted nearly the whole amount of these grants to other directions, leaving the Ministers to depend entirely on the resources of the country in furthering the cause of education and sanitation. Sir, talking of Ministers, I cannot help remarking that they lay themselves open to a grave charge of both oversight and want of foresight in being a party to permit the Government to utilise for other purposes that part of last year's closing balance which consisted of special Imperial grants for education, sanitation and agriculture. Sir, this has undoubtedly deprived the Ministers of a substantial reserve, and when the time comes to give effect to the schemes for which the Imperial grants were specially made, they would have only two alternatives left to them, either to secure a larger allotment to their departments from the current revenue of the province or to impose a fresh tax on the people. As to the second alternative, I doubt very much if the country would submit to taxation to make amends for their negligence. I, however, do not know whether in agreeing to the exploitation of their earmarked reserve, our Ministers have any assurance of their colleagues of the Executive Council that the latter would allow them in addition to their normal demands further allotments, as needs arise, at least to the extent of last year's earmarked balance.

Sir, I would now take up the Land Revenue Budget. It really filled us with high hopes, when the portfolio for the same was taken up by our premier zamindar, the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan. But I regret that at least in settlement expenses and realisation of costs, he has gone in the way of and perhaps a step further than his predecessors in office, and has thus belied a good deal of our hopes in him. For the last four years, during every Budget debate, I have been discussing the hardships entailed on the raiyats and zamindars alike by huge settlement schemes and the annual levy in the shape of enormous costs therefor. I always held and do still stick to the view, that the outlay of money and energy on settlement operations is useless so long as provisions are not made to keep the records corrected up to date. My idea has been to proceed slowly and to provide for a permanent machinery for corrections just as they become necessary. But I have always met with a rebuff; and fresh operations were undertaken every year at an enormous cost. It was pointed out by former Revenue Members that these operations did not cost anything to the Provincial Government, as the entire outlay was met by the Imperial Government and the zamindars and the raiyats and so, Sir, no account was taken of the difficulties and inconveniences of the latter even during the late war and recent visitations of cyclones, floods and famine. Sir, even when during the war, the Imperial Government was reluctant to advance money any further for this purpose, the then Revenue Member, Sir Nicholas Beatson-Bell, was so much infatuated with these settlement operations, that he simply bled us white by trebling his ruthless realisation from

Rs. 9 lakhs, the figures for 1914, to Rs. 29 lakhs in 1917, and thus, earning naught for further Imperial advance, he went on merrily riding his hobby-horse. My expostulations, Sir, had some effect when he was succeeded by Sir John Cumming. In 1919, the costs realised were reduced to Rs. 15 lakhs and, in 1921, to Rs. 10 lakhs. The expenses, too, were substantially reduced. But, Sir, the Budget of the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan has again increased the realisation to nearly Rs. 17 lakhs and the outlay to over Rs. 27 lakhs, in spite of the fact that the excuse of the money coming from the Imperial Exchequer no longer holds good, because, under the present rules, the whole amount shall have to be advanced by the Provincial Government, and a quarter of this amount shall have to be borne by it ultimately. We hoped, Sir, that the Maharajadhiraja of Burdwan, being himself a zamindar, was fully aware that during these Settlement proceedings the zamindars have got to keep a staff, the charges of which amount to nearly what the Government spends for the purpose, and further, he surely knows that, when, in the same division, Settlement operations are taken up simultaneously in two or more districts, they not only inconvenience the zamindar, but amount to a practical impossibility to him or want of money and trained men to watch the proceedings on his behalf. Sir, we expected a better treatment at the hands of our present Revenue Member, who knows all these from practical experience. Sir, meeting rebuff so often, I know not whether my submissions in this connection, would again fall on deaf ears, but I shall be failing in my duty if I do not once more appeal to the Member in charge to take our difficulties into his serious consideration and, if possible, to dole out some relief to us. My first request to him would be to recast the programme and, instead of four sets of settlement parties, to have only two, each working in different divisions. As the Government bears a quarter of the costs, my next request would be that the recovery and outlay should always bear a ratio of 3 to 4. I would further request the Government to fix a reasonable and definite sum which would be spent annually on major operations. This is necessary to keep a zealous Revenue Member in check, so that he may not be tempted to outlay a prodigious sum on the assurance that only a quarter of the same is payable by the Government. As for the present Budget, which is a deficit one, I venture to hope that, considering the financial difficulties of the Government, the outlay should be reduced from Rs. 27 lakhs to at least Rs. 16 lakhs, and the amount to be realised, to Rs. 12 lakhs. Sir, when during the war, I remonstrated with Sir Nicholas Beatson Bell, I was met with the argument as to the difficulties of providing for the people, who would necessarily go out of employment. Fortunately that difficulty need not distress us now, inasmuch as we are appointing a large number of circle officers under the local self-government scheme, and so the services of these discharged kanungoes and sub-deputy collectors can be well utilised.

Sir, before I sit down, I have one more appeal to make and that to our Ministers. I appeal them not to fail like the Members, who were formerly in charge of their departments, in not fully utilising the sums allotted to them, for want of schemes. Sir, the need of the country is there. Let not lethargy and dilatoriness in the production and perfection of schemes make the allotments lapse.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: John Bright, in one of the speeches, said: "Tell me what the financial position of a country is, and I will tell you all about the character of its Government and the position of the people." Judged by this standard, the position as disclosed by the present Budget is not one on which we can congratulate ourselves. The Finance Department has, no doubt, made a heroic struggle against the inherent limitations created by the new financial readjustment between the Central and the Provincial Governments. It is up to us, both inside and outside the Council, to bring home to the Government of India the injustice of the treatment meted out to Bengal and to press for a fairer and a more equitable adjustment. This year no doubt the ingenuity of the Finance Department will enable us to tide over our difficulties by having recourse to the accumulated balances of the last few years, but surely such a makeshift arrangement—and the Government candidly admit that it is nothing but a makeshift—I say, such an arrangement cannot be a part of our permanent financial policy. The fact cannot be overlooked that, notwithstanding the large sum drawn from accumulated balances, next year the budgeted expenditure on some of the matters of most vital importance—those that may be said to constitute the nation-building departments—is hopelessly inadequate.

Sir, it is no use disguising the fact that, with the inauguration of the Reforms and with the installation of popular Ministers in the Cabinet, we all hoped that Bengal had definitely turned a new corner and that a new vista had opened out to her gaze, but, Sir, to our great disappointment it must be confessed that the Budget which has been placed before us affords little encouragement for such a hope.

Not only is there that huge deficit of over two crores—a deficit which cannot be met except by recourse to unsound finance—but, what is worse, we do not find any indications whatever in the Budget that the distribution of the available funds under the various heads of expenditure represents any marked improvement upon, or a striking departure from the past policy of the Government. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr himself had to admit in introducing the Budget that the proportion of grants which had been put down between reserved and transferred subjects was exactly the same as in previous years—65 per cent. for the former and 35 per cent. for the latter.

I cannot claim that I have been able this year to examine all the figures in the Budget as minutely and fully as with increasing experience of this kind of work I hope to do in future, but even a cursory glance through the pages of the Budget is enough to show the utter inadequacy of the provision on such important transferred heads as Education, Medical, Public Health, and Agriculture and Industries,—as contrasted with some of the reserved subjects say, Police, for instance.

The total expenditure of the Province which is budgeted for the coming year, is, as you will observe, Rs. 11,80,13,000. Nearly one-sixth of this is swallowed up by the Police alone; the expenditure under this head, to be precise, being Rs. 1,90,85,000. As against this, the total under Medical, Public Health, Agriculture and Industries, which includes technical education as well, comes up, Sir, to Rs. 1,06,10,000, and that on Education, including European education, which is a reserved subject, and the Dacca University, which gets Rs. 9,00,000, is Rs. 1,26,07,000.

Being associated with education for over a quarter of a century, it is only natural that I should confine my attention to that section of the Budget which deals with this subject. Under the first minor head, a sum of Rs. 10,68,000 has been provided for the Calcutta and Dacca Universities. Of this sum Rs. 9,00,000 goes to Dacca, Rs. 40,000 to the Dacca Intermediate Board and Rs. 1,28,000 only to the Calcutta University, which represents the recurring Imperial grant which the Government of India had pledged themselves to, and is made up of Rs. 20,000 to the Law College, Rs. 30,000 for Administration, Rs. 65,000 for Development and Rs. 13,000 for the Minto Professorship. The sum of Rs. 65,000 mentioned above is made up of the following items: Readership, Rs. 4,000, Hardinge Professorship, Rs. 12,000, George V Professorship Rs. 12,000, Sir Tarak Palit's Laboratory, Rs. 12,000, post-graduate teaching Rs. 12,000 and the Law College, Rs. 10,000.

Sir, the grant of this Rs. 1,28,000 is no special generosity, but is merely the redemption of the pledge given by the Government of India.

No one will, I think, venture to suggest that the Calcutta University does not stand in need of money. As a matter of fact the financial distress is acute—it is verging on bankruptcy. I know there is a feeling in some quarters that the present difficulties of the Calcutta University are due to extravagant expenditure, and that, if the University authorities had practised a little more economy in certain directions they might have stood in an easier condition. But with all its imperfections, the fact remains that the Calcutta University has established a claim to be recognised as a teaching University more than any other University in India. Its developments so far have no doubt been somewhat one-sided, viz., in the department of Letters, but it cannot be disputed that it has also laid the foundation of an Institute of Science and Technology, with the benefactions of two of our most illustrious countrymen and if it has not found it possible to expand, it is simply due to lack of funds. The published records of the University will go to show how repeatedly the University authorities have approached the Government of India for aid of the Science College, but besides allowing them to utilise a sum of

Rs. 12,000 annually out of the lump grant of Rs. 65,000 for the maintenance of the Laboratory the Government of India have persistently turned a deaf ear to all their appeals. The University has also, on several occasions, represented to the Government of India their difficulties on account of lack of accommodation, and the Calcutta University Commission in their report have also dwelt at some length on this question—but all in vain.

I have made inquiries and have ascertained that as soon as the University authorities realised that in future they would have to rely on the Government of Bengal for financial help, the Vice-Chancellor and Syndicate of the Calcutta University addressed two letters to the Government of Bengal, dated the 5th of February 1921, one requesting financial assistance of Rs. 11,00,000 or a part thereof, towards the cost of erection of a suitable building on the Fish Market, and the other for a capital grant of Rs. 10,00,000 for the development of Technological studies in connection with the University College of Science, to be applied under the following heads:—

	Rs.
Applied Chemistry	4,65,000
Applied Physics	2,10,000
Applied Botany (including Agriculture)	2,00,000
Library of the Science College	1,25,000
Total				10,00,000

I see no indication in the Budget that any notice has been taken of these two letters. I wonder if this Government is going to take up the same attitude of indifference and apathy as that of the Government of India.

Then I do not find any specific mention of the sum of Rs. 1,29,000, which represents the grant to Private Colleges unless it is included in the provision of Rs. 4,07,000 for grants-in-aid to Colleges—General, under the minor head of General Expenditure on page 102 of the Civil Budget estimate. The Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Education, will, I hope, enlighten us on this point.

As against the meagre grant of Rs. 1,28,000 to the Calcutta University the ensuing year's Budget provides Rs. 9,00,000 for the Dacca University, Rs. 10,000 for the Dacca Intermediate Board and Rs. 2,00,000 for the construction of buildings for Intermediate Colleges for Dacca. The Budget is absolutely silent as to how the Rs. 9,00,000 just mentioned, is going to be spent. As trusted custodians of public funds, this Council has a legitimate right to have details before it is called upon to vote the grant. It must not be imagined that the Dacca University, except being residential and unitary, is going to break new ground. The work that will be done there will be nothing but a duplication of the type of work done at present by the Calcutta University and carried on with no better staff. In fact, in some cases, men doing post-graduate work in the Calcutta University have been taken away to Dacca by the offer of higher salaries, with the result that a higher scale of pay will be introduced there, which is bound to react on the University here. Huge palatial buildings, I understand, have been placed at the disposal of the Dacca University. We have no information whatever as to how they are going to be utilised. We have no idea of the number of students that must be accommodated at Dacca, and yet we are going to be asked to vote Rs. 2,00,000 for the construction of buildings there.

As to secondary education, the ensuing year's Budget provides for Rs. 25,99,000 whereas the revised estimate for the current year is Rs. 26,01,000. Mark the progressive scale of expenditure! It was only the other morning this House passed a resolution in all seriousness for the preparation of a scheme in furtherance of vocational training in our schools, and the Hon'ble the Minister of Education gave us a pledge that he would do his best to give effect to it as early as possible. And the word 'early' in this particular context means 'immediate'. In the light of the Budget, it appears as nothing but a huge mockery. Sir, the importance of secondary education ought not to be belittled. It has been characterised as the pivot of all educational reform. And yet the Budget for the ensuing year is a sure proof of how the claims of such an important department of education have been most ruthlessly ignored.

The Budget for primary education does not present us with any brighter picture. The Hon'ble the Finance Member in reviewing the general financial situation observes: "Of the other schemes which the Education Department propose to undertake next year, the most important are Rs. 1,00,000 for primary education in the mufassal, Rs. 40,000 for the pay of teachers in primary schools."

I do not quote the rest of the statement, as it does not relate to primary education. It tells its own tale. This is all the money that the Finance Department has been able to find for the farther improvement of primary education of Bengal—a province which contains 45 millions of people—over 95 per cent. of whom cannot read and write.

It is perfectly true what we need is money. But what is truer still, we need a change in the angle of vision, the power to take a true perspective of the whole situation. It is a truism which needs no reiteration that our salvation lies in our education, a statement which is admitted on all hands— but mere admission is absolutely of no use till it is translated into action. I am constrained to say the present Budget has signally failed in this direction. The Reforms are bound to be a failure— a dismal failure—till the present proportion between reserved and transferred subjects is reversed and is placed on a far more equitable basis.

Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: Before saying anything on the general aspect of the Budget, I should like to express my regret for not having been allowed sufficient time to go through the Budget.

It is a huge and voluminous task to make myself master of the same within such a short time. Moreover, many of us in this House are new to this work and without any experience.

The Budget, as presented before this Council, appears to be framed in so cumbrous a way that it is difficult for any one not familiar with it to make comments on it, as the details of expenditure have not been lucidly explained.

On opening the Budget we find an alarming notice of a deficit of nearly two crores of rupees. Of course this year the deficit has been met out of the reserved balance of the past years; but, no doubt, it is a great problem and we must think out a proper solution. If we propose any fresh taxation, it will surely raise an outcry on all sides. In the circumstances, I think it will be our duty to curtail, from the beginning, all possible items of expenditure which are unnecessary. The only hope that lies before us at this crisis is the possibility of the Government of India considering it desirable to transfer in our favour the income derived from the duty on jute.

Under the head of receipts, I find that there is a decrease in Stamps. I cannot understand the reason of this decrease, and I think, as suggested by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, the income under this head can be raised. The percentage of expenditure on the reserved subjects is, as already explained by the previous speaker, 65 per cent., and that on the transferred subjects 35 per cent., and I believe it is almost on a similar scale to that of previous years. But considering the importance of the transferred subjects and as much importance has to be given to these subjects by this House I should request the House to consider whether the proportion of the percentage is adequate or not. To my mind, if we want to promote education in a country, 95 per cent. of the population of which is illiterate, if we really want to combat with the insanitary condition of Bengal in most of the districts, we surely want more money, especially for primary education. From the Budget it will appear that there is a provision of only one lakh of rupees for this purpose: so I request the Finance Member to reconsider the matter.

As regards other big schemes, which require a large amount of money, I think that if it is possible, these schemes should be postponed for some years, or they may be carried on slowly till the financial position of the Government improves.

The item of receipts from High Court paper books seems to me, as already mentioned by Raja Reshee Case Law, to be unnecessary to have been incorporated in the Budget: to my mind, if Government want to interfere with it, it would bring hardship on the people.

As Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri and many other experienced members have been, and are, discussing the broad questions, I would not like to take any more time of the Council.

Colonel A. J. PUCH: I have a few criticisms to make on the Budget put forward. It is a matter of regret that we have to begin with a deficit of 2 crores of rupees. This, however, is not due to a falling off of revenue; there has been the usual increase, but this is due to the abnormal growth of expenditure, viz., Rs. $2\frac{1}{2}$ crores more than the last Budget. I should like to know—it is difficult for the average person to find out—as to how this extra Rs. $2\frac{1}{2}$ crores is going to be spent. There are two appendices at the end of the Budget statement marked "A" and "B;" these give the new schemes for the year under consideration, but if you add up the amount to be spent on the new schemes you get only Rs. 68 lakhs out of Rs. $2\frac{1}{2}$ crores. These new schemes are no new schemes of work at all. A good many of them deal with increases of pay or allowances involving no work either for the Members or Ministers. I want to know what new work—apart from the kind of work which was being done under the old regime—is going to be undertaken by the new Ministers. Merely to substitute one set of men for another, is not what the public want, the old work must be carried on, but we want to see new undertakings begun. I shall illustrate my remarks by referring to two subjects, Agriculture and Sanitation, which are the most vital subjects affecting this province, and second to none.

Page 60 of the Budget shows that the Minister for Agriculture proposes to spend Rs. 80,000 only on new schemes of agriculture. Now an analysis of the Rs. 80,000 shows that Rs. 65,000 odd has to be spent on additional staff, Rs. 3,000 on replacing old microscopes, Rs. 7,000 for bullock (whether for purchase or feed is not stated), and Rs. 5,000 for the establishment of five new farms, working out at Rs. 1,000 a farm for the year. This is merely playing with the subject of agriculture, and I cannot congratulate the Minister on his first effort at nation-building.

Again let us take Medical and Public Health. I have searched the Budget in vain for a trace that the Grand Old Man of Bengal is determined to make an effort to rid the province of malaria. There is the same old spirit of tinkering, a dole here and a dole there, a dole for a water-supply scheme, a dole for a drainage scheme, a dole for increase of staff, increase of pay, but where are his schemes? I am not complaining of these doles, they are all right, but I expected to see something daring, something courageous, something for the everlasting good of the people.

The Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee has been talking of self-government for some years past, but he will probably say, where is the money to come from? The answer is, firstly, that you are using up the balances of the province to repay Rs. 86 lakhs to the Government of India. Why do you consent to this when under the Devolution Rules the repayment may be spread over a period of 12 years? Why, therefore, repay on the 1st of April this year? You have got your experts; give your Sanitary Commissioner a chance; trust him and let him use these Rs. 86 lakhs in doing what he can to rid the province of malaria, if you do not return it now, we shall have to pay Rs. 5 lakhs as interest at the end of 12 years. Could not this be found out of the Rs. 12 crores that you propose to spend in the course of the year? Surely that can be found. You will probably have to explain later why this House was not asked to consent to the repayment of this Rs. 86 lakhs. It is not put down among the demand for grants, although the law requires that every pice—unless it comes under the five specific exceptions—has to be voted upon. Therefore, even now, it is not too late to make a beginning. Again, why have you not made use of the power of raising money given to you under Schedule I of the Taxes Rules? You have been crying aloud for self-government for years, and now that it is granted, you are found unready. Where are your proposals? You have no programme; we have not yet heard of or seen a programme before any of the Ministers; I see no indication of any new schemes in the Budget, but if you have any, why not produce them? You certainly have not made any provision for them.

There are many Europeans in India who were against the grant of Reforms, but I think I may say that, now that we have got them, we are unanimous in seeing that the Reforms Schemes are made a success. I am sorry I do not find any evidence in the Budget of the policy of the Government in this matter. I should therefore tell you in a few moments what I should have liked to have seen to-day in the Budget.

I should have liked to have seen provision made for propaganda work on a large scale to bring home to the people the rights and privileges and the powers which have been conferred on them by the Reform Scheme.

Then, I should have liked to have seen provision for an organisation, for the purpose of ascertaining the views of the people as regards the methods by which the Reforms can be made a success, and incidentally fighting the methods of the shirkers, the non-co-operators.

Again, provision should have been made for having a department to correct the voters' lists and to keep them up to date. This is the most important item, as otherwise people who have a right to vote would be deprived of that right, as many Europeans were at the last election.

Provision should also be made for the supply to the people of rice, fish, and milk, the staple foods of the Bengali. Rice we have in plenty: I do not like control but in order that the economic laws of supply and demand may apply, the cultivator, before he decides how much rice to grow, should be given information not merely as to stocks but also as to probable demands. Every civilised country, except India, helps its cultivators in this respect. I desire to see a vigorous agricultural department which will make two blades grow where one grows now, which will make cows yield 10 seers of milk instead of 5 seers or less. I should like to say to the Minister in charge of Agriculture: "Wake up, and get a move on." I should have been glad if a large sum of money had been devoted to this department. There is plenty of fish to be had in the delta of Bengal. The difficulty in providing a better fish-supply is one of transport. Why cannot the Government in the beginning subsidise persons or firms for this purpose.

Then, again, as regards the milk-supply. I do not want the Government to turn to trade, but it must organise and help dairy-farming on a large scale, and the Minister in charge of Education, I am told, has got much personal information on the subject; therefore it cannot be said that they know nothing about it.

I should have expected some provision in the Budget for improving communications, not only of Calcutta, but between the rural and urban portions of the country. The peculiar geographical position of Bengal will solve the problem of agriculture, malaria, sanitation, drainage and of communications by canals, etc., by one operation. Much could be said on this point, but time will not permit.

I would suggest some unity between the agricultural department and the sanitation department and they should, as far as possible, work together because they will find that their schemes coincide.

I should have expected the Government which passed the Rent Act to do something to solve the real problem of housing, but I find no provision for this in the Budget.

Again, I should like, lastly, to say that some scheme on a generous scale should be introduced to increase the agricultural prosperity of the people and to endeavour to eradicate malaria, of which over a million die every year.

If we cannot get all the money we want at once, we can at least make a beginning.

The Ministers are proud of being placed in charge of the nation-building departments; they have yet to prove to us that they are really nation-builders.

Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: It is with some diffidence that I rise to speak a few words on the Budget that has been presented to this Council for discussion. While our resources are restricted, our demands are great and they must go on increasing for years to come. And as the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has so plainly said, we cannot make two ends meet without arriving at a patchwork compromise for the first year. Under the circumstances, what we ought to have done is to have used the pruning knife carefully. And I am afraid this is what we have not done. We have to fall back upon the balance, which is the aggregate of certain items earmarked by the Government of India. The balance has been arrived at by starving the schemes for which the sums were granted, and we do not know if we should do so. How are we to reconcile the disparity between the additional expenditure on the Police and the allotment on the primary education in a Presidency where, at present, at more than 6 per cent. of the male population receive education in the primary schools? Considering the economic pressure, and in view of the abnormal rise in the cost of living, I do not grudge an increase of pay in the Police Department. But I must raise my voice in protest against spending Rs. 20,000 in raising the rate of house rent for the Sergeants of the Calcutta Police, Rs. 1,50,000 for revision of the higher subordinate executive staff, Calcutta Police, Rs. 2,75,000 for revision of the rates of pay of Inspectors of the Bengal Police, and last but not least, Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land for married Sergeant of the Calcutta Police. I do not see why we should exhibit such tender solicitude for the comforts of the married Sergeants of the Calcutta Police at the cost of the people of Bengal, when Indians in the rank of Deputy Magistrates, Munsifs and Additional and Sub-Judges are not provided with house accommodation? The cost of the Police is becoming disproportionately large, and the pruning knife should be applied here.

Then, again, Sir, when we cannot afford to spend more than one lakh on primary education in the mulassal, it is proposed to allocate Rs. 80,000 as "additional grant-in-aid to St. Andrew's Colonial Homes Kalimpong." How are the people of Bengal benefited by this institution in the hills, that such a large slice should be given to it? If it is considered necessary to help this institution in the hills, it should be helped from the revenue of the hill tracts. And while "additional building grants" for all Bengal amount to Rs. 1,00,000, "additional building grants to European schools" amount to Rs. 50,000! These grants should not be supported by the Council.

In this connection, I would press on the attention of the Council the urgent need for a non-residential college in the Dacca district. The students who pass their Matriculation examination from the High English Schools, in the district of Dacca, have to go east and west, and south and north, to secure admission in the colleges. Some of them go to Barisal, some to Cooch Behar, and some to Calcutta. The Dacca University will be a residential unitary university. And I propose for the provision of a non-residential college affiliated to the Calcutta University within the district of Dacca, preferably in that part of the district which contains the largest number of High English Schools. I would also recommend that effect should be given to the proposal to establish a Medical and an Engineering College as parts of the Dacca University, in East Bengal. I would ask the Minister in charge to raise the grants to the Sanskrit tohs in general and to the Dacca Saraswat Samaj in particular. The Samaj is the oldest institution of its kind in East Bengal. And while congratulating the Government for its kind attention to Sanskrit learning, I cannot help remarking that the allotment on the head is hardly sufficient to keep the institutions in an efficient condition. The efficiency of these centres of Sanskrit learning will also help Sanskrit study in the University.

From education, I pass on to sanitation. Lord Carmichael said on one occasion that wherever he had gone in Bengal, he had heard of water scarcity. This scarcity of drinking water in rural areas is a constant source of disease. Then we have to deal with malaria. The state of affairs was summed up in the Bengal Census Report of 1911 in the following words:—

Year by year fever is silently at work. Plague slays its thousands. Fever its ten thousands. Not only does it diminish the population by death, but it reduces the vitality of the survivors, saps their vigour, and fecundity, and either interrupts the even tenor or hinders the development of commerce and industry.

Considering the importance of the subject, the allotment on this head must be considered meagre. A sum of Rs. 1,75,000 has been transferred to the Irrigation Department for carrying out certain anti-malarial schemes, while the Jangipur scheme is to get Rs. 21,000 and a sum of Rs. 19,000 is to be spent on anti-malarial survey of the area in the vicinity of Calcutta. Much has been said about the Grand Trunk Canal Scheme, but I am of opinion that the re-excavation of numerous canals in East Bengal will benefit the people more than the more ambitious scheme of the Grand Trunk Canal, designed to shorten the route between Calcutta and Eastern Bengal. The Grand Trunk Canal project is a productive irrigation work involving a very large capital outlay. I do not see why the project cannot wait till schemes of urgent necessity are pushed through. In this connection I recall what Mr. Phelps said in the Council last year—"Of late years the project has assumed another added importance, being bound up with the scheme for a greater Calcutta." That being so, the Calcutta Corporation and the Improvement Trust can easily bear the cost of this productive work, at least a major portion of it. Improvement in the means of communication, especially in East Bengal, is urgently needed. The resources of the District Boards are inadequate and the people are too poor to help themselves. I will take the case of the Dacca district. For 1919-20, the income from road cess was Rs. 1,51,381, while in one of the four subdivisions of the district, Munshiganj, a sum of Rs. 861 only was spent on new works, and a sum of Rs. 8,633 on repairs. The Government should contribute its quota for improving communications. Such being the case, it is necessary that we should keep back ambitious schemes involving large expenditure, at least till the question of the precise action to be taken in pursuance of the recommendation of the Joint Committee is settled once for all, and we find ourselves in a position to use our borrowing power in cases of necessity.

I have again to press on this Council the urgent necessity for improving the canals and other waterways of East Bengal, for which Rai Sree Nath Roy Bahadur pleaded so insistently in the Bengal Council. Last year the Hon'ble the Maharajahaduraja Bahadur of Burdwan said in the Council that this question, as involving sanitation, will be looked up. I hope this year a definite scheme will be adumbrated.

The people of Dacca have been crying themselves hoarse over the proposed railway from Dacca to Aricha. There is no reason why this project should not be favourably considered, especially when the projected railway between Dacca and Tangail passing through a similar tract has found favour with the authorities. This line will get connection with quite a number of lines to make it profitable and will be of great use to the people. This railway is as urgent as the improvement of canals and the people of Dacca are yet in the dark about the decision of the Committee appointed last year to examine the railway scheme.

I regret that while the pay of the higher officers, from members of the Indian Civil Service to members of the Provincial Executive and Judicial Services have been increased, the question of the increase of the pay of those who deserve such increment most, is still under consideration. This is likely to create discontent among servants of the State.

Agricultural development, we are told, has received adequate attention, and for the continuance of the scheme for the distribution of improved paddy and jute seeds, a sum of Rs. 66,000 has been provided. Now, the virtues of Kalya Bombai jute and Indrasail paddy have been so widely advertised by the Department of Agriculture, that one wonders why it is still necessary to distribute the seeds to the cultivators. In the Agricultural Year Book for 1919, we read: "The results of experiment carried on in a number of centres have proved conclusively the superiority of Kalya Bombai." If this variety is grown in the Capsularies growing tract, alone, it would mean an increased output of 12 lakhs of bales worth, at Rs. 40 per bale, nearly 5 crores of rupees. For the Indrasail paddy it is claimed that if this paddy is grown in the 50 lakh acres suitable for it, there would be an aggregate increase of 3 crores of maunds, worth about $7\frac{1}{2}$ crores of rupees. If all this is true, why does the cultivator feel chary to buy this seed? The question of cattle-breeding has been neglected in the Budget and I wish to draw the attention of the Minister in charge of the Department to it.

The cost of administration has increased enormously. We have to pay Rs. 64,000 a year for every one of four Members of the Executive Council and the three Ministers. As the Minister in charge of Sanitation, etc., said the other day, there is a feeling in the country that the Ministers should be less costly luxuries. And I wish our Ministers had set a noble example of self-sacrifice by offering to work without remuneration at least for the first ten or twelve years.

There are various other points on which one feels tempted to speak. But considering the time at the disposal of the Council, I will content myself with asking the Council to consider the points which I have raised, and resume my seat.

Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: It is the first Budget under the Reforms Scheme. We have had not sufficient time to study the details of the Budget estimates, and our difficulty is enhanced by the fact that the estimates have not been clearly put, as has been said by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri. Of course, I must say here that the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter was kind to explain to us—some members of the Council—some general features of the Budget, at a private conference in his chambers at the Secretariat, and for this, we are thankful to him.

I must also preface my remarks on the Budget, with an expression of thanks to the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, for having called a spade a spade, and revealed to us the real condition of the presidency under the Reforms. We start with a deficit and, consequently, want is writ large on the Budget. Under the circumstances, we must advocate for economy till we can meet our demands out of our revenue, independently of chance grants from the Government of India. The question of opening balance has been well dealt with by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, and I do not encroach upon the precious time of the Council by a further reference to it.

First of all, I would refer to the question of sanitation. Bengal is notoriously unhealthy, and the Government of India in their annual statement of the condition of India, 1919, admit that "it is difficult to perceive that sanitary development has taken place in India to any perceptible degree." His Excellency the Governor of Bengal said of malaria in the Presidency:

Every year there occur in Bengal from 350,000 to 400,000 deaths from this cause alone. But a mere enumeration of the deaths gives but a faint idea of the ravages of the disease. It is probable that at least a hundred attacks of malaria occur for every death, and it is estimated that this disease alone is responsible for 200,000,000 (20 crore) days of sickness in the presidency every year. This gives an idea of its results from an economic point of view. Its spectral finger may also be traced in the diminution of birth-rate, as well as in the increase of death rate, with the result that in the worst malarial districts, the population shows a serious decline.

The condition is serious enough to engross our attention. And yet a larger sum has been allotted to secure the comforts of the Calcutta Police than to rid Bengal of this scourge.

In this connection, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister in charge to the Dolye Khal scheme in Dacca. The city of Dacca is divided by the Dolye Khal, which passes through its heart. The Khal, during the cold season, becomes dry, with patches of stagnant water here and there spread over it, in short, it becomes an elongated cesspool, and is a standing menace to public health, and unless speedy measures for its improvement by canalization be taken, I apprehend, Sir, malaria will find a permanent congenial lodgement, from which it will be difficult to remove, without an enormous cost.

On the 7th February last, I put certain questions on this subject, and the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Irrigation Department, in reply, admitted the insanitary condition of the Khal. He further said—I quote his own words: "A scheme for canalization has been drawn up by Rai Bahadur Shantilendra Nath Banerji, who was deputed to investigate this project. The scheme is now under the consideration of the Government, but owing to lack of funds as also of officers in the Irrigation Department, it is not likely that the scheme will mature at an early date."

More than three years have passed away since the preparation and submission of the scheme, but no action has been taken. After the submission of the scheme, Rai Shailendra Nath Banerji has been transferred elsewhere, and it is not known what has become of the scheme. I wrote to the Secretary to the Legislative Council for a copy of the scheme with an estimate of cost; but unfortunately for me, I have not been favoured with a reply. When such works of utility and urgency have to be abandoned for want of funds, surely we are justified to protest against lavish expenditure on the Police, amounting to lakhs of rupees, the cost of "revision of the higher subordinate executive staff" of the Calcutta Police being Rs. 1,50,000. However, Sir, I submit that the Government will be pleased to consider whether it will be possible to carry out the scheme in the course of the next year and make due provision in the Budget before it becomes too late.

I may remark here, Sir, that one fails to understand why the Budget should provide Rs. 1,30,000 for establishment for preparation of paper-books in the High Court. I have doubts about the bulk of the cost being recovered from the litigants in the form of fees. And I have also my doubts about the estimated increase in the excise revenue, which is likely to be reduced by the non-co-operation movement in Bengal.

I would refer to the question of education. The bulk of the people of Bengal are sunk in deep ignorance, the percentage of literacy is deplorably low, and our attention should be given to afford facilities for the spread of primary education. It is a matter of regret that while Bombay spends 1 shilling per head of population Bengal spends about 2 pence. And it is proposed to give not more than Rs. 1,00,000 for primary education in the mutassal. The figure is too low. And a Government which can spend lakhs on the Police should be more generous in the matter of primary education. There is yet another point to which I would draw the attention of this Council—the additional grant of Rs. 80,000 to the St. Andrew's Colonial Homes, Kalimpong, an institution intended for a very limited community, whose claims on the revenues of Bengal fall far short of the claims of the people of Bengal.

In this connection, I would refer to the Dacca University. I congratulate the Department of Public Instruction on the practical materialisation of a long-pending scheme of a teaching and residential University at Dacca, for which a substantial allotment has been made in the Budget. But the University should be a self-contained, complete one, and in addition to the Faculties of Arts, Science and Law, the University should have the Faculty of Medicine also. The people of Dacca have long since been pressing for the establishment of a Medical College. It was brought to the notice of the Council last year, in the course of discussion of the Budget, by the Hon'ble Babu Sarat Chandra Chakravarti, the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Sreenath Roy and also by the Hon'ble Sir Nilratan Sarker. The Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan on that occasion said—I quote his own words: "As regards medicine and agriculture, provision has been made and it is not for any department to make any comments as to the possibilities of starting them or otherwise." On that occasion, Sir Henry Wheeler said—I quote his own words: "Apart from this, we have a wish expressed by Babu Sarat Chandra Chakravarti, that the Dacca University shall include a Medical Faculty; that is already dealt with in section 22 of the Act, and we shall now have to consider, in consultation with the Education Department, how the practical details can be worked out. All these raised hopes in us, that the Dacca University will include a Medical Faculty also. But, on a reference to the Budget estimate, we do not find any provision for a Medical College included in the Dacca University."

Sir, there is no Medical College in East Bengal, and the graduates and undergraduates of East Bengal, anxious to enter the Medical College in Calcutta, for carrying on the study of Medicine, find it extremely difficult to get admission for want of accommodation, and many of them, we are told, get disappointed in obtaining admission. I, therefore, submit Sir, that due provision be made in the Budget for a Medical College at Dacca.

In this connection, I would also refer to the question of intermediate colleges in the city of Dacca. This question was considered nearly two years ago, by a special sub-committee presided over by Mr. Turner, the then Principal of the Dacca College, and the unanimous opinion of the sub-committee was that, considering the large number of students who pass the matriculation examination every year from the different schools of East Bengal, the number of intermediate colleges to be opened should be four, inclusive of the two existing colleges, namely, the Dacca College and the Jagannath College, and a complete scheme was drawn up and submitted by the sub-committee. The proposed colleges were meant as a feeder to the University of Dacca. I am informed, Sir, that sites for construction of the proposed colleges have been selected, and notices of Land Acquisition proceedings have been issued. I find from the Budget estimates under the head of "Additional building grant," Rs. 1,00,000 only. I do not know, Sir, if this entire sum or any portion of it is meant for construction of buildings for the proposed intermediate colleges in Dacca; if the entire sum is meant for this purpose, I must say that it will be too inadequate and that it should be increased by another lakh of rupees. A very large number of students pass every year the matriculation examination from the different schools of East Bengal and more than one-half fail to get admission in the colleges of East Bengal for want of accommodation, and, on account of this difficulty, many are compelled to give up their studies. This, in the long run, tends to increase the number of the unemployed. If the four proposed intermediate colleges be opened, I doubt not it will, to a large extent, ease the situation, and make the Dacca University a success.

Lastly, Sir, I beg to draw the attention of the Council to a less ambitious project, namely, a weaving school at Dacca. You are well aware, and history testifies to it, that Dacca was once the seat and centre of a prosperous industry. The cotton fabrics of Dacca were once highly prized by kings and princes in all parts of the civilized world. The exceedingly fine muslin cloth is, like the Dodo, a thing of the past; it is never made now. But fine and costly fabrics of various kinds are still turned out. Mr. W. H. Everett and Mr. E. Hoogewerf were deputed to examine this question, and they submitted to the authorities a joint report—I quote from this report—They say: “But if from any cause, the prospects of the industry were to improve, it could be very quickly expanded, as there is a large number of men, who are weavers by caste, and of whom many already possess a knowledge of the art. The decline appears to be due entirely to lack of organization of the industry; but this output could be increased, and in some respects improved by the introduction of improved methods and designs through the agency of a weaving school.” In September last, a detailed scheme was made by the Principal of the Government Weaving Institute at Serampore, and it appears therefrom that the monthly recurring expenditure of a weaving school at Dacca is Rs. 397, and the initial expenditure Rs. 3,021, exclusive of the price of land and cost of buildings. This question was later on considered by the Municipal Board and the District Board of Dacca; the Municipal Board have agreed to provide suitable land for the purpose and the District Board to provide funds for the building, if the same be within their names. I am quite sure that the total cost of construction cannot exceed Rs. 15,000, and the District Board would be willing to contribute one-half of the cost of construction. I, therefore, beg to suggest that for a weaving school at Dacca Rs. 10,000 be budgeted for capital outlay, and Rs. 5,000 for recurring expenditure for maintenance of the school.

All these mean money; and unless strict economy is observed, the experiment about the Reforms is likely to suffer shipwreck.

In conclusion, I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Member will take all these into consideration, and recast his Budget so as to convince the people that the Reforms have given us some real power, and that they will result in anchoring the condition of the people of the Presidency.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: In rising to discuss the Budget I confess at the outset that I share the public disappointment and surprise at the statement that has been presented to us. I am surprised and disappointed, not because there has been a huge deficit of two crores and eight lakhs of rupees, for it was more than anticipated, when the Government was not prepared to give up such costly projects as the partition of Midnapore and other new schemes of expenditure, but because the provisions that have been made are altogether unlike what we expected. Barring some external appearance, such as the reshuffling of heads and bicapital arrangement of figures due to the dual classification of reserved and transferred subjects, there is little or no evidence of “Reforms” or “changed angle of vision” in the Budget.

Before going however to examine the provisions in detail, I think we should congratulate the Hon'ble Member in charge of Finance for sparing the people from new taxation at present and not synchronising the inauguration of the Reforms with the imposition of new burdens. That he has been able to wriggle out of the present difficult situation, however artlessly it may be, is a matter of at least temporary relief to us.

Now to come to the details of the Reforms Budget, the first thing that attracts our notice is that the revenue sources being allocated and divided heads being done away with, we have lost even the moiety of receipts from Income-tax, amounting to two crores of rupees. As against that, although we will not have to share the receipts under the heads of Land Revenue and General Stamps, yet, after making the provincial contribution towards Central revenues, we have hardly got sufficient funds to meet the increased demands for recurring Provincial expenditure. The result is that we have got to face a huge deficit every year if the Government of India do not "accord the special consideration suggested by the Joint Parliamentary Committee."

But if, after all, the Government of India do not come to our assistance and help us "to make up the leeway," as the Finance Member expects they will, then with "the only redeeming feature" gone, what will be our position and how we shall make our both ends meet, the Finance Member does not disclose. As regards capital expenditure, the Member in charge of Finance boldly suggests that that should be met by loans, although he himself admits that "we cannot use our borrowing powers, until our normal recurring income is increased to a pitch commensurate with our necessary annual commitments." But if the Government of India turn a deaf ear to our appeal, how our sources of income can or will be so developed in the near future, the Finance Member does not say. He simply hopes that, when such will be the case, we shall be in a position to carry out our loan projects with the resources of the province behind us.

At this stage the Council adjourned for 15 minutes.

After the adjournment.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: But what are these resources of the province? Have the Government been yet able to investigate and ascertain the possibilities of the development of our natural resources? No, and they are not likely to be able to do that even in the near future.

In April, 1919, the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter moved with much force and foresight a resolution "that investigations be made during the year 1919-20 in order to ascertain the possibilities of increasing the income of the Government of Bengal by the development of the natural resources of the province." In moving the resolution, the Hon'ble Mr. Mitter said: "The last preliminary remark that I desire to make is that in view of the necessities of education, sanitation and various other things which will be necessary in the near future for the Government to undertake and, in view also of the increased expenses which the Reforms are sure to entail, it is necessary to find out how far the income of the State can be increased without additional taxation. The question of additional taxation ought to come after we have exhausted these possibilities." But, while accepting the resolution, and though the Government repeatedly asserted that to a considerable extent they anticipated the desire for an inquiry, the resolution was practically burked. For if a Forest Utilization Officer was appointed before the date of the resolution he retired in May last, and thereafter Government did not find it possible to appoint another officer and no substantial work of development on the lines of the resolution could be done for "shortage of officers" and "lack of funds." This is, therefore, the way in which we have striven to increase our "credit" on the strength of which it is hoped to start loans.

Turning to the various heads of expenditure in the Budget, I find more and overwhelming reasons for disappointment and surprise. There the provisions do not justify or fulfil the great expectations that were raised by the Reforms. On the contrary, we notice that only those departments which were the recipients of favours before, still continue to be so, or are considered to be deserving of provision on a more or equally lavish scale; while those departments which were less favoured, and whose urgent demands and insistent claims were met with comparative indifference, have not even under the Reforms been justly provided for. While over and above the provisions in the last Budget, Rs. 10,50,000, have been allotted for the Police, Rs. 5,00,000 or thereabout under the head Excise and about Rs. 10,00,000 more for General Administration, only an increased provision of Rs. 4½ lakhs, an increase of Rs. 3½ lakhs and that of Rs. 26,000 only have been deemed quite sufficient for the expansion and development of the most vitally important departments of Education, Public Health and Agriculture.

That less justice has been done to these "nation-building departments" after the inauguration of the new era, that they have not shared equally in the increase of expenditure, and far from being better provided have not received even fair and proportionate treatment, will appear conclusively from the following comparative statement:—

34	Agriculture ...	21,15,000	2.27	21,11,000	1.81

But that is not all. Not only Education, Sanitation and Agriculture have not been allowed to keep pace with the general increase in expenditure, but also, so far as we can trace, expenditure under the heads of Education and Agriculture has not been allowed to expand even at the past rate. Thus while actual expenditure under the head of Agriculture increased from Rs. 7,72,137 in 1912-13 to something like Rs. 17,75,000, the amount on the revised estimate for the year 1920-21, i.e., at the rate of Rs. 10,00,000 in 8 years or Rs. 1,25,000 per year, the Budget estimate for the coming year shows no advance and proposes almost no addition to the amount budgeted in the previous year. The same is the case with Education, if we notice the pre-war rate of development and refuse to compare the present figure with that for the year 1914-15, since when the Government thought it proper to observe "enforced economy" in this head "owing to the prevalence of war conditions." From the year 1911-12 onwards, there was a steady growth (however incommensurate with the needs of the province) in educational expenditure, until it was arrested in 1915-16. In the four years before war conditions came to prevail, there was on an average a steady annual increase of more than Rs. 7,00,000 per annum, till actual expenditure under this head rose to Rs. 92,07,022 or (13.7) per cent. of the total charges. Then a lullum of set back followed no doubt; but when all the other heads, affected or unaffected by war considerations, have more than recovered their dues, education should and ought to have been allowed to do so. But such is the irredeemable destiny of education in this hapless country (where 92 per cent. of the people are still illiterate), that even with the advent of the Reforms the Budget figures do not contemplate long forward strides to recover the lost ground under this head.

Similarly ill-fated is the cause of sanitation also. You are aware that sanitation charges were not considered worthy of notice before, and it was under the Government of India orders made a major head in 1917-18. We owe it to His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay's personal sympathy and sincere solicitude for the malaria stricken people of Bengal that of late there has been an honest endeavour to improve the sanitary condition of this province. In spite of the world-war the Budget provisions for sanitation went up from Rs. 6,00,000 in 1917-18 to near about Rs. 12,00,000 in 1918-19, and for 1919-20 even more than Rs. 18,50,000 could be provided out of the total charges estimated at Rs. 7,77,12,000 for that year. Thus from the time the paramount importance of sanitation was recognised, the Budget showed an increased provision of about Rs. 6,00,000 every year, even when the total charges were ranging between Rs. $7\frac{1}{4}$ to Rs. $7\frac{3}{4}$ crores.

If we now look to the details under those heads the general impression thus gained is not only amply verified, but the conclusions forced upon us on closer examination are indeed unfortunate. The Hon'ble the Finance Member mentioned in his speech the other day that "the proportion of provincial expenditure allocated to the reserved subjects is 65 per cent., while that allocated to the transferred subjects is 35 per cent." May be. But what do we see on examining the details under one of the above-mentioned major heads? We see that the needs of primary education in the mutassal have been put almost on a par with those of the St. Andrew's Home, Kalimpong, and the sum allotted for the revision of the pay of the teachers of the Victoria School and Dow Hill School, Kurseong, has been thought quite sufficient for the improvement of the pay of teachers in primary schools. I hope, Sir, that my remarks in this connection will not be misconstrued. I do not object to the aforesaid provisions for those European institutions, if the financial situation permits them. What I mean to say is that the provisions for improvement of primary education and for improving the pay of the teachers in the primary schools are highly incommensurate and betray either deliberate neglect or woeful inability to envisage the requirements of the case. Again the allocation of Rs. 1,00,000 for the extension of primary education is only a sorry apology for the loss of Rs. $5\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of recurring grant in that behalf by the Imperial Government.

But unfair treatment of, and inadequate provision for, those very departments, which are lauded up as highly important in connection with transference, are not the only objections. The stupendous loss that has been inflicted on these departments to meet the exigencies of the financial situation by the Finance Member "dipping deep into the provincial balance" to avoid the appearance of bankruptcy, can only be realised if we try to understand for a moment of what the last closing balance was constituted. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr himself admitted in his speech that "these balances represent in part doles, which were given to us by the Government of India in previous years to meet expenditure on specified objects, and partly the accumulation of provincial revenues during the war on account of the restrictions on expenditure which prevailed during the war." But what were the specified objects the Hon'ble Member for Finance did not explain. However, we can look to his Hon'ble colleague's statement in the previous year and try to find them out. Sir Henry Wheeler, in the concluding portion of his prefatory memorandum, said: "The closing balance," i.e., for the year 1920-21, "has been placed at Rs. 3,43,42,000. Of this Rs. 1,69,32,00 represents the unspent balances of Imperial recurring and non-recurring grants, or sums which are earmarked for specified purposes as detailed:—

		Rs.
Balance of Imperial grants for Education	...	98,33,000
Balance of Imperial grants for agricultural education	...	69,000
Balance of Imperial grants for Sanitation	...	60,51,000
Ranchi Lunatic Asylum	...	9,99,000
Total	...	1,69,32,000"

Thus it will be seen that of Rs. 2,58,000, representing the opening balance, close upon Rs. 1½ crores represent the grants for Education, Agriculture and Sanitation. Yet this is not all. The opening balance further includes, as the Hon'ble Finance Member has said, "savings during the war." But how were these savings effected? Were they effected by curtailing expenditure under Police and such other heads? Certainly not, but by observing the strictest possible economy in and underfeeding the very departments of Education, Sanitation and Agriculture. One who simply takes a cursory view of the column showing variation between Budget estimates and revised estimates or actuals will almost invariably find the figures against those important heads preceded by a minus sign. Thus the amount that has been drawn and the figures that have been deleted from the opening balance represent the extent to which Education, Sanitation and Agriculture have been sacrificed, not only for the present but presumably for all time to come.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I hope you will permit me to offer my congratulations to the Finance Member for the skill and ingenuity which he has displayed in framing the Budget. At the same time the fact cannot be ignored that we have been faced with a deficit of about Rs. 2,68,00,000. I offer my congratulations to him for the very simple reason that taxation has been obviated. My friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose, has shared the optimism of the Finance Member regarding the future. I regret I cannot share that view. The fact cannot be overlooked that, unless and until the Government of India come to our rescue with substantial grants, probably the same situation will repeat itself. My friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose, as well as Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, have laid considerable stress upon one aspect of the Budget, and that is this: that sufficient details have not been given to show as to how the "non-voted" items have been arrived at. In the absence of these details it is quite natural that there should be grave apprehension in the minds of the members of this Council and of the public, having regard to the fact that the Finance Member has said that all these non-voted items come within the purview of clause (iii) of sub-section 3 of section 72D of the Government of India Act.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: I did not say that all came under that. What I said was that all came within the purview of the whole of the sub-clause and not a particular part of the sub-clause.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: The Finance Member has explained his position and I think he will do so more fully and clearly in the course of his speech at the proper time. A good deal has been said by the previous speakers about the injustice—the palpable injustice—which has been done to our Ministers. My friend, Mr. Ghose, has said that the Finance Member deserves our sympathy. In my view, if any one deserves sympathy, it is our Ministers, more than the Finance Member. If we turn our eyes to the items for new schemes, what do we find? We find that a grant of Rs. 1,04,000 only has been made for primary education. If I raise this point, probably the answer would be that we are ignoring the permanent grants-in-aid provided for in the Budget elsewhere, amounting to about Rs. 24,50,000. I am referring to this item of Rs. 1,04,000 merely by way of contrast. If you will turn your eyes over the Budget you will find that huge grants have been made to Forest and Police. What is the grant to Public Health? It is only Rs. 3,29,000. I put it to the House: Is that sufficient having regard to the fact—the painful fact—that year after year in Bengal about one million of men are laying down their lives owing to fever and malaria? During the five years the war lasted in Europe the total number of men who were killed amounted to two millions only so far as England was concerned. During that period Bengal alone lost about five millions owing to fever and malaria, and what is the grant for the prevention of malaria? We are staggered to find that it is only Rs. 7,000 for malaria research in Eastern Bengal. In my humble opinion, and I believe I am voicing the feeling of the country, I may say at once that this grant is absolutely inadequate. The Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea the other day said with some amount of emphasis and earnestness: "Give me the money and I will drive malaria out of the country in one day." I say, there was the money available to the Government: why was it that the money was not placed into the hands of the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea to drive malaria out of the country? The question might arise, what money was it that I was referring to? I am referring to that item of a loan of Rs. 86,00,000, which the Government have thought fit to redeem. What was the occasion for redeeming that loan at this time when Bengal has to face a deficit—a heavy deficit. Every business man as is well known thinks of redeeming his loans not in years of tightness, but in years of prosperity. But our Government took a different view. Then looking at page 27 of the Budget, you will find that these loans were carrying only a rate of interest ranging between $3\frac{1}{2}$ and $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. We find from the Budget that we are borrowing Rs. 20,00,000 this year. Can we borrow the money at less than 6 per cent? If we are put in this position, what is the urgency for redeeming those loans which we have got at so easy terms? This money could have been utilised for framing important schemes which needed the attention—I should say the pressing attention—of the Government.

Then there is another fact to which I desire to invite the attention of this Council. You will find that Rs. 1,90,000 has been provided for water-supply; and water-supply where? Water-supply in the towns, where one does not feel the necessity of drinking water just so much as poor villagers do in the dry season? I know the state of things which prevails in the villages, coming as I do from a village in the district of Dacca. We are confronted with the fact that not a single pie has been provided for drinking water in the mufassal, where the requirement is so pressing— the necessity so acute.

Then we find that for mufassal dispensaries a magnificent sum of Rs. 15,000 has been provided. We were all present when a lively debate took place in this Council Chamber a few days ago over that resolution of Rai Bahadur Jogendra Chunder Ghose, which was carried in spite of its hostile reception at the hands of the Minister, the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee. We had anticipated, as we had the right to do so, that a liberal provision would be made in this respect in this year's Budget, but for furniture for nurses' quarters we find a sum of Rs. 10,000 has been provided. I do not for one moment say or suggest that I do grudge this item of expenditure for the nurses, but what I do say is this, that a more liberal provision ought to have been made for mufassal dispensaries.

One word more and I have done. I have gone through the Budget with some amount of care, and there is one item which I have not been able to understand, and I shall be glad if the Minister or the Member in charge will be pleased to explain that item. At page 114 of the details we find an item of Miscellaneous and Unforeseen charges—Rs. 6,30,000. In the footnote we find Reserve—Rs. 2,05,000, His Excellency's petty grant—Rs. 40,000; Other Miscellaneous—Rs. 10,000, and then there is another item of Rs. 3,00,000 for addition to the Contract contingencies. We are referred to the next page for details and what are the details given there? The position is just the same—Total Miscellaneous and Unforeseen charges—Rs. 6,30,000. Surely these are not the details—a repetition of what appears on the previous page. I hope the Hon'ble the Finance Member will throw some light upon this particular item.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: While I read the Budget the one thing which I tried my best to find out was this—what was the principle which was followed by Government in distributing the revenue between the two sides of the Government, and the next thing which I also tried my best to find out was what was the principle on which the different amounts had been classified as voted and non-voted. So far as the latter question is concerned, I looked into the sections of the Act and I found that under section 72, clause (D), certain amounts would be spent, irrespective of the question whether the Council would vote for them or not. Now, Sir, I also read the next sub-clause, and I found that whether a particular subject would come under that clause or not would be decided by the Governor, and the decision of His Excellency would be final. That of course sets at rest the question as to what principle was followed in this matter. Next, coming to the question as to what principle had been followed by the Government in dividing the revenue between the two sides of Government, I tried my best to find out the history of this subject, and at last I found it in the report of the Joint Committee. The principle which the Committee laid down was this:—

The Committee have given much attention to the difficult question of the principle on which the provincial revenues and balances should be distributed between the two sides of the provincial Governments. They are confident that the problem can readily be solved by the simple process of common-sense and reasonable give-and-take, but they are aware that this question might, in certain circumstances, become the cause of much friction in the provincial Government, and they are of opinion that the rules governing the allocation of these revenues and balances should be framed so as to make the existence of such friction impossible. They advise that, if the Governor, in the course of preparing either his first or any subsequent Budget, finds that there is likely to be a serious or protracted difference of opinion between the Executive Council and his Ministers on this subject, he should be empowered at once to make an allocation of revenue and balances between the reserved and transferred subjects, which should continue for at least the whole life of the existing Legislative Council. The Committee do not endorse the suggestion that certain sources of revenue should be allocated in the proportion of two thirds to reserved and one third to transferred subjects, and similarly a proportion, though not necessarily the same fraction, of the balances.

If this is the principle which has been followed, Sir, in distributing the revenue between the two sides of the Government, I must say that the principle has not been correctly followed. The question is whether there had been really what is called "give-and-take." There cannot be the slightest doubt that the representatives of the people who assemble here have given clearly, cogently, distinctly and specifically the Government to understand that the questions of education and sanitation are of vital importance to the people. When we look to the report of the said Joint Committee, we also find that the Cabinet have been constituted under the present Act with the avowed object that the Ministers would contribute their knowledge of the people's wishes and susceptibilities, and the Members of the Executive Council their administrative experience to the joint wisdom of the Government.

Therefore, I think that our Ministers, who are elected members of the Council and who must be certainly aware of the desires of the people of the country when they fought for their own money, must have impressed the necessity of those things upon the Governor and the Members of the Executive Council. If they did so, and if the principle was followed, namely give-and-take, then Government must have tried to reduce the expenditure on the reserved subjects as far as possible, and, in order to meet the wishes of the people, Government must have tried to increase the expenditure on the transferred subjects as far as possible. Has this principle been strictly followed? Sir, when I read the report I found that the Joint Committee expressly stated in their report—"They have accepted the recommendations of the Functions Committee, that, subject to certain reservations about the Universities, the responsibility for the whole field of education in each province should be transferred to Ministers. They attach much importance, however, to the educational advancement of the depressed and backward classes, and they propose that the subject will receive special attention from the Ministers." I have read the Budget very carefully, and I have failed to find out where any special provision has been made for these depressed and backward classes. If we want to make the Reforms a success, it cannot be gainsaid that the principles of self-government must be clearly understood by the people, who want to exercise their franchise, and in order that the people may be able to exercise their franchise properly, the one thing that is essential is that they must have primary education. They must have at least some sort of education which will enable them to realise their responsibility when they want to send members as representatives to this Council. Therefore, Sir, when the Joint Parliamentary Committee recommended that special attention must be devoted to this particular subject, which is ultimately responsible for really building the nation as a whole, I think that adequate provision should have been made in the Budget for this particular subject.

Then I find one big expenditure of about Rs. 70,00,000 in the current year for the Grand Trunk Canal. I must confess that I am a new member of this Council, and I do not know what were the necessities for this Grand Trunk Canal, but I must say that so far as I know, the necessity for spending this heavy amount, namely, Rs. 70,00,000, for the Grand Trunk Canal at least in the year 1921-22 is not so pressing as the necessities for education and sanitation are. At least we can defer this project for some years more. Then, Sir, I have also found a comparatively large amount— I say "comparatively" in view of the amount that is going to be spent for education and sanitation and dispensaries—is going to be spent for establishing a department of Paper-Books in the High Court. Sir, most of my friends in this Council must be aware that there was recently a meeting of the lawyers in Calcutta who unanimously passed a resolution, giving out clearly and cogently that there was no necessity for such a costly establishment, and that the present system would fare well. In view of the fact that lawyers can speak on the subject with confidence—I say the lawyers really voice the sentiments of the people when they say that that is not at present necessary—I think, Sir, that this expenditure should not be allowed at the present stage.

Then as regards the question of loans, viz., whether the loans should be paid off this very year, I am not unmindful of the report of the Financial Relations Committee, where it is stated that the Governments of Bengal, the Punjab, the Central Provinces and Assam signified their willingness to take over the whole of their respective loans from April 1921, and we recommend that it should be arranged for them to do so. In some cases it was stipulated that the provincial revenue or any part of its balances, including the earmarked portion, could be used for the purpose. Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri and another speaker stated that Government were not justified in using this earmarked portion. It may be that the Government were justified in view of the statement, in the report in using this earmarked portion as a portion of revenue, but at the same time when we assume that the principle which was followed was the principle of giving and taking, certainly, Sir, the subjects for which these particular heads of money were earmarked should have been given special attention. Then as regards this question of loans, though of course the Government of Bengal signified their willingness that they should take over the whole of their respective loans on the 1st April, 1921, still, in view of the fact that the present financial condition of this province is not on a very good basis, there would be no harm if we go on paying this amount gradually.

As regards the question of increasing the judicial staff, I find 20 munsifs and 3 subordinate judges are going to be appointed because there is an increase in the judicial work. Now, Sir, I cannot claim experience of the quantity of the judicial work in the whole province, but so far as I know, instead of increasing, the judicial work is decreasing, and this is the proper time when there should not be any increase in the number of judicial officers. I know some instances in which the judicial officers have very little work—practically no work—for the whole of the day, and it would be the best arrangement if those munsifs, who have not got sufficient work, could be transferred to places where the work is heavy. There is absolutely no justification, at least so far as the present year is concerned, to increase the number of those munsifs and subordinate judges.

Then as regards the question of primary education, I, Sir, on behalf of my community, feel it my special duty to bring it to the notice of the members of this Council that in order to enable the Muhammadans to make the Reforms a success, in order to enable the Muhammadans to understand their own position with reference to their Hindu brethren, it is essentially necessary that they should be educated, and educated to a reasonable standard in comparison with their enlightened Hindu brethren. Therefore I think the Minister of Education would see his way, specially so far as the Muhammadan community is concerned, to find out some money at least for the advancement of Muhammadan education. I am not unmindful of the fact that a certain amount of money will be spent on the Dacca University, and that the Dacca University may benefit the Muhammadan community to a certain extent in preference to the other community; but at the same time that would not help the cause of Muhammadan education in general. If we are to consider the question of Muhammadan education for the whole province, it is essentially necessary that at least some portion of the money should be specially devoted to the cause of Muhammadan education, and specially primary education.

That is all that I have got to say in this matter.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned till 3 p.m. on Tuesday, the 1st March, 1921, at the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

The Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Tuesday, the 1st March, 1921, at 3 p.m.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 98 nominated and elected members.

The Budget, 1921-22.

The discussion on the Budget was resumed

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: In noticing the good work done by Mr. Donald as Financial Secretary, Sir Henry Wheeler observed on the 3rd April, 1919: "I have often told him that his fault lay in over-estimating his expenditure and under-estimating his revenue, but from the point of view of the financial resources of the province, these qualities have been instrumental in building up the large balances which we now possess and which we hope will be spent with usefulness in the approaching years." With reference to that statement last year I made two suggestions. I may be permitted to refer to that portion of my observations: "The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler very justly noticed in conclusion of his Budget speech last year that this available free balance has in fact been built up by the over-cautiousness of the department in preparing the Budget estimates during the last several years. If this fortune really belongs to us, and if it was accumulated through the economical management of the provincial revenues for several years, I fail to understand why this heavy sum should still be allowed to remain idle wherever it may be. We may not be allowed to spend it without special sanction, but there is no reason why it should not be deposited in a bank at least to carry interest.

I may be permitted to notice in connection with the Budget that the time has really come when some bold and courageous step should be taken for the relief of the people of Bengal. We are hard pressed on all sides. Prices of every necessary article of life have gone up abnormally high. The country is groaning under the oppression of the middleman and the money-lender on one side and on the other the profiteering and the privileged classes grown up under the peculiar circumstances of the great European war. If some means could be devised for being relieved from the clutches and grips of these persons, most of the difficulties would be removed. What has been done at Naogaon for the ganja cultivators can, with great advantage, be done in other directions also, so far as cultivators are concerned. New industries should be started and the vast resources of the country should be developed and fully utilised for directly benefiting the country. The purchasing power of silver has increased and the exchange rate is very favourable for larger imports. It is high time that the large free balance referred to before should be fully utilised and any more useful purpose cannot be conceived for its further detention and development."

With reference to one of my requests, what ungenerous reply was given has already been submitted before this Council by my friend, Sir Ashutosh. With reference to another, however, I see that after a year it has been thought proper to pay off the heavy debts due to the Government of India. Sir Ashutosh, of course, objected to the payment of this heavy debt at once. He suggested that steps should be taken to pay off this heavy debt by instalments, but I disagree with him. The course adopted at least ensures the retention of this heavy sum for carrying on the loan transactions with public bodies under us, we now being the sole masters of this little fortune, and it will save us by way of interest over Rs. 5 lakhs a year. There is another advantage also, it may not be easy for the department to fritter away the amount, if I may be permitted to say so, for the ordinary purposes of the administration. I refer to the statement of Sir Henry Wheeler simply to show how Sir Henry Wheeler objected to its utilisation for some purpose which would benefit the country, and the poorer classes specially, and how he consents this year to the utilisation of the full amount for the ordinary purposes of administration. It has been practically admitted by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr that nearly Rs. 1½ crores would be required for the ordinary purposes of administration. It is not a question for a year only. We may tide over the difficulties for the present, but what shall we do next year? These grants were not paper transactions simply, but these were transferred to us along of course with the provincial liabilities. They were practically placed at our disposal. There was only one restriction to its utilisation, namely, that without the special sanction of Government it could not be utilised. Under the Devolution Rules that restriction is now withdrawn, but the character of the grant is not changed. As regards the utilisation of the amount for paying off our debts to the Government of India may I ask Sir, why it could not be done earlier? If it can be done in April, 1921, why could it not be done in April, 1920, when I raised the question? For several years—at least, I can safely assert, since the year 1912-13—we have been paying a heavy interest annually, amounting nearly to Rs. 5 lakhs, to the Government of India, though to our credit there was a heavy sum with them. If there were proper representations I think the Government of India would surely have allowed us to be relieved of this heavy liability year after year. I am glad, however, that under the able guidance of the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr this course has now been adopted.

In turning to the next year's Budget, we find that we are really confronted with a deficit Budget for over Rs. 2 crores. A few days ago I had a talk with my esteemed friend, Sir Surendra Nath. He told me that there would be no deficit, but, on the contrary, there would probably be a surplus of Rs. 40 lakhs. I asked him wherefrom the money would come, and how it could be secured and how it could be done. I had a lurking suspicion that our little fund of savings of the past years would be gone. He told me that I could not understand the intricacies of the Budget, and therefore I was incapable of realising the situation. I then rubbed my eyes to see whether I was dreaming or I was awake. I now see that I am right and it is a deficit Budget, and we must have to face it not for this year only but for years to come. We have to find money either by raising money by fresh taxation or by securing help from the Central Government.

The Meston Committee's recommendations were made probably without taking into consideration the heavy liability which we will have to incur on account of the revision of the pay and allowances of the services. I think we should see who is responsible for this deficit whether this Council or any unfavourable event. To my mind the Government is responsible more or less for it. Increment of allowance and pay has been granted to the Indian Civil Service and to the members of other high salaried services. Necessarily the demand or clamour for an immediate and favourable consideration of their prospects has been often raised by low salaried officers of the ministerial and other departments.

In this Budget we observe that nearly Rs. 3 crore is provided for the reorganisation of the public services, and I believe Rs. 45 lakhs is provided for the ministerial departments.

Several high salaried posts have already been created, and are going to be created, without taking into consideration their evil consequences. When with such a sympathetic ruler like Lord Ronaldshay at the head of the Government of Bengal, and a nation-builder like Sir Surendra Nath, a devoted worker and defender of the public cause, and with a deficit Budget staring us in the face, such a thing has happened I think a strong case could be made out for our appealing to the Central Government for immediate attention. Owing to the Reform Scheme people hoped that the new Government would be engaged in many nation-building projects and in the work of solving the great problems of the day and grant immediate relief to the cultivating classes who form the nationality of Bengal. But we see no big scheme before us. As Colonel Pugh pertinently remarked, there is no work or nation-building in the Budget. Then as to the earmarked grants—

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda)
Your time is up, but I will give you three minutes more.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I think we cannot, indeed should not, touch them now. I appeal to the Government and to the Council, through you, Sir, that we should retain it for some useful purpose, for the grants were received from the Government of India for some specific purposes, and it comes under clause (E) of rule 11. So to my mind we are bound to spend it on some special purpose.

My suggestion therefore is—let the ordinary work of administration go on and keep the several proposals for capital and recurring expenditure in abeyance. Let us see the result of our representations to the Government of India. If they turn a deaf ear to our appeal, and we find that fresh taxation is inevitable, let us face the situation bravely and manfully.

This Council was not slow—rather it took the first opportunity to raise protests against the extravagant proposals made. If we are to do anything, if we are to raise a new tax, we should see what retrenchment can be made in our annual expenditure. A committee should be appointed for that purpose and also a deputation should be sent to fight out our cause for the increase of the grant. These things ought to be done, and I suggest again for the present that proposals involving large expenditure be in abeyance. Simply we should pass the Budget to let the work of administration go on. If we get any help from the Government of India, we should then see what more can be done.

As regards the Grand Trunk Canal project, I think it was not considered in this Council. I understand the estimate was made some time ago, and it requires revision, and, if we are to borrow heavy sums of money for the same, I think we must first of all be convinced of the reasonableness of the undertaking. There are many things, but unfortunately the time-limit precludes my occupying more time of the Council.

Regarding several other proposals for reorganisation, I think a temporary allowance, as has been proposed in the case of the Subordinate Educational Service officers, might do. A provision of Rs. 17 lakhs was recommended, but only Rs. 3½ lakhs has been provided. Similar arrangements should be made for the other departments, and we should wait to see what amount of funds can be secured for them.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I feel not a little embarrassed in making my comments on the Budget, having regard to the fact that so many speakers have already done so. Many members no doubt will be pleased if my comments are brief, and I will try to be as brief as I possibly can. The Budget had been placed in our hands on Monday last, so we had scarcely six days' time to study the two volumes that were presented to us. It took no less than three months to prepare and consider all the details of the Budget. The Members of the Executive Council and other Government officers had ample time to study it, but it is rather too much to expect that the non-official members of this Council should digest the mass of figures supplied in those two volumes and understand all the intricacies of the Budget and the voted and non-voted items within the small space of six days. It requires something super-human to master all the intricacies in such a short time. Personally, I think it would be well if our representatives in the Cabinet of Bengal, I mean the Ministers, called some of us in groups to their office, took us into their confidence (the Official Secrets Act would be no bar to their doing so) and explained the policy they intended to follow regarding the insertion of the various items in the Budget. If they had a free, full and frank discussion with the people, it would have considerably lightened their labours and at the same time enabled us to understand the Budget much more fully than at present we are in a position to do. It would have avoided the unnecessary infliction of ill-informed and ill-digested speeches upon the Council, to which the official Members will have to reply. With these preliminary remarks, and without indulging in any further dialectic exercise, I come to the figures. It has been stated that I had not the pleasure of listening to all the speeches that were delivered yesterday, but, as far as I have been able to gather, some of the speakers did not touch the figures on which I wish to elicit some information. The two outstanding figures in the Budget which are discouraging are these—a deficit of Rs. 2,08,00,000 and the appropriation from the balance of Rs. 3,43,00,000 to make up the deficit. Now, Sir, this balance of Rs. 3,43,00,000 really amounts to Rs. 2,56,00,000, if we omit the Rs. 86,00,000 we have to return to the Government of India. I regret very much that the Bengal Government have decided to return this sum of Rs. 86,00,000 this year. Even an ordinary creditor would have mercy upon his debtor. I think that it would be judicious, kind and thoughtful on the part of the Imperial Government, if they had enabled the Bengal Government to repay this sum in instalments.

As regards the balance, of course, I do not object to the appropriation from the balance on the ground that no balance should be appropriated. I do object to the manner and method in which this appropriation has been made. I find that of the total sum of Rs. 2,08,00,000—the sum equivalent to our deficit—which it is proposed to draw from the provincial balance, only Rs. 67,35,000 will be available for the initiation of new schemes, while the lion's share of Rs. 1,40,00,000 will be swallowed up by ordinary expenditure on administration. Sir, this is certainly a disappointing feature in the Budget, and I do not know how it will be possible to meet the requirements of the administration in future years. Evidently, the accumulated balances are accidental savings effected by war stringencies mostly from Imperial grants originally expressly intended for such beneficent schemes of reform as education, sanitation, public health, agriculture, etc. Now the Government, however, propose to trench upon the unutilised funds which ought to be devoted to the promotion of the specific purposes for which they were earmarked. Excess of expenditure over revenue should not always scare us nor should it raise any unnecessary alarm. In state economics it is general politics to spend whatever you manage to get, though abnormal conditions now and then may force up the pace of all expenditure rather unusually over that of revenue, but a deficit, when it threatens to become chronic, is a standing menace to the solvency of the State, and in Bengal we are confronted with that peril. In this year, I find there is a deficit of Rs. 75,00,000; in the next year's Budget the deficit mounts up to Rs. 2,08,00,000, and what the future deficit would be I almost shudder to contemplate. One main cause of this recurring deficit has originated from the financial readjustment of the Government of India. We have to contribute Rs. 63,00,000 as our tribute to the Government of India; that is a permanent tribute we have to pay to the coffers of the Government of India unless some readjustments are made. The balances of this year are indeed a windfall, because they may not occur every year. They will disappear and, as far as I understand, we must have at least Rs. 30,00,000 or Rs. 40,00,000 as our closing balance. There is no chance of appropriation next year from the closing balance. Now what are we to do?

There are three courses open to us:—

- (1) Fresh taxation - I do not think the popular Ministers would dare to face such a contingency.
- (2) The diversion of the proceeds of the jute export only to the provincial revenues and a more equitable readjustment of our financial arrangement with the Central Government. It has been dwelt upon so often and so fully, that I do not want to dwell upon it again.
- (3) Adoption of a judicious loan policy, as recommended by the Finance Member in his opening speech. Let us examine that loan policy. Let us consider for a moment the recommendation in its practical bearing. The closing balance for the next year is estimated to be about Rs. 52,36,000.

Of the proposed expenditure of Rs. 2,08,31,000 from the balances of the current year to meet the deficit during the next year, it is calculated that only Rs. 94,00,000 can fairly be treated as capital expenditure which can be put on to a loan.

It is true that the Reforms have endowed us with the power of independent borrowing on our own account; and we must exercise this power, though with due circumspection and prudence. Even assuming that we do take the risk in our hands and float loans to finance our capital expenditure of Rs. 94,00,000, how can we find funds for our non-capital expenditure, which still shows a deficit of more than a crore of rupees; and the closing balances will shrink into something like half a crore next year, an amount much less than half the deficit in non-capital expenditure. Hence, unless the revenue increases magically to an undreamt-of figure, a chronic deficit must have to be faced in the future, even in province of non-capital expenditure, which cannot be raised by loan.

The next point is about loans. We have not got any figures statement to show how the loans are to be financed. It is assumed that if we raise a loan, it must be repaid from the revenue, and the loan must be raised on productive works. We have no information on this subject at least we have not understood the Finance Minister to say what are the works in respect of which he wants to raise a loan, and what return he expects to get from the works to be carried out of borrowed capital. There is an expenditure of Rs. 1,86,00,000; assuming that we float a loan next year, how much does he expect to borrow and thereby set free revenue for ordinary expenditure? How much does he expect to get back for payment of interest and sinking fund? This information will be very interesting to the House.

Again, we have seen in the next year's Budget how sadly we have been disappointed in the appropriation of the sums for the transferred departments, which should have been more liberally financed and backed up. We find that the proportion is 65 per cent. and 35 per cent. Sixty-five per cent. of the expenditure is to be incurred in respect of reserved subjects, and 35 per cent. for the transferred. On what basis this percentage has been arrived at we are at a loss to understand. I hope we shall get more information on this point. It cannot be denied, to quote the happy expression of Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee, that the nation-building activities of the State will be much restricted, for we find that the allotments made in respect of education, sanitation, public health, agriculture, industries, etc., are very disappointing. Here a fragment, there a fragment, has been allotted. We do not know how it is possible for our popular Ministers to launch into schemes of development of the country. I think we ought to have some information on this point as well as from the Hon'ble Ministers.

It is also to be noted, although I have not got the actual figures before me, that the bulk of the increased expenditure is absorbed by the provisions for the improvement of the pay and prospects of the superior and subordinate establishments. I do not deny the necessity of improving the pay and prospects of these services, but at the same time we must also see how much of the revenue is swallowed up by increased salary or creation of new posts.

Turning to education, we find that a sum of Rs. 94,000 will have to be found for leave allowances for educational officers in England, and another Rs. 94,000 somewhere in the Budget for leave allowances of officers of the Indian Medical Service. A paltry provision of Rs. 40,000 has been made for the increase of the pay of teachers in primary schools over and above the sum of Rs. 1,00,000 for the improvement of primary education in the mufassal—a provision which is likely to be interpreted as a mere mockery in comparison with the magnitude of the demand of 46,240 schools in Bengal.

The speaker, having reached the time-limit, was allowed a few minutes more to conclude his speech.)

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I know that I have exceeded the time-limit, and do not wish to encroach on the time of the Council, but I just wish to say a few words in conclusion. There is a sense of general disappointment with the Budget which has been presented to us, and I hope the Ministers will take us into their confidence and give us some more information to enable us to hope that the Reforms, which are a free gift from a freedom-loving nation, will be a reality and not a mockery.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I have your high authority that these are the days for general discussion, and I intend to carry out your orders on the subject, and I therefore do not like to enter on any consideration of any particular item of the Budget, but I want to say something on the principle, that is, on the basic and central principle of this Budget and the Budget alone.

Sir, I am one of those who are in favour of conventions or platitudes. The only justification I have to stand here on behalf of my countrymen, is to speak out the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, on the subject as the country feels it. With regard to that, I may tell you that on a perusal of the Budget, the feeling that was uppermost in my mind was one of gross disappointment and unrelieved gloom and I found no silver lining to the dark clouds. It is a Budget which no nation aspiring to self-government can possibly accept. It is an insult to ask a nation which is aspiring for self-government, to accept a Budget of this description; and I hope I shall be able to bring out every little point in my speech, as I know it from the facts given in this Budget. Sir, what the country wants to know is, what have the new Reforms done for them? That is the great thing that the country wants to know; and what is the answer? So far as the Budget is concerned, and this is really an abstract of the whole situation, the Reforms have done absolutely nothing. I draw your attention, Sir, to the fact that in reading this Budget I find in every page of it, in every line of it, the same old autocratic policy, no change absolutely therein. I find further the same old, old motto which is "children of the soil last and the least." If this is Reform, we had better have none of it.

I find, Sir, the same old enemies peeping through every line of the Budget, grinning at us and mocking us for our foolish hopes and aspirations based on the new Reforms. These are our old enemies, and, one by one, I shall give them names and you will be able to know them. They are very old enemies and very well-known.

The first and foremost enemy of us, the children of the soil, is the iniquitable and the unfair adjustment of public revenues between subjects involved under the new nomenclature, transferred and reserved subjects, 35 per cent. as against 65 per cent. Is this fairness, is this justice, is this the inauguration of the new era which we have been asked to welcome from the highest to the lowest? Is this what we are asked to accept with a whole-hearted co-operation; to accept and say, we have got the gracious boon from a gracious Sovereign? Why show this difference? Why should the transferred subjects have 35 per cent. and why should the other subjects, the reserved subjects, have 65 per cent? I am sure I do not know the answer; the Hon'ble Member must explain this to us. The answer is no other than this—it may be covered in any manner of verbal foliage, but you will find if you reduce it to the barest skeleton, that it is this—"tradition." To this answer of "tradition" my reply is "Kismet and oh! the new Reforms."

Then, I come to our next enemy, equally old and equally well known, and that is—the improper and unjust division of public revenues among the different communities; and in this connection, I would ask you, Sir, I will draw attention to a table which I have prepared, and which will show at a glance how things are being managed and done.

European	Rs.	Indian	Rs.
(1) Grant in aid additional to Kalimping alone ...	80,000	Increased grant in aid to schools throughout Bengal	1,00,000
(2) Additional building grant to European schools ...	50,000	Additional building grant to Indian schools all over ...	1,00,000
(3) Additional salary grant in aid—		Additional salary grant to teachers in primary school throughout Bengal, numbering about 44,000 ...	40,000
Calcutta Free School ...	9,000
Victoria and Dow Hill Schools ...	40,000
For three schools ...	49,000

So you find the same old enemy pursuing us even here. This is the new Reform which has been ushered in with a considerable amount of fanfare, and which was here so elaborately inaugurated with pomp and pageantry by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught.

Then we come to the third old enemy—the irritating differences which have been not only maintained, but have been emphasised and accentuated. The evidence is first, on the one hand,—Furniture for European nurses of the Medical College, Rs. 10,000. I do not grudge it, but look to the other—Dispensaries in the whole of Bengal, not less than 765, the splendid sum of Rs. 15,000, working out at Rs. 2 each per month! Then married European sergeants' quarters: for land only—Rs. 2,83,000. We do not know if we shall be asked to vote for another Rs. 10,00,000 next year for this. On the other hand, for the Indians—Primary education for the whole of this country—the magnificent grant of Rs. 1,00,000

The same old and irritating distinctions!

Then, Sir, we come to the fourth of our old enemies, and what is that? That friend which has been troubling us for so many years, and is still peeping through in spite of the new Reforms, and what is that? It is the same callous indifference of the Government to the real interests of the people, in whose charge they are put there by Providence in matters of vital importance. These are mainly, first of all, "Suffering and Sanitation." What has been done in these matters? As regards these, we do not find mention of a single scheme of anything like anti-malarial operations; nothing at all. Great were our expectations that these things would be taken up when the new Reforms came into inception. On the contrary, we find only Rs. 15,000 given to all the dispensaries—a princely gift for the suffering humanity of this country and for a people who are dying almost daily from malaria! Thus are we encouraged in active practical work! I am one of those who in a humble way are carrying on a school in my own native village. The students' attendance has gone down to nothing, and this is due to deaths from malaria. Formerly this village, in the district of Hooghly, was, according to Dr. Bentley, one of the healthiest; now malaria has become so very rampant in that very village that the present number of boys on the school rolls is only 30, my heart trembles, I am most disappointed, and I am thinking of giving up the work. What is being given for all this—only Rs. 15,000 for the whole of Bengal!

Then comes in "Ignorance and Primary Education." What is the kindness and consideration of the Government in this matter? You will find on page 58 of the Budget, it is a generous grant of Rs. 1,00,000 for the whole of Bengal, about 44,000 schools! This for schools, for primary education! In a worse position than even jails, where the grant is Rs. 1,28,000. Is primary education a matter which has got to take a place even below jails? Is it not the soundest principle that "you open a school and close a jail"? Jails will thrive and primary schools will dwindle to nothing for want of funds, and this is the new Reforms.

Then, Sir, I come to the last item, viz., Agricultural and Vocational education, which my great and esteemed gun called one of the most important "nation-building" departments. With regard to agriculture what is the additional expenditure? Rs. 5,000 for five farms! What a wonderful gift, Rs. 5,000 for five farms! This is an insult, not only cruelty but an insult to us, that in a country like this we should get Rs. 5,000 for five farms! What else Rs. 7,000 for the purchase of bullocks! Beautiful! Then I may ask the House to consider what a splendid investment this must be, and how the poor people of Bengal will derive the benefits thereof.

As regards vocational education, you find in the civil estimates on page 122, that last year (1920-21) in the Industries Department, the Budget allotment was Rs. 1,92,000. This year the estimate is Rs. 8,56,000. Nobody would have been more glad than myself and my countrymen to welcome this increase, if we found that there was the slightest possibility of its being spent for educational purposes.

Then you will find that of this only Rs. 2,36,000 goes to schools and Rs. 4,52,000 to the increase of the Director's establishment. Is not this one of our oldest enemies? Did not I begin my career in this Council by pointing out that the hand of the nurse would absorb all the allotment and leave very little for the painful parts of the poor patient?

(The speaker, having reached the time-limit, was allowed 3 minutes more to continue and finish the remainder of his speech.)

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Then comes the last but not the least—the greatest of our enemies in that line; I mean figuratively it is the same old friend, the same old thing—the old partiality of the Government for the police and their love of repression. It is so visible in every page of this new Budget of this new era, of this new Reform. I will give you a table which will show you the increase in the light of intelligence.

In 1910-11 the total expenditure was about Rs. 90 lakhs; five years later, in 1915-16, it was Rs. 1,09,00,000, next year, in 1916-17, it was Rs. 1,16,00,000, i.e., Rs. 7 lakhs more; in 1917-18, Rs. 1,26,00,000 i.e., Rs. 10 lakhs more; in 1918-19, Rs. 1,32,00,000, i.e., Rs. 6 lakhs more; in 1919-20, Rs. 1,43,00,000, i.e., Rs. 11 lakhs more; in 1920-21 it was Rs. 1,63,00,000, i.e., Rs. 20 lakhs more; and in the next year Budget Rs. 1,90,00,000 for the police, and I shall remind you again—Rs. 1 lakh for primary education, Rs. 15,000 for dispensaries, and Rs. 5,000 for agricultural farms! Is it because you have no money, that the reason why we cannot have the good things that we want? No, it is because of this: that somebody else who is more powerful than ourselves, viz., our Government, has got the power to take it away from us. That is the reason. The question is now that we are on the threshold of a new era that has been given to us, Government should reconsider the circumstances and not stick to their old habits. In the Police table, there is one thing of great interest, and that is, that in the first five years of the Morley-Minto reforms, expenditure went up by Rs. 20,00,000; in the next five years, it was Rs. 54,00,000; and in the first year alone, before you are a day old under this new Reform, it takes another big jump of Rs. 27,00,000 at once, in this one year. And again I say, “Kismet, and oh! the new Reforms.”

(The speaker having finished the 3 minutes allotted to him, was allowed a minute more to conclude his sentence.)

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: This table shows an increase from Rs. 90 lakhs to Rs. 1 crore and 90 lakhs. This is progressive realisation indeed, if not of responsible government, at least of irresponsible waste!!

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS CUPTA: Before I proceed to discuss generally some aspects of the Budget, presented to this Council, I take this opportunity of thanking the Government for its solicitude to adopt the "line of least resistance" by making up the deficit, by appropriating the past-balances, in view of the strong public opinion, in favour of "retrenchments" all round, and against the imposition of any fresh burden of taxation upon the people, in these hard days of exorbitantly high prices of the necessaries of life. I sincerely congratulate the Hon'ble Finance Member for his lucid and candid exposition of the extremely complicated and awe-inspiring figures, with which many of the members have to deal for the first time in their lives, and we have also to be grateful to him for placing his own and Mr. Mann's services at the disposal of members "for any information or any explanation that may be required on points not clear" to them. But, Sir, the fact remains that we are in an awful plight. A deficit of over Rs. 2,08,30,000 is bound to send a thrill of horror through the stoutest of hearts and bravest among us, and, until ways and means are indicated to meet this deficit, there can be no peace of mind for those who may have the humblest share in the administration of the country. In this state of things, no scheme of progress on any line whatsoever can be thought of. Palliatives are no good. Makeshift budgets bring no solace to the administrators, who suffer from pain and anguish for want of means to remove unavoidable wants. These budgets have sometimes been very aptly described as mere jugglery in figures, which enable financiers to keep back the real state of things from the public gaze and scrutiny. The present Budget is not amenable to a charge like that, because all its ugliest and worst features are transparently clear to the veriest stripling, who may choose to look at the figures. The pity of the whole thing lies in the fact that the "Reforms" which were heralded into life, with such a fanfare, have to start with such a heavy handicap. The Government may be wise in its way, in not resorting to any fresh taxation to meet the huge deficit and thus avoiding the adding of fresh fuel to the fire of agitation that is blazing in the country. But to meet this huge deficit by drawing on balances, which consist of doles granted by the Government of India to meet expenditure on specified objects, is certainly a measure of doubtful statesmanship and of questionable commonsense. It is after all a makeshift and the application of a temporary palliative, calculated to have no permanent soothing effect. This deficit again, to my mind, does not represent the actual deficit which we shall have to meet in future. Even in the "transferred" subjects and departments, which one of our Hon'ble Ministers aptly described as the "nation-building" subjects and departments, such as "Education" and "Public Health," we require vast sums of money to make even a modest beginning on sound practical lines. The dense mass of illiteracy has to be removed, the standard of health has to be raised, and the serious bread-problems have to be tackled, by the introduction of real technical and industrial education in the country.

Mr. Rushbrook Williams, in his report on India in 1919, says: "Just 3 per cent of the population is under instruction—in the last census (1911) only six individuals in every hundred could achieve the very modest standard of literacy." Further he very pertinently observes in the same report that "until the general standard of literacy can be raised, it will be impossible for India to realise her immense industrial potentialities. The first step towards making immediate improvement is the allocation of larger funds." We want to make primary education free and compulsory, and the legislation to that effect has already been passed. But the question of questions remains, where to find the money?

The Hon'ble the Finance Member said in his speech introducing the Budget: "We have found it necessary, in consultation with the various departments, to reduce very greatly the original demands of the departments and to postpone the execution of many excellent and highly desirable schemes." Further he thanked the Ministers for the ready manner in which they met (the Finance Department) in this respect. But, Sir, the position of the Ministers must be very uncomfortable indeed. They have to justify their presence in this Council and the new system of Government before the country, by introducing some very urgent and long-deferred improvements and reforms in their "nation-building" departments. How can they do so without more money? In summing up the present financial condition depicted in the Budget, the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr said: "The total expenditure for the year stands at Rs. 11,80,13,000, which far exceeds the annual expenditure in any previous year. Large as the amount is, it is still far short of the needs of the Presidency. As has been explained already, progress has been delayed in almost every direction. A special officer is engaged in drawing up a scheme for the improvement of primary education in Bengal. As soon as some line of action in this matter is decided upon, very large expenditure will have to be faced. The necessity for educating cultivators in improved and scientific methods of cultivation is pressing. The need for more money to spend on sanitation and medical schemes is well-known and so on and so forth." He winds up by saying, that it must not be assumed therefore that the sum earmarked next year is anywhere near the maximum. This is very disappointing and disheartening. To meet the huge deficit of over Rs. 2 crores, by utilising the unspent balances, earmarked as doles for certain purposes, is hardly fair and partakes of the nature of a "gamble." The future is very gloomy, and without resort to fresh taxation and to the exercise of the borrowing power which the new scheme gives us a "boon," I for one moment cannot think of any way to get out of this muddle. To resort to fresh taxation, for meeting the deficit mostly caused by lavish in the salaries, pensions, etc., on the ground of high prices, etc., is not only not "fair," but is zulum in the worst sense of the term. Are not the tax-payers affected by the present economic strain? Evidently the policy followed is that of robbing Peter to pay Paul. Does it not show that the "Reforms" have come with the costliest administration? In other countries the word "Reform" is always associated with the word "retrenchment," but here we have the word "extravagance" associated with it. The homely proverb "to cut the coat according to the cloth," though embodying a very plain and evident truth, has been given a complete go-by, by those who are responsible for allowing such vast expenditure in giving "increase" to the salaries of all the services. It is very easy to be generous with other people's money, particularly, when those other people happen to be dumb and marticulate. I beg to enter my strongest protest against the "increase" allowed in this state of our poor finances, particularly to the princely salaries which all the higher-service-officers draw. The increases allowed or about to be allowed to the ministerial and menial establishments, for enabling the men to keep their bodies and souls together, may be justified, but what have we to say with regard to the higher and superior branches of the services? This top-heavy administration cannot stand long, without tumbling down, unless it is replaced by "cheaper agencies." Even if we look to the vast undeveloped resources of the province, there is no doubt that we shall have to spend large sums of money at the initial stages of the process of development, and "returns" are not to be expected in the near future. The Hon'ble the Finance Member, whose "robust optimism" is really amazing, refers us to the "borrowing power" conferred upon us, under the present arrangement, and asks us to exercise it on remunerative works. But in the same breath, he is constrained to say that unfortunately our total income is sufficient to meet our recurring expenditure and, until this deficit is got rid of, we cannot use our borrowing powers to the best advantage. A sound loan policy presupposes provision for a sinking fund, under which loans taken for specified objects will be paid off, both principal and interest, before the life of the project comes to an end. Here the ground on which we stand is evidently vanishing away under our feet.

To come next to our power for independent taxation. A glance at the Government of India Act will show that our power in that direction is extremely limited. In every direction we are "cribbed, cabined and confined." Besides the tolls or taxes which local bodies usually levy for local purposes, there is very little for us. Schedule I of the Act enumerates eight heads of taxes, which are within our competence, and the four out of those eight are not at all new and unexploited—only there are four kinds of taxes which this Council can impose, to make two ends meet, namely—(1) a tax on betting or gambling (2) a tax on advertisements, (3) a tax on amusements, and (4) a tax on any specified luxury. It is ridiculous to think of any of these taxes being resorted to, for the purpose of meeting this huge deficit.

The hope of the Government of India or the Secretary of State coming to our rescue, by restricting and reducing our contribution to the Government of India to the net receipts of the income-tax, is yet only a hope and a pious wish, and financial adjustments can never be equitable between unequal partners. The maxim that "nothing is unfair in love and war" has the widest application in cases like this. The circumstances loudly call for the immediate constitution and formation of a "Retrenchment Committee" with extensive powers to examine every detail of administration and to suggest remedies for this impasse. It may be said that many of the heads of expenditure, where retrenchment may be possible, are beyond our jurisdiction and competence. Even there we can recommend retrenchment and voice public opinion, of which we are supposed to be an organ—which in these days ought to be irresistible. Before the final adoption of the Budget, we want to have the benefit of the recommendations and suggestions of such a useful committee. The stability and prosperity of every business concern are indicated by the "Reserve funds," which it can keep or maintain, not only to meet emergencies, but also for future developments. Here we have to look to our "opening and closing" balances. The opening balances, which have been drawn upon to meet the deficit and which have been described as "unduly swollen," represent earmarked doles, on specified objects, to which they were never applied. Whatever justification there may be for meeting the deficit in the current year in the way in which it has been done, we are now confronted with the serious problem of meeting our recurring expenditure. It would have been a great consolation, if the Hon'ble Finance Member could point his finger to any way, however crooked and nasty, besides the glorious privilege of "borrowing" to get out of this labyrinth. This reminds me of a very common story current among us, relating to the case of a prodigal and spendthrift heir of a rich father. The heir was very much inconvenienced by the father not allowing him sufficient funds to meet all his requirements and also by asking grabbing money-lenders, not to lend any money to the heir-apparent, on pain of his disinheritance. But as soon as the father died, the prodigal son started on his mad career of borrowing right and left, and had the candidness to tell one of his companions: "What a fine situation! I can now get any amount of money by simply putting my signature to a piece of paper" (meaning notes of hand, etc.). Our position is no way better than that of the prodigal heir.

There is one sound business principle which is followed everywhere, namely, not to spend a pice more than is absolutely necessary. Of course I am not one of those who will ask for economy at the sacrifice of efficiency. But where equally good and cheaper agency is available, why should we go to costlier agencies? Why should we have Imperial service men, when we can manage the administration with the less costly Provincial service men? Many sins of both omission and commission have been committed in the past, in the name of efficiency and prestige two fetishes we have got to discard. We are on the very brink of a precipice. Even in England, one of the richest countries in the world, a vigorous anti-waste campaign has been started, and the time is not far distant, when all the wasteful departments of Government shall have to be brought to the melting-pot. Circumstanced as we are, we have got to be guided by some sound economic principles, and not by makeshift devices. The statutory committee on public accounts, which will shortly be constituted, may not serve the purpose which a committee for "retrenchment" is likely to do.

Then, with regard to "demands" and grants. We have not been told how the percentage of 65 : 35 has been arrived at, with regard to reserved and transferred subjects. Whatever may be the method of calculation, it is highly desirable that the transferred subjects, which include the "nation-building" departments, should be more generously dealt with. In conclusion, Sir, taking a common-sense view of the situation, I should suggest that, firstly, we should try to effect retrenchment, secondly, we should stay our hands from works, which can very well stand over, till we attain some sort of financial equilibrium, and lastly, we should set ourselves to the task of developing all unexploited resources and tapping all available sources of income.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I feel inclined to take a dip into the sea of figures which have been so admirably put up and arranged by the Hon'ble the Finance Member. I do not know whether any suggestions, which I shall be able to bring out therefrom, will be valuable or not, but at any rate I shall come in for my share of the saline water. On the very face of it the Budget seems to be a budget of huge deficit, which is not a very comfortable aspect sufficient to induce us— young councillors—to run amok like young colts, but, if we have got some brains left in us, we shall set at thinking very seriously what is the meaning of all this and how to meet the deficit, because the Budget will not end in the course of this year, but we shall have to go into the same thing next year, and thus year after year. This leads me to think what the income of the estate is. Well, Sir, having taken into consideration some of the figures which have been shown on the receipt side, I find that they are really inflated. We ought to have been rather cautious in these estimates. The figures have been taken, as I understand, upon a calculation of normal years; but according to the official admission after two fat years or three fat years usually comes a lean year. Under the Land Revenue head we find, though it has been admitted that the land revenue of Bengal is not elastic enough to admit of any expansion, that we have got an anticipated increase of Rs. 3,65,000.

Under the head of Excise, we have an anticipated increase of Rs. 8,00,000, in Stamps, over Rs. 13,00,000; Registration, Rs. 1,00,000. But we should count for two factors which have come into existence. We all know that there is a serious movement for the purpose of not going into courts and also for the purpose of not patronising the Excise Department. Whatever may be the pious wish of any of us, in order to get the money from these people, it is well nigh certain that ordinary people will not indulge in these sorts of things, at least to the extent they did in previous years. And I, for myself, will certainly thank them if they do so. That being so, so far as Excise is concerned, we have got really to give up the idea of saving Rs. 8,00,000; and so far as Stamps are concerned from what we judge from the general civic consciousness, I think the people will not go into courts and ruin themselves as before.

As for the new project of paper-book making, which I find has been taken up with an amount of zeal by Government, in that they have budgeted Rs. 1,30,000 for it, all the said conditions and the high costs of litigation will certainly lead to a reduction of litigation in the High Court, and that will lead to a reduction of our stamp revenue.

Then, for Registration, I am very glad to see that though the Hon'ble the Finance Member representing the benign Government has grown eloquent when he has to account for the grant of high salary on the top and also to leave some crumbs of bread for the lower rungs, he has also recognised, while accounting for the anticipated increase of Rs. 1,00,000 under the head of Registration, that there is distress and long-suffering on the part of the poor people of this country. This logic of recognising the poverty and distress of the people in general as the governing factor in giving the increase of Rs. 1,00,000 to Registration is appreciated. At the same time, in another place, he says: "Oh, then position will be alleviated on account of the good harvest, and they will be drinking and smoking ganja, and thereby the excise revenue will be increased." I, for myself, fail to see the point, which, as my friend Mr. Surendra Nath Mullick has very eloquently expressed, is that while you have got to make certain arrangements, and you have got to plead for your case, however weak it may be, you have got to put forward some sort of argument in order to justify this unfair allocation of money among the different heads of the Budget. That being so, we find that Rs. 30,00,000 has been shown as an inflated income on the receipt side.

Now, turning to the debit side, I am inclined to divide the subjects into two parts—the first relates to those which have been so eloquently described by the Grand Old Man of Bengal as the nation-building departments, and those which can generally be described by the name of administrative departments for the purpose of running the State, the only object of which is to ensure the material and moral progress of the people in general. Now, that being so, it ought to be remembered that a rupee which may be laid out for the subjects which lead to the material and moral progress of the people is a rupee that is really gained and not lost. That being so, one would really expect that a Government, which is earnestly and sincerely bent on doing good to the country, would lay out as much money as possible under the heads of Sanitation, Education, Public Health, and Agriculture. Mr. Mullick has analysed these figures, and I shall not go into them. But I shall tell you in one moment that not only year after year very small grants have been allotted under these heads, but, curiously enough, in spite of all these increases in the paraphernalia of establishments and the rise of pay in season and out of season in these establishments, it appears by comparison of the figures for three or four years, that even considerable amounts could not be spent even last year. I will only compare a few figures and put them before you for what they are worth.

Now, Sir, the very first figure, which I find, comes under Public Health. Page 2 of the Budget shows that in 1920-21, Rs. 15,67,000 was allotted as against Rs. 14,12,000 of the previous year. Out of this, we see that almost one-sixth was not spent. Similarly, the figures for Industries and Education have been analysed fully and I shall not again go into them. We know how education has suffered and how the money, which was allotted for the poor maulvis and pandits, who draw a very small pittance, was withheld. It appears that a certain amount of money was returned as unspent. This is the way the inspecting staff are discharging their duties, and something should be done in this connection.

Coming to Medical, we come across a similar tale, and it is very curious that, as a matter of fact, the major portion of the money that is allotted under this head falls to the lot of the metropolis and to a very few districts close by, outlying districts like Chittagong, which want to have some crumbs of the loaf, are altogether neglected. The sympathetic Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan knows how anxious the people of Chittagong are to have a medical school there, and the principle was recognised long, long ago by Government, but even such a petty scheme as that was not approved of, although money is going like water to projects like the Ranchi Lunatic Asylum. We have, however, no quarrel with that in particular.

Coming to the figures under Police, my friend, Mr. Mullick, has told you how the grants are being increased. Practically the increase is not in an arithmetical progression but in a geometrical progression. Under the head of General Administration, more and more money is being allotted and there is an increase— an increase resembling the rapidity of the fall of a cataract. I shall not go into the figures, but it is a fact which is borne out by a glance at page 2 of the Budget. What we find is that practically no less than 75 per cent. of the total amount of receipts goes to the upkeep of the administrative departments the very object of which is really to see to the material and moral progress of the country which is being so sadly starved.

That being so, strenuous efforts should be made to find out the way of curtailment of expenditure, and the curtailment should come at the top, and our administration is really very top-heavy so that the pruning knife should be at once applied there on the first instance.

Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: It is really gratifying that in spite of the tumult of political life and the din of non-co-operation abroad, we have assembled under the new regime to take stock of our financial position under the Reforms which have given us a provincial autonomy. The Budget, as presented, calls for serious comments under many heads, and I should have taken the liberty of offering them on some of the most important heads, but my hon'ble colleagues and friends, Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri and Babu Surendra Nath Ray, Deputy-President, and other hon'ble members of this Council, have sufficiently dealt with them. I would therefore refer only to two matters which affect East Bengal closely.

A.—As regards the extension of the Dacca Medical School: Administrative sanction of Rs. 56,000 was received in May 1920, and it will come as a great disappointment to Eastern Bengal that no provision has been made to meet this. Sir, I would request that the amount be budgeted as the work should be complete before next September. My reasons are as follows:—

The Dacca Medical School has more than doubled in number since 1917. Capital expenditure on buildings was confined to what was absolutely necessary, i.e., about Rs. 12,000, during the war. Since then with the increase of students, some small additions have been made, but more are necessary.

These include anatomical accommodation—estimated cost Rs. 15,000—which is all we ask for at present, but this is really urgent as it must be provided by September 1st 1921, so as not to interfere with school work next winter session.

The income from fees has increased from Rs. 9,663 to Rs. 25,000 in the last four years, 1917–1921, and the cost per head to Government has been halved, i.e., from Rs. 110 to Rs. 70.

The enlargement really represents a new school of over 200 students, at a capital cost so far of about Rs. 25,000. The sum of Rs. 15,000 more, for which we now ask, will only make the capital expenditure Rs. 40,000 and with a new examination hall at Rs. 56,000, still under Rs. 1,00,000. It costs Rs. 5,00,000 in capital expenditure to provide a new school. Our demands are, therefore, very small and eminently economical.

It was enlarged, Sir, at the urgent request of Government, and now we are only asking that Government shall perform a small portion of their part of the bargain. The education now given is suffering to some extent, owing to the lack of accommodation. Students have to sit in the congested rooms and outside in the open space and in the verandahs.

B—As regards the Dacca University: The amount budgeted under this head is insufficient, and in view of the reply which Government gave to my interpellation on the 7th February, viz., that the Dacca University will be in working order from July next; I would humbly request Government to allot a sufficient amount for the work which is essentially necessary to begin. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that already the delay in my part of the province has caused great disappointment, and it is only fit and proper that the feelings of East Bengal should be a little more respected in this matter. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick" is a well tried maxim, and I would beg to tell the Government that the working of the scheme should not be delayed a day longer, for we know that the Government of India contributed certain amounts annually for this work and the Government of Bengal is bound, and morally bound, to allot the amount which is just now necessary to give the work a start. I am afraid I cannot, from the papers circulated, make out as to what amount the Government of India has given to the Provincial Government so far for this scheme, but I should not be surprised if a portion of the provincial balance spoken of in the note of the Hon'ble Finance Member is the unspent balance of that amount, and it is only reasonable that Government should now allot sufficient funds for giving the University an immediate start without any further delay. I do realise fully the present financial position of Government, and I fully sympathise with it, but I believe it will be conceded on all hands for clear reasons, that parsimony in the allotment of sufficient funds for the Dacca University at this moment will not only be disastrous, but also an act of bad faith to the people of East Bengal. I cannot put it higher than that, though one must feel a bit surprised and disappointed at the way in which some members have referred to this question—East Bengal wants, and badly wants, sympathy, and not unkind words.

Our position is unique in the financial arrangements made by the Government of India, and we have to cut our coat according to the cloth at our disposal. We are grateful to the Government of Bengal for the manly fight it put up before the Government of India in this matter, but, strange to say, nothing came out of it, though the case for Bengal was a very strong one. The Montagu-Chelmsford Report proposed to levy the contribution on the basis of an all-round ratio of the surplus of the budgets of the provinces. The Meston Committee rejected this plan, because it reproduces the existing inequalities of treatment, that the methods of arriving at normal expenditure were arbitrary, and did not take into consideration the needs of the provinces in the coming years, and that economical management and thrift on the part of some of the provinces were penalised. The new basis for levy pitched upon is the improvement in the resources as a result of the new rearrangement, and it is claimed that it creates minimum disturbance. It is because the plan proceeds on the lines of least resistance that the Committee's recommendation cannot be considered to be greatly superior to the original scheme, for many of the defects of the latter are found in the former. The Committee did not recommend that additional Imperial taxation should be resorted to in order to meet the deficit, on the comfortable assumption that it would be wrong to do so because the provinces have a large margin, which could be tapped. It is further pointed out that certain provinces, such as Madras, the United Provinces and Bengal, cannot digest the additional funds all at once, and it will be unwise to leave with them such a large amount. Bengal public opinion will undoubtedly resent most strongly this reflection on their ability to manage their own finances, and it is very regrettable, that having admitted that Bengal has a lower level of expenditure than the Central Provinces or other provinces, and that her needs are urgent and important, the Committee should have laid down the fanciful and unwarranted proposition that Bengal cannot for some years find profitable investments for her money. Another curious and objectionable fact must also be mentioned: an all round ratio on the improved resources is not, as one might think, proposed, but special consideration is given to Assam, the Central Provinces, Bihar and Burma. The arrangement, therefore, is deeply iniquitous to Bengal, which is called upon to bear the expenditure of other impecunious provinces. The rate of standard contribution to be reached six years hence is naturally vitiated by the same blemishes which characterise the initial levies. A number of circumstances have been taken into consideration in arriving at the standard contribution, i.e., the relative capacity of the provinces, their resources, industrial development, economic condition, and probability of future progress, etc. But admittedly the figures are arbitrary and defy any intelligible analysis. The question of the ultimate abolition of contribution is but incidentally referred to: while they say that the Government of India have such an idea, they warn the latter not to commit themselves definitely about it. This is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs; poignancy is added to regret by the long period over which the progressive deficit is spread in regard to the heavily taxed provinces. It is therefore perhaps right to say that the committee have failed in the most essential part of their duty, that is, in attempting a lasting solution of the problem. It is clear, the Imperial deficit is perfectly unnecessary, if it is inevitable, then the Government of India should improve their own resources, which are capable of expansion unlike the provincial sources of revenue. So long, therefore, as the financial injustice to Bengal is not remedied, I think this Council should be on its guard and try to retrench expenditure as much as possible. The committee for an enquiry into this question, as suggested by Mr. S. N. Mullick, a member of this House, is, therefore, an urgent necessity, and it is hoped Government will see its way to take action on the lines. What would then be our duty in the present condition of the country? Is it to thwart the working of the scheme under which we have met and produce an impasse, or to do our best to the scheme smoothly and successfully and pave the way for steady march towards the goal? It is to be hoped, and most earnestly hoped, that the country will have the good sense to perceive that progress can be achieved sooner by utilising the merits of the scheme and the opportunities for work than by exploiting its defects and manœuvring for the breakdown of the machinery. It would perhaps be not wise to imagine any antagonism between the schemes of the Reserved and Transferred subjects and to ignore the just claims of the one or the other. A comprehensive view of the needs of the entire administration and a spirit of harmonious co-operation between the people and the Government and between the different classes of the body politic are the requirements of the future. The successful working of the scheme now inaugurated is the surest means for attaining the final goal in the shortest possible time. It is to be hoped that the Members of Government will be animated by a feeling of loyalty to accomplish facts and, in a spirit of mutual trust and confidence, strive to bring about the success of the Reforms. The wishes of His Imperial Majesty in this regard are widely known throughout the length and breadth of the country, and no better proof of it could possibly exist than the coming of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught with a mission from His Imperial Majesty to this country with the message of hope. The words of His Highness the Duke of Connaught, which are words of hope and encouragement, sympathy and affection, and so nobly uttered, should prove an inspiration to us. The present century, so aptly called the "Century of Hope," may not, let us pray, be one of "Despair," and, in this hope, let us work for that Self-Government or Swaraj, of which the beginnings we have already started.

Babu FANINDRALAL DE: After a most careful and anxious survey of the various facts and figures of the Budget on the table, I regret much to say that after all the Budget presents very discouraging features; nay, it has raised a tune, strikingly discordant with the spirit of the era of Reform. Bengal has all along been a solvent province; it is a pity that with the advent of the Reforms it begins with an estimated deficit of more than 2 crores of rupees. No doubt a certain portion of it will be spent as capital expenditure, but still the amount left, Rs. 14,00,000, for carrying out the ordinary work of administration, is quite disquieting. The authorities are not to be congratulated that there is no fresh taxation this year and the deficit can be made up from the surplus at their disposal.

Sooner or later, nay in the very next Budget, fresh taxes must be introduced, if the present administrative machine is to move at all. There is no other way out of it. Even if the peculiar financial position of the province be reconsidered, and we are granted the jute export duty, it will simply mend the Budget as it is. No further developments will be possible, and yet the grants in the various departments, as we also feel, are the bare minima which His Excellency the Governor, after anxious consultation with the Members of his Executive Council and his Ministers, considers should be spent in the coming year. Again the jute export duty, even if introduced, will not come up to the pre-war level, owing to the increased consumption of raw materials in the local mills, and falling out of old customers. Any substantial increase of revenue from income-tax cannot be expected in the immediate future. Thus the prospect before us is either loan or fresh taxation. I know not which is worse. To carry the ordinary works of administration by loan, with no immediate prospects for increased revenue, is out of the question; while any fresh taxation at the present moment will be regarded as a disaster.

The huge deficit is mainly due to the increase in Salaries and Establishments, excepting the unavoidable item of the provincial contribution. Owing to a general rise in the cost of living, the Government has lavishly increased the salaries of the higher services, regardless of the resources of those who will have to bear the burden. The lower services and ministerial establishments require much greater attention, but no relief has yet been granted to them. In spite of a prospective deficit in the Budget, the Government went on increasing the salaries. They should have foreseen all these, more so, specially when the requirements in sanitation and education are considered.

Coming to the actual figures in the Budget, we find the distribution under Transferred and Reserved subjects to be about 35 per cent. and 65 per cent., respectively, practically the same as in the previous years. The transferred groups contain the subjects vitally important for nation-building, and we confidently expected that, with the advent of the Reforms, more attention would be paid to these departments, which have been more or less neglected hitherto. In a province like ours, which is preponderatingly agricultural, sanitation, agriculture and primary education should have the particular care of the Government; and, when the bread problem and the question of public health have been satisfactorily settled, much of the difficulties will be solved.

Under the Revenue heads the estimated increase of 4 per cent. in Excise against 6 per cent. in the current year, I am afraid, will not materialise. Out of a total of Rs. 3 crores in Excise, Rs. 1 crore 73 lakhs is expected from the sale of liquors, license, distillery fees, etc., and other excise drugs. The major portion of these is from country liquors, and about 70 per cent. of that is consumed in Calcutta and its surrounding mill areas. But in view of the 4 days' work system proposed to be introduced in the mills and the vigorous anti-drinking propaganda now raging in the country, it may be safely concluded that it will seriously affect the revenues. In the case of opium also, the results of the last Government sales are not very hopeful.

On the Stamp head the Government expects an increase of 5 per cent., against a decrease of 6 per cent. in the current year. The reasons for hoping so are not quite convincing, and the outlook and experience are definitely against it. The period of industrial boom is over, and the present economic depression will certainly continue for some time more. To this, if the present increased apathy to litigation is added, it will be no wonder if there be a substantial decrease in this head also.

An increase of Rs. 6 lakhs is expected from industries of cinchona cultivation. But a review of the rapid fall of revenue from this with the cessation of war hardly justifies this.

A study of these figures makes me believe that the revenue in the coming year will certainly fall short of the estimate, and the expected surplus will be used up.

Turning to the expenditure side, one will find that not only the proportions of the various departments are following their traditions, but the increments also are following the same paths.

Police, as usual, is getting the lion's share, and, in spite of the fact that the authorities admit that the grants in Sanitation and Education are the minimum possible, provisions for the rearrangement of the Town Police in the 24-Parganas and Hooghly, for married sergeants' quarters in Calcutta, and for the strengthening of the Asansol Emergency Force have been made. To add to this, the whole of the cost of the Railway Police is thrust upon as an additional burden on the revenue.

The grant for Education is rather of an illusory character. Out of a total of Rs. 18 lakhs, Rs. 9 lakhs are allotted to the Dacca University. I do not grudge the increased grant for European primary education, but it is a great pity that primary education for the masses has received no adequate consideration. The little extra grant for primary education is a mere drop in the ocean.

It is a pity that out of a budget of Rs. 12 crores, only about Rs. 20 lakhs have been allotted for Sanitation and Public Health in a province where malaria and other epidemic diseases are creating such annual havoc, inconceivable in other civilised countries. Agriculture also has no better lot. In a country where cultivators form 70 per cent of the population, a Rs. 20 lakhs allotment is quite inadequate and out of proportion.

In conclusion, with all my belief for the Reforms, I must say the Budget falls too short of the expectations of the new era. Reforms are declared as a boon to the country, and so it should be. People must live as in other democratic countries and work in co-operation with the Government for its moral and material prosperity. To attain this the Government is also expected to do its duty to the people, and should make ample provision for the various vital departments, such as Sanitation, Education, Agriculture, Industry, etc., which are the real factors of nation-building. It may be urged in reply that our resources are inadequate, but before the country submits to fresh impositions it must be satisfied that all possible retrenchments have been made. In the face of the present Budget, it can hardly be said that this has been attempted. My appeal to both branches of the administration is to set an example of economy: to the Executive Council, to cut down its exuberant body; to the Ministers, to cut down their extravagant emoluments.

Maulvi YAQUINUDDIN AHMED: The Budget has been presented by the Hon'ble Finance Member for the consideration of this House. On the eve of the constitution of the Reformed Council the pay of the officers has been increased, and the Hon'ble Finance Member has given a reason that the deficit of Rs. 2½ crores is to some extent due to that increase. The increase that was given on the eve of the constitution of the Reformed Council gives rise to the suspicion that the Hon'ble the Finance Member did not trust the reasonableness of this House. I think it would have been much better, and would have been more graceful, if such a fact that the officers' pay had to be increased on account of the rise in prices was placed before the House, and this House would have considered that such an increase ought to be given. But that trust was not vouchsafed to this House. They have been increased and we come here for the first time after the constitution of the Reformed Council to learn that there is a deficit of Rs. 2½ crores and more. I think that now, when there is a deficit, we have to face it manfully. We have heard already that the Finance Committee has been sitting, and have come to the conclusion that the Government of India have taken away a large amount of revenue and that Bengal has been treated most unmercifully, as compared with other provinces. Now that there is a deficit, I think that our people, instead of being afraid they would be freshly taxed, should go up to the Government of India for making up that deficit.

The treatment accorded to Bengal has been most unfair in comparison with that meted out to Bombay, Madras, the United Provinces and other provinces, and it is the bounden duty of the Government of India to come to the rescue of this province, when there is a deficit of Rs. 2½ crores. My countrymen should not be afraid that they are to be taxed, but we want that from the Government of India.

There are many items in the Budget which we have to consider, and we should cut our coat according to our cloth. I come first to the Dacca University. Nobody is more grateful to Government than I am for giving us that University, but at the same time we must consider, and I must put it before the House, that the Government has allotted a large amount for the construction of buildings. I think that only a few years back Dacca was going to be the capital of East Bengal and there were very spacious buildings erected by Government. I think that it is a sheer waste of money, now that the Dacca University is an accomplished fact, that instead of utilising those buildings, Government should have launched upon the erection of fresh buildings. I think this is a piece of extravagance, which we should curtail in order to make up the deficit.

I submit before the House that with regard to the expenditure on Industries and Agriculture and Public Health there is an increase in the inspecting staff by appointing commanders without an army to command. I would cite one or two instances. With regard to Agriculture, we find that Rs. 32,700 is going to be spent on the staff of the Director of Agriculture. The entire cost will come up to Rs. 85,000, which includes house rent, hill allowance, Dacca allowance, etc. But what about the amount to be spent on real agricultural work? Rs. 5,000 only!

Then I come to the Calcutta Medical College, for which a large provision has been made in the Budget. We know that in the Medical College students are often refused admission. Hundreds and hundreds of students every year apply for admission into the Medical College, and they are prepared to pay the full fees, but the Principal refuses them admission. But, if they are admitted on payment of full fees, we could make up a portion of our deficit. We can do it by an unrestricted admission of students, who come up to the standard and are willing to pay full fees for their admission. There are a thousand and one such ways for making up the deficit. The Hon'ble Finance Member has presented the deficit before the House, but I am sure there are means by which the deficit could be made up, as for instance by appointing a committee of inquiry about these receipts and expenditure. With these words I beg to resume my seat.

Mr. H. A. STARK: The several criticisms which have been offered on the Budget seem to me to have overlooked the important fact that its framers have had very little time for its preparation. The Government of India first settled the sources of income for Bengal, and then required the Government of Bengal to square the income of the province with its expenditure, when those who had to solve the problem had hardly had time to realise that they were the veritable Ministers and Councillors of a Legislative Council of a newly launched Reformed Government. Instead of it being realised that an exceedingly difficult task had been laid on our Executive Councillors and Ministers, and, instead of employing our imagination in picturing what we ourselves could or would have done, had we been placed in similar circumstances, we have been free with our condemnation. But, so far as I can remember, we have not advanced a single suggestion that can help the Ministers and Hon'ble Members out of the difficulty, into which they have been plunged not by themselves but by others. We seem to have lost sight of the circumstances that the Budget has been imposed upon our Government from outside—that it is a heritage of the immediate past, that it is in part the price we have to pay for a new form of Government. In all transition stages there are special difficulties to be encountered and we have no right whatever to expect that in financing our province in the first year of a popular Government there will be no compromises and no concessions to personal inclinations and judgments. Let us be at least generous enough to acknowledge that the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr and those associated with him in framing the Budget now under consideration, have been called upon to perform a well nigh impossible task; that they have not had a free hand; that they have had to steer successfully between an insufficient revenue and the present needs and demands of an ever-expanding expenditure. A great deal has been made of certain insufficient allotments and it seems to have been forgotten entirely that making an allotment is one thing and another thing to have the guarantee that the allotment made will actually be expended within the year. Admittedly, again, there is room for cleavage of opinion, such antagonism of conviction, for instance, as was evidenced yesterday between Professor Mukherji and Rai Pyari Lal Doss Bahadur, when they were discussing the provisions for the Calcutta University and the Dacca University. Admittedly, too, there are items of expenditure which we may regard as ill-proportioned and out of scale. Take, for instance, the expenditure of Rs. 21,25,000 on Stationery and Printing, when Rs. 10,68,000 is allotted to Universities and Rs. 25,99,000 to secondary education.

But let us be exact. When the amount set aside for primary education is Rs. 25,50,000 let us not say—as so many of us have said—that only Rs. 1,00,000 has been given to primary education. Indeed a good deal more than Rs. 25,50,000 will be spent on primary education, if we take into account the large sums spent on the primary sections of high schools or middle schools, on guru-training schools, on maktabs and on Koran schools, all of which really come within the sphere of primary education. I may be pardoned for saying that it is not fair to accuse the Minister for Education of being content to spend only Rs. 1,00,000 on primary education, when, as a matter of fact, Rs. 1,00,000 is being added by him to the Rs. 24,50,000 already being expended on that education.

It is with much regret—much personal regret—that I have heard so much made of the grant of Rs. 1,39,000 to European schools. It has been said that whereas the whole primary education in Bengal is to receive only Rs. 1,00,000, a handful of European and Anglo-Indian children are to have Rs. 1,99,000 expended upon their education. I wonder, Sir, whether it is realised that last year from the Provincial revenues of Bengal European schools received a little over Rs. 10,50,000, whereas their fees amounted to Rs. 12,50,000 and the income from their endowments and subscriptions to very nearly

Rs. 9,00,000. I do wish that we had similar figures to report for our Indian high schools. As a matter of fact, it is forgotten, it seems to me, that these very European schools teach quite a large percentage of Indian children—non-European children—and, so high is the value set on the education obtainable in European schools, that Indian gentlemen prefer to get their sons admitted into the aided European schools, in preference to the Hindu schools and colleges, and to the Calcutta Madrasah. One would like to ask, what would be the state of higher education for Indian girls, if such large numbers of them were not admitted into the European schools for girls? Let us have fair play all round. Let us make our acknowledgments of mutual benefits—benefits given and benefits received. We all belong to this province, and we ought to have an equal share in its citizenship. No one is asking for more than what is due. Let it not be forgotten that minorities require safeguarding. I do not know what the latest figures may be, but a few years ago the quinquennial report on education in India had it that European education cost annually Rs. 42½ lakhs, of which only Rs. 8½ lakhs, i.e., 20 per cent. came from provincial revenues, and the balance (80 per cent.) was paid entirely by the European and Anglo-Indian communities themselves. The same report shows that in the same year the provincial funds of Bengal bore 78 per cent. of the total expenditure on Indian secondary education, the Indians themselves bearing only 22 per cent., the proportion being nearly in inverse ratio to the proportions for European education. My work of 25 years took me through the length and breadth of Bengal, and I may claim that I have a fairly good knowledge of the whole province, of almost every subdivision or every thana of it, and I may state—and it is a well-known fact—that there are numerous municipalities, even large municipalities, such as Dacca, which do not spend even the 3·2 per cent. which is sanctioned under the Municipal Act, for expenditure upon primary education.

A great deal has been said about the grant of Rs. 80,000 to the Kalimpong Homes. Is it realised by the Council that the Kalimpong Homes got this Rs. 80,000 this year after they had raised Rs. 9 lakhs from private sources? I do wish, I say again, that we could say the same thing in respect of Indian schools. There are hundreds of Indian gentlemen, who have got much wealth, but who have not got the heart to help Indian education as they might help it.

Several speakers have referred to the deficit of Rs. 2½ crores, but I do not think that sufficient stress has been laid on the attempts that have been made to persuade the Government of India to restore to Bengal something of the large contributions she has made, and is still being called upon to make, to the Government of India exchequer. It is to be hoped that this Council, instead of finding fault with Executive Councillors and Ministers, will reinforce the contention put forward that Bengal is entitled to at least a part of her revenues from income-tax and the jute and tea industries. If her just claims were fairly met by the higher Government, Bengal would have no deficit: but if we are to continue to stand as we now are in respect of the financial adjustment between India and Bengal Governments, it is obvious that eventually we shall have to resort to fresh taxation, and yet I have noticed that we have fought shy of the very mention of fresh taxation. Why is this? Is it because we are still expecting that we shall not be in need of imposing fresh taxes, inasmuch as the Government of India is going to relent? Instead of hoping against hope, is it not better that we should face the situation straight? Merely criticising the Budget, which certainly has its defects, some remediable and others not, is not doing progressive or constructive work. If we can put the Budget right, let us show how that can be done. If we mean to wait and see, let us do so, and carry on with the Budget as now presented to us. It is idle to expect that the first Budget of a new Government will be acceptable in every respect and to every one. Only those who have the misfortune to frame a Government Budget know what an intricate matter it is, how intractable many of its factors, and sometimes how almost impossible. My considered opinion, Sir, is that we should take the present Budget as our starting point; set our Committee of Public Accounts to keep a strict watch over the year's expenditure; add to our experience of the practical working of the Budget; and thus prepare ourselves for the time when we shall have to make a new Budget for the next year.

Babu NALINI NATH ROY: In paragraph 7 of this year's Budget we find the following remarks:—

During the period of the war owing to enforced economy all new expenditure proposals are very carefully scrutinized and only urgent and unavoidable expenditure was permitted, with the result that all development was practically at a standstill. With all this leeway to make up, and in view of the difficulties in the way of making it up the Presidency is faced with an unparalleled demand for development in every direction.

In view of this pronouncement it behoves every member of the Council to suggest every possible source of economy. A sum of Rs. 29,00,000 is budgeted for the purpose of carrying on old-standing survey and settlement operations and for operations for three new districts.

Although three-fourths of the cost of these operations are realised from the people, I fail to understand why, in the face of so many demands and so little to meet them, new settlement operations are budgeted for, or even continued, in old districts. Even if the Government will not be any poorer to the extent of three-fourths of this cost—what about the people? Will it not make them less fitted to contribute towards sanitary provisions, for example, to voluntary local taxation, the value of which, as regards sanitation and other matters, has been observed by His Excellency the Governor on his tours?

Why not save even this one-fourth of Rs. 24 lakhs? It is not a negligible amount. I cannot think any amount of public money, however small, is a negligible factor in Bengal, treated as it is by the Imperial Government and by the scourge of malaria, why then let loose the loosest hordes of survey officials over the fair fields of Bengal to eat up the resources of the people? The need of sanitation, the eradication of malaria in particular, are paramount. This need far transcends any other needs in this land of shifting rivers. I would even say that it overrides the claims of education. Most certainly we want education and mean to have it, but it is well known that education is not needed for its own sake—except by the philosopher—but as a means to other ends. We want education and the spread of it to every village, to every home, but why? I should say and urge that the principal objective of education in this province, if not in every province, should be to teach the people the elements of sanitation. The other objective of education is to make us prosperous and happy, but one must first of all live and thrive. Any amount of money, however small, that we can scrape out of the Budget, should be secured and devoted to this cause, I may say—to this sacred cause.

I would point out one mischief that malaria is doing all over Bengal. It is taking away several inches out of the height of the people at every generation. Many of us could recall the sight of stalwart men and women in many villages and families, the average height of whom was well over 6 feet; but now we find a 6-footer a rarity in the villages. This is one of the blessings of malaria, and, if this is to continue, we will soon become a race of undersized people!

I am not concerned so much with the annual death-roll of Bengal, however formidable, for death under certain circumstances is release, but what pains me is the future of the race; and no time is to be lost if we do wish to exist as a healthy and prosperous race.

Then there is the deepening of the Madaripur Bil Route. I do not doubt it is a very useful highway for commerce to flow through, but as I have said before, the needs of sanitation are urgent. The necessity for the spread of commerce should give place to it. The total Budget estimate for sanitary purposes is Rs. 7,82,000 and for expense in connection with plague, malaria and other epidemics, Rs. 1,83,000—Rs. 9,65,000 in all. The expense of this Bil Route—the exact figure—I could not find. The Grand Trunk Canal is of the same character—spread of commerce. Although it is a very good idea, I must say again that the needs of sanitation are urgent. No doubt it is being constructed out of loans; but what we cannot forget is the limit to the ability of Government to raise loans. We want loans and loans enough, by far the larger part of which must be spent for the purpose of driving out malaria. After the necessities of external defence and internal peace the elimination of the scourge should form the central object in our mental perspective, to which every other idea should be subordinate. This Grand Trunk Canal will be in the hands of Government as regards raising and spending money towards the central idea. So I think this project should have been postponed. Why it is labelled “Productive Irrigation work” I cannot understand? What has it got to do with irrigation?

Lastly, I find provision for revision of pay on a large scale, amongst others, of services, such as, deputy collectors, sub-registrars, munsiffs and many others. The extra Budget allotment for revision of pay amounts to many more lakhs of rupees than are earmarked for sanitation. On what ground do we fix and revise the pay of officers of Government? Is it based on ideas of charity or the whims and caprices of personages? Is any principle followed or not? I think it should be based on principle; and the only sound principle to follow is to fix the minimum sum which will suffice to bring in proper recruits. As things stand at present there is not much field left for generosity or charity, or if there is any, it should be postponed before that supreme urgency of killing malaria. Now, is there any dearth of applicants of the proper class in any of the branches of service I have mentioned? I think every Divisional Commissioner will be able to testify how his life is made miserable by hosts of applicants for subordinate executive posts, the vast majority of whom are M.A.'s and B.A.'s of good physique and passable intelligence. We do not want better classes of men than these—gentlemen of decent education, physique and commonsense. I will agree when it is said that on the pay they are getting now, they cannot live well. But what I cannot forget is that 99 per cent. of their employers have to live worse. So I think, so long as there is no want of suitable men in any branch of public service, their pay should not be revised for the sake of liberality. We cannot afford to be liberal.

Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr in his review of the Budget has said that His Excellency the Governor, after anxious consultation with the Members of his Executive Council and his Ministers, considers that the sums earmarked for expenditure in the ensuing year should be spent, and has concluded with a hope that the Budget as presented to the Council will be found acceptable as a whole. I thank the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr for the lucid explanation with which he presented the Budget, but I regret I cannot congratulate him.

The situation is grave and our responsibilities are graver still. Our expenses have gone up and must necessarily go up still higher if we want to carry out any improvement. Mr. Kerr has himself observed that the Presidency is faced with an unparalleled demand for development in every direction. The Government is helpless—they cannot meet it even half way. How are we to face the situation? We are handicapped—the raising of a loan is an impossibility, for we cannot expect to pay it off from our resources, which are not even enough to meet our modest demands. There is hardly any source of a new revenue to help us out of the difficulty. Such being the case, we ought to have made all-round retrenchment, we ought to have brought our expenses within our means, but, instead of doing that, we propose to draw on our unspent balance, leaving very little to meet exigencies, and have depended on doubtful sources of revenue.

The expectation of a large increase in revenue, especially under Land Revenue, Stamps and Excise is unfortunately not likely to be realised. The calculation is based on bad logic and cannot stand to reason. Considering the large increase in expenditure and also taking into account the fact that the revised Budget estimate of expenditure almost invariably exceeds the Budget estimate, I believe, the Budget will hardly provide the minimum balance as required under the rules. I should say the closing balance is dangerously small.

It is found that out of the opening balance of Rs. 3,44,79,000, a provision of Rs. 86,58,000 has been made for the redemption of the provincial loans, and it is further proposed to draw Rs. 2,08,31,000. Of this Rs. 67,35,000 is for initiation of new schemes and Rs. 1,40,96,000 is necessary for carrying on the ordinary work of administration or for schemes to which the Government is practically bound to give effect during the year. It is all very good spending out of the unspent balances, but the Finance Member should have explained how far this was justified.

The greater part of the expenditure has been earmarked for General Administration, Justice, Police, Civil Works, etc., while expenditure on Education, Public Health, Agriculture and Sanitation has been very inadequately and improperly provided. It will not be out of place to mention here that a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 only has been given for primary education in Bengal, as against Rs. 80,000 for St. Andrew's Colonial Homes, Kalimpong. We all know the percentage of literacy in Bengal is deplorable; only 5 to 6 per cent. of the male population receive education in primary schools. While the Government allot Rs. 20,000 in raising the house-rent of the European sergeants, and Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land for the married sergeants of the Calcutta Police, the insignificant grant of Rs. 1,00,000 is kept apart for the education of millions. One is thus tempted to ask, which is more important—the education of the masses or the luxuries of an insignificant section of the police force? When I take into account the poor and palty grant of Rs. 1,00,000 for primary education, I cannot help regretting that a comparatively large sum of Rs. 9,00,000 should be spent on the residential university at Dacca. It is making education top-heavy.

I am sorry I could not follow Mr. Stark as to how Rs. 25,00,000 came within the scope of our discussion on primary education. The Hon'ble Minister will please explain if it is so.

Like Education, Sanitation seems to have been neglected too. Surely a grant of Rs. 15,000 for the mulassal dispensaries, in striking contrast with Rs. 4,25,000 granted for the revision of pay of the police officers, is not convincing. Sanitation is the crying need of the day and I should say that everything else must wait till the finances are placed on a more secure footing.

Expenditure proposed to be incurred on items like the appointment of Deputy Director of Agriculture, the revision of pay of the Police officers, Civil Works, Survey and Settlement, etc., ought to be put off, or at any rate modified, and a vigorous impetus should be given to Agriculture and Industry. The prospects of extension of education, improvement of sanitation, development of industry, appear to me as gloomy as ever. My countrymen are anxiously waiting to see how far their hopes and aspirations are going to be fulfilled under the Reforms, and the Ministers have to explain how far they can satisfy their wishes.

In conclusion, I beg to say, I do not find any provision for gratuitous relief and advance for areas where scarcity prevails. Last year and also this year the people in parts of the Khulna district suffered terribly from scarcity, and the Basumati and the Servant published accounts of the distress. In the next official year also it will be necessary to help these people—destitute—despondent—drooping. I ask the Hon'ble Member to make ample provision for such distress, and I hope I do not ask in vain.

Raja MANIOLL SINGH ROY: In opening the Conference of the representatives of the District Boards held at Government House, Calcutta, in 1919, His Excellency the Governor, Lord Ronaldshay, was pleased to make mention of a scheme of bonificazione to be taken up at an early date at Rangkini-Dobo in the district of Burdwan. Burdwan, as you all know, is notorious for unhealthiness, due mainly to malaria, and the area within the jurisdiction of thana Jamalpur therein is the worst, and this scheme will benefit a great part of it. The selection of this tract was a very good one, so far as I can say as the Chairman of the District Board of Burdwan. I pray, therefore, that an adequate provision be made in the Budget for the scheme, so that such an important scheme may not be kept in abeyance for want of funds.

The sub-registrars of Bengal, I understand, have submitted a memorial to the Government for bettering their position and prospects. They are, as is known to all, a class of officers entrusted with very responsible work. Their case may be favourably considered and provision made accordingly. They have in their memorial stated their case fully and I need not dilate on it.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: All the previous speakers have spoken about the general aspects of the Budget, but I want to say something about the mufassal. I find that the mufassal has not got adequate treatment at the hands of the framers of the Budget. I come from the district of Dinajpur. It is notoriously malarious. The same is true of every other district in Bengal, and it is unfortunate that no provision has been made in the Budget to improve the sanitary condition of the poor people of Bengal. But we find a large allotment for medical relief in Calcutta. A gentleman the other day said that such a large amount is necessary for Calcutta, because Calcutta manufactures doctors for the whole of Bengal. To him I would reply that first we must have people living in the country before we manufacture doctors for treating them. In my district I find that the death-rate is far higher than the birth-rate, and, if depopulation goes on in this way for a long time, we do not know what is in store for the future. My friend, Kumar Shib Shekhareswar Ray, one day told me that there are a good many Sonthals in the district of Dinajpur, and I represent them in this Council. The people of my district are dying out, and we have to bring in for cultivation a number of Sonthals. But things may come to such a pass that in future a representative of the district of Dinajpur will ultimately represent only the Sonthals and Oraons. We hoped that Government would come forward and help us in improving the sanitary condition of the district, and not leave this work in the hands of the district boards and municipalities. The income of the district boards is very limited; the major portion of which is spent on construction and maintenance of roads and on primary education. It is too much to ask the district boards to take charge also of the sanitary work of the district. We find in the Budget a provision of Rs. 2,88,000 for mufassal hospitals and dispensaries, but out of this Rs. 70,000 goes as pay of the assistant and sub-assistant surgeons and Rs. 35,000 for compounders, and so on. There is thus scarcely anything left for helping the district boards to carry on their medical work.

I may mention here that Government is making an annual profit of Rs. 12,50,000 from the cinchona plantation. We all know that quinine is the only remedy for malaria, and, when the Government makes such an enormous profit from the illness of the people, that amount ought to be spent for the prevention of that illness; that amount should be earmarked for hospitals and dispensaries in the mufassal, or the Government should give up making such profit and sell quinine at cost price.

I now turn to Agriculture. We find that on demonstration farms and agricultural farms, which have been established at some places, Rs. 2,66,500 is spent annually, but the income from these farms does not exceed Rs. 2,00,000. That is to say, the demonstration farms, which were started to teach the people the utility of introducing improved methods of agriculture in the country, are a source of loss to the public funds. Therefore the people will not benefit by this example, that is to say, they would not take to improved methods of agriculture.

We find no provision for the development of industrial societies on the co-operative credit system, or for industrial and technical education. The bulk of the money provided for the purpose goes for direction and inspection, and nothing is left for the expansion of industries in Bengal.

Turning to primary education, we find there is a provision of Rs. 1,50,000 for model primary schools and Rs. 25,00,000 for grants-in-aid. I do not know on what principle this amount is going to be distributed amongst the districts. Some districts receive preferential treatment at the hands of Government, but I think the distribution must be made on some definite basis and according to the necessity of a district.

We have not been given sufficient time to go through the details of the Budget, and it is, therefore, very difficult to form a considered opinion upon the whole Budget.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: I have one personal explanation to offer regarding what has been said by the previous speaker. He has said that I told him in some conversation that he represented the Sonthals. This statement might be misunderstood by the people of Dinajpur, because they are not Sonthals. What I said is that there are a lot of Sonthals in Dinajpur and he might advocate their cause in this Council.

Mr. J. CAMPBELL FORRESTER: I had no desire to take any part in the discussion of this the first Budget of this new Legislative Council, except that of listening and learning, but I have heard several remarks in this Council, particularly from Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, along with many others, who have inferred that gross partiality has been shown to Europeans and point to the grants given to Kalimpong (Rs. 80,000), Kurseong (Rs. 40,000) and the Loreto Convent (Rs. 20,000). That means about Rs. 2 lakhs out of Rs. 16 lakhs or one-eighth has been given to the European representative schools. Now, Sir, under these circumstances I cannot remain silent longer. I am absolutely impartial in this matter, and, like Mr. Stark, wish to see justice done. I want to see fair play and like to get to bed-rock. With that object in view I would like to know what proportion of the income-tax is paid by the European British tax-payer. Perhaps the Hon'ble Member for Finance would answer. For the purpose of my criticisms these figures are necessary. I do not like to take up the time of this Council, and I repeat that I had no desire to take any part in the Budget discussion so long as absolute impartiality was shown.

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: I regret that I cannot congratulate the Finance Member upon the Budget that has been presented to the House. In going through the Budget what strikes me most is the poor provision for the subjects under the charge of the Ministers and the diversion for general purposes of funds earmarked for special purposes. I, being a mufassal member, turn over the pages of the Budget to see what provision has been made for mufassal towns and villages in the way of improving education, sanitation and medical relief; and I am forced to say that I turn over page after page only to be disappointed. Before going into details, I must give expression to a feeling, which has gained favour in certain quarters, to the effect that the pay of the executive Judicial officers, members of the Provincial Educational Service and of members belonging to other higher branches of service has been tremendously enhanced to leave too small an amount of money in the hands of Ministers to make the Reforms Scheme a success. Though I myself do not share this view, yet it cannot be gainsaid that the salaries of these officers have been disproportionately enhanced. Coming to details, let us see what provision has been made for improving primary education in the mufassal. We find that Rs. 40,000 has been provided for the enhancement of the pay of teachers in primary schools and Rs. 1,00,000 for primary education in the mufassal. I am not unmindful of the fact that on page 102 of the detailed statement of the Budget estimate Rs. 24,84,000 has been provided for grants-in-aid to primary schools. Those members of the House who are members of the District Board know that this amount is the yearly grant which is paid through district boards to teachers of primary schools, and this sum, when divided, falls to the lot of each primary teacher of Bengal in the shape of a monthly sum not exceeding Rs. 2-8 in the average. What a sad picture indeed to see that the persons, who will teach our village children, get a pay of Rs. 2-8 per month. Sir, I should request you to bring to your mind the pay that members of this House pay to their sweepers. The sweepers, I dare say, get more than double the pay of our primary school teachers. When Government has been spending so much money for bettering the prospects of the educational staff of Government schools, when Government has been pouring oil upon the oily heads of officers belonging to the higher services of the Education Department, we were hoping that Government will make some provision for enabling the poor teachers to keep their bodies and souls together, but to our bitter disappointment we find that, while for improving the pay of the teachers of only two schools, namely, the Victoria and Dow Hill Schools at Kurseong, Rs. 40,000 has been provided, the same amount has been provided for improving the pay of teachers of primary schools throughout the whole presidency of Bengal. In this connection, I beg to draw your attention to the fact that a sum of Rs. 4,00,000 has been provided to give, as the Budget says, some relief to those who are drawing less than Rs. 50 per month as pension. Is it because superannuation allowance and pension is a reserved subject that an additional Rs. 4,00,000 has been provided under this head, and is it because primary education is a transferred subject that Rs. 40,000 only has been provided for the enhancement of pay of primary school teachers? I do not grudge these Rs. 4 lakhs being paid to the pensioners, but what I complain of is this, that practically nothing has been done to ameliorate the miserable condition of these primary school teachers who are certainly deserving of more sympathy than these pensioners, most of whom are better off than these teachers. While speaking on the subject, I intend to draw the attention of the Minister in charge of Education to the deplorable condition of primary school buildings in the mufassal. It has been the policy of Government to construct a model primary school building within each panchayati union, and a good number of such school buildings have been constructed, and, in order to keep them in good repair, Government pays certain amounts to the district board, and sometimes some district boards do not get any amount at all. The Rajshahi District Board, which used to get Rs. 6,000 a year has not as yet got anything this year, I daresay that the amounts which other district boards are getting are too inadequate to meet the increasing demands. In the detailed statement of the Budget, under the heading Building grants for colleges and schools, I find a lump provision of Rs. 3,25,000, but do not find anywhere whether any portion of the sum would be devoted to grants for primary school buildings, and if so, how much? I hope that the Minister in charge of Education will enlighten us on the subject, and that, in future, the grant for primary school buildings may be shown separately so that we may compare the figures with those of the previous year.

The reformed Madrasahs, having provided secular education with religious education, have found favour with the Muhammadan people, and as far as my information goes, many junior Madrasahs of the reformed type have been started in the mufassal and it is only fair and just that Government should help these institutions by giving suitable grants-in-aid. But under the heading Madrasahs the same amount has been provided for the next year as in this year.

Leaving aside the question of education, let us taken into consideration the condition of the dispensaries in mufassal towns and villages and the provision made for them in the Budget. As far as I know, in every headquarters of the district, there is a Government assistant surgeon in charge of the dispensary, which is generally maintained by the municipality. This assistant surgeon has to do all the legal medico work of Government, and some of the municipalities have been fortunate to get themselves exempted from paying contribution towards the pay of the assistant surgeon; but, in the case of others, this contribution, which is about Rs. 3,000 a year, is being realised with all rigidity, notwithstanding all entreaties to the contrary. The price of medicines and of diet of patients has considerably increased, and all these municipalities find it too difficult to enable their dispensaries to make both ends meet. With the introduction of the Reformed Scheme, we were hoping that some relief will be given to those municipalities by exempting them from the payment of this contribution, but to our utter disappointment, we find that the old amount of Rs. 71,500 has been put down as the amount recoverable from municipalities and district boards for assistant and sub-assistant surgeons. It is a strange irony of fate to see that, while it has been found possible to provide Rs. 90,000 for the revision of the pay of sub-assistant and military assistant surgeons and Rs. 1,95,000 for expenses in connection with the schools of tropical medicine and hygiene, a noble sum of Rs. 15,000 only has been provided as the grant to mufassal dispensaries; and Government has thought fit to insist upon the contribution of the above-mentioned sum of Rs. 71,500 from municipalities and district boards, knowing full well that for want of funds many beds in mufassal dispensaries are lying vacant; and proper diet and medicine cannot be given to patients. We hope that the Minister in charge of the dispensaries will exempt the municipalities from paying the contribution, or, if this is not acceptable, will allow those municipalities to appoint their own doctors, which at present, they are not allowed to do. In that case, they will be able to secure the services of equally competent doctors by paying half the amount they are now required to pay by way of contribution.

Coming to the head of Agriculture, I find that it has been found possible to get money for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Sericulture and a Deputy Director of Agriculture, at an additional cost of Rs. 17,000, and seven sets of quarters for the assistants of the Dacca Farm, at a cost of Rs. 40,000; but a paltry sum of Rs. 5,000 has been provided for the establishment of five farms at five different centres and no attention has been paid to the resolution, which was carried by an overwhelming majority in this House the other day, namely, the establishment of an Agricultural School at Rajshahi.

The Council at this stage adjourned for 15 minutes.

After the adjournment.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: In every country, the Budget is generally called the people's Budget, but here, before us, a Budget has been presented, which cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be called the people's Budget. The Hon'ble Finance Member has presented the Government side, but Sir, the people's side—the tax-payers' side, has also got to be considered. That side is comprised in the following three questions: whether the tax-payer can afford to pay, whether the items are absolutely necessary, and lastly, whether the tax-payer is getting his money's worth. I mention these views because the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has said that the method of making a Budget is to take up the total expenses that the various departments require, and then to have them checked by the Finance Department. But how does the Finance Department check them? The Finance Department considers mainly the technical question as to whether the various departments will be able to spend the amounts that are going to be allotted to them. It seems to me, Sir, that this is rather a wrong view to take. The question should rather be, whether the sums allotted are absolutely necessary, and not whether they can be spent. This Council can only justify its existence if it does its duty as trustees of the tax-payers' money; and I request all members to judge this Budget from the tax-payers' point of view, when the question of voting for grants is brought forward.

I am sorry, Sir, that I cannot share the extraordinary optimism, with which the Hon'ble Finance Member has tried to meet this difficult situation. As has already been pointed out by several members, the deficit of Rs. 2 crores has been sought to be met from the reserve balances, most of which are no reserve balances at all. You have heard, Sir, how a great deal of it had been set apart for nation-building purposes, viz., education and sanitation. We have often heard it said in this Council and outside that many educational and sanitary measures could not be given effect to for want of funds. But what do we find here? A sum of Rs. 1½ crores had been allotted by the Government of India to this Government for the purposes of sanitation and education, but this Government was unable to spend that money. What can we think of a Government which, having funds at its disposal, cannot spend them on education and sanitation, and now comes forward with a proposal to spend the money for other purposes? Is this the prelude to the Reforms that we are going to have? I hope that this Council will take a very strong stand and refuse to vote grants in a Budget like this.

We come now to the details of the Budget. As has been pointed out by my friend, Babu Amada Charan Dutta, on the revenue side, we find that the Finance Member anticipates an increase of Rs. 8 lakhs under Excise. This is a view which cannot be justified by present events. It is no use shutting our eyes to events that are taking place around us. The other day, I think, a Government official had some applications before him for refund of license fees, on the ground that the sale of country spirits had fallen very low. The new anti-drink campaign tends to rival the Pussyfoot movement of America, and I think, Sir, that it would be unwise to provide for any increase in Excise revenue this year.

Then, Sir, there is the heading under Stamps. What has been the actual state of affairs during the current year? There has been a decrease of Rs. 10 lakhs from the estimated Budget owing to trade depression. I submit, Sir, that trade conditions are still very bad, and threaten to continue so. The money market is still very tight, and I cannot understand how the Finance Member can hope to realise the excess of Rs. 13 lakhs that he has provided for under the heading of Stamps on the revenue side. There is also the movement to decrease litigation, which will naturally affect this revenue.

To come now to the expenditure side, I do not know where to begin. The details have not been furnished to us, as was pointed out by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri yesterday, and it is, therefore, impossible to take up all the points. As for example, on page 111 of the White Book, we find that Rs. 7·8 lakhs have been provided under Public Health, but the detailed account in the main Budget gives a statement covering only Rs. 3·2 lakhs. We do not know how this balance is going to be spent, so we cannot discuss the allotment.

A sum of about Rs. 70 lakhs has been provided for improving the pay of some of the subordinate services, ministerial staffs, menials, etc. I the position of disadvantage in which this Council has been placed. These subordinate and low-paid services ought to have been taken up first. They should have been provided for during the year that is coming to a close this month. The question of higher services should have been brought into this new Budget. Then this Council would have known what to say about the inexcusable and extravagant method of paying Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000 to individual officers of the higher grades as retrospective pay. Retrospective pay indeed, while the low-paid officers are starving! A number of schemes has been given effect to during the current year, which might easily have waited for another year, and now the Finance Member tries to console us with words: "A very large part of the expenses had been incurred before the present Council came into being, for which this Council has no responsibility." This is very poor consolation indeed! This is just my complaint. Our hands have been tied without our consent, and we are now asked to look cheerful and pay.

I shall now enumerate a few items of expenditure, and seriously request the Council to consider whether these items cannot be postponed till financial conditions improve. First, there is a proposal for the new settlement operations to be started at Khulna, Murshidabad and Burdham at considerable expense. It is not possible to get the exact figures, on account of the way in which the Budget has been prepared, but I think that the amount is considerable and these operations can certainly be postponed.

Then, Sir, there are the partitions of the districts of Midnapore and Mymensingh; I think these will cost Rs. 13 lakhs; these can be postponed till next year, by which time we shall be able to judge if these partitions are at all necessary.

Then there is an item of Rs. 2½ lakhs for the resumption of land at Kalimpong. This is not a very urgent matter and can safely be kept in abeyance.

Then there is an item of Rs. 5 lakhs for the Alms House for the District Charitable Society. This can be easily postponed.

Then there is the Police Department. Much has been said about the extra expense incurred in this Department; I need not go into details. I shall try to take them up in the amending motions which I shall bring up on the 4th. The additional police, for the Public Vehicles Department, is absolutely unnecessary; the activities of these gentlemen, as is known to this Council, were the cause of the recent taxi strike. I think we might rest content with what we have just now.

Then Rs. 88,000 has been provided for the price of a steam-launch for the police to replace the launch Juliet taken over by the military authorities. We do not know why Government has been saddled with this extra expense, and why this launch has been taken away. Without this information we cannot criticise this item.

Under major works of the Public Works Department, which contains such items as acquisition of land for married sergeants' quarters, for extension of police hospital at Bhowanipore, and quarters for an additional District Judge at Bansal, and so forth, there are provisions for Rs. 20 lakhs which can certainly be taken up at a future time when funds permit.

There is the Grand Trunk Canal scheme, which is going to cost the large sum of over Rs. 3 crores. A scheme, which is going to cost such a large amount of money, ought to be well considered before it is undertaken; this Council is not convinced of the utility of this scheme and I think, therefore, that it should be postponed.

In view of the deficit in the Budget, I was going to request that the Ministers, as the people's representatives, should take half pay, but I got the greatest shock of my life when I received intimation that the Ministers' pay was not going to be voted. Is it fair to this Council, is it legal to say that the pay of the Ministers who are in charge of the transferred subjects, is not going to be voted? This is an irony of fate indeed!

These are only some of the items which give us a total of nearly a crore of rupees.

The Hon'ble Member has said that owing to war conditions only urgent and inevitable expenditure was permitted during the last four years; but I submit, Sir, that the peace conditions are not a whit better than the war conditions, so far as finance is concerned. If we could do without these items for the last four years, I do not see why we cannot wait for another year or more. I beg to suggest that only urgent and unavoidable matters be taken up now, and that a revised Budget be presented before this Council in the autumn. If trade conditions improve, and, if we are able to get our just dues from the Government of India by that time, we shall have ample opportunity of sanctioning further grants then. Let us not go ahead of our resources and make the Reforms a failure.

Unless Government goes on and proceeds on these lines, I am afraid we may have to go to the painful necessity of refusing the whole Budget in toto.

Then, Sir, there has been a proposal to borrow money. Is this the time to borrow money? The state of the money market is very well known. The bank rate is very high, and we know the very low price of the 3 and 3½ per cent. Government paper. If we launch on a new loan, I am afraid we shall not be able to raise a loan at less than 6½ per cent. interest. The holders of the 3 per cent. and 3½ per cent. paper will be stranded. Loan at such high rates will be most unbusinesslike.

I should like to say a few words with regard to what Mr. Stark said to-day. He said that we are foolish enough to think that one lakh is the only amount which has been provided for primary education. We know full well that Rs. 24,00,000 has been provided for primary education. But, as has been pointed out by one of the speakers, this sum is not for the present expansion of primary education, which ought to be taken up, and for which Rs. 1,00,000 is very small. I submit, Sir, that the members are quite justified and right in the attitude they have taken up.

Then, Sir, Mr. Stark has said that a lot of money has been raised by public subscription for several schemes by Anglo-Indian communities. But that is not the question before the Council. The question is whether the Government is justified in spending such large sums for these communities. I do not find Mr. Stark here, or I would have liked to ask him how much of the subscription of Rs. 9,00,000 the railway companies have paid?

Mr. Forrester asked a question as to how much income-tax had been paid by certain communities. I may, however, tell him that income-tax is an Imperial revenue and does not concern the Bengal Government at all.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: It is unfortunate that the Reforms Scheme should begin with a heavy deficit of Rs. 2,08,31,000. I cannot congratulate the Hon'ble the Finance Member on his improvisation of squaring up the Budget by drawing on the heavy opening balance of Rs. 3,44,79,000. The opening balance was earmarked for certain purposes. Is it fair and justifiable, Sir, to swallow the heavy balance towards general purposes without making adequate provision for important items? I submit that the Finance Member should have minimised the expenses and postponed some payments of loans and other improvements, which had been in contemplation and under consideration for several years past. As a matter of fact, we find that the old leaky ship of the Government has been repaired with such heavy slabs and nails that it is about to sink, and sink it will, unless the Imperial Government shows us some liberality.

Sir, much has been said about the individual items, and I need not say anything about them. But we have found one thing and that is that, when there was a proposal for curtailing the salaries of Ministers, they were very anxious to retain their salaries in order to maintain their prestige—but prestige they have. What we however expected was that, when they were anxious for their prestige, they would show the same amount of anxiety to have adequate provision made for giving effect to their proposals and for giving due share to the subjects in their charge. We have been totally disappointed to find that very paltry sums have been allocated to the several subjects in their charge. In the mufassal fell diseases, such as cholera and malaria, are making havoc on the people, and we find that nothing has been provided for checking the onslaught of these fell diseases. We see that the people in the mufassal suffer most for want of drinking water. Of course, the surrender of the Public Works cess to the district boards has improved the finances of the boards, but the amount is too small, when we consider the needs of the mufassal areas. You know, Sir, that the whole country goes under water during the rains, and the whole area is contaminated by diffusion of poison pent up in doras and pools during the dry season. Even then "water, water everywhere but not a drop to drink." After the annual bath in the rains, the country begins to bask in the sun; and by this time of the year the children of the soil are running mad from want of water. The people who are accustomed to a profuse supply of water can hardly form an idea of the magnitude of the want in the mufassal, where the people consider it a bounty to have water from a tank, where a Calcutta gentleman would not allow his dog to sip in. These conditions in the mufassal remind me of the well-known lines of the Persian poet:—

*Sabāe tarīk, hoṛle raav
Barān-e-bāṭin tunde,
Kujā purwā-e-mū dārand

This means:—Here is dark night—deafening sounds of thunder—furious rains—what care for us have the people who are carousing in the Assemblies.

A few months ago there was a circular issued from Government that the district boards should not spend their recurring income over the water-supply, for which they should raise loans. If they have to provide drinking water by raising loans, it is bound to be futile in view of the vast demand. I know that the district boards are not unmindful of the interests of the mufassal, and they are spending sums for the supply of water for the rural areas, but these are too small. The people in the mufassal pay the major portion of the first revenue of the province, and they are the people who contribute largely towards the export duty on jute and stamps which items go to swell the financial revenue of the province, and Government should provide largely for the material prosperity and the health of those people. We find here that we are quite disappointed at the grants for education, but we have been reminded that we have got Rs. 24 lakhs for primary education, and we know that this sum goes to swell the income of the district boards. [We find that the teachers in girls' schools and maktabs are satisfied with an annual income of Rs. 18, which you even cannot offer to a durwan. For a month even I submit that the provision of one lakh is too small, and that the people, who give a large portion of the first revenue of the province, are entitled to better treatment at the hands of Government.

Then, Sir, as regards medical aid, there was a resolution moved a few days ago that every thana should have a charitable dispensary, half the cost being borne by Government and half by the district boards. In regard to that resolution I was the only non-official chairman of a district board, who voted for it. The first necessity in the mufassal is the eradication of malaria. Every year after the months of October and November, we meet our friends stricken with malaria, and malaria, cholera and small-pox are our never-failing friends, who are very ready to relieve us of all our anxieties in this world. Where is the money to meet these expenses? We are told that district boards have got sufficient money. I am sorry, Sir, that the district boards are content with one anna in the rupee of the revenue. They have got incomes from pounds and ferries yet the revenue is too small to meet the ordinary expenses for the charges that have been placed under them.

Then, Sir, we find in the Budget that no provision has been made for meeting the demands of the district boards. I am proud to say that the district of Pabna is the only district board which spends the largest percentage of the expenditure on education of all the boards of the province. The average percentage is something like 23.5 per cent., whereas the Pabna district board spends about 38.7 per cent. During the time of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Government there was a programme to provincialise all the technical schools of the province and some of the schools, namely, Rangpur, Bakarganj and Bogra were provincialised. I submit that the Rangpur and Bakarganj district boards have an income three times as much as the district board of Pabna, but the latter is left to bear the entire burden, the grant previously enjoyed being stopped. I therefore submit that this district board deserves sympathetic consideration from the provincial Government.

I shall lay the correspondence which has passed on the subject before the Council. On the annulment of the partition our claims have been ignored and we have been left to ourselves. On the 28th March, 1913, the District Board of Pabna applied to Government through the Divisional Commissioner for a grant-in-aid, and the Commissioner, in his memorandum No. 676, dated the 19th June, 1913, forwarded an extract from a letter No. 732, dated the 11th June, from the Inspector of Schools, Rajshahi Division, to the effect that the authorities of the school may be pleased to move the Government for the provincialisation of the school. "I beg to propose that the Pabna Technical School be provincialised." That is the remark made by the Inspector of Schools. After this, the district board, in its letter No. 1011, dated the 22nd December, 1913, forwarded the board's resolution of a meeting held on the 16th December, 1913, to the effect that the board approved, with certain modifications, the scheme proposed by Mr. C. I. Henderson, Head Master, Dacca School of Engineering, recommending provincialisation of the school. Extract from Mr. Henderson's scheme regarding the Pabna Technical School is as below: "I may mention that the new Pabna Technical School scheme is the largest and most important yet proposed for any of the Bengal mufassal technical schools, and will come next to Sibpur and Dacca in point of importance." Now, Sir, the irony of fate is, that not only have we been refused provincialisation, but the grants-in-aid have been stopped from the year 1913, and the grant of Rs. 1,440 has been stopped since then.

For the construction of the new technical school, out of an estimate of Rs. 77,935 the Government granted Rs. 50,000 on condition that the district board should bear the rest of the cost. Owing to the rise in the price of materials, and new lands being required, the district board has completed the building at a cost of Rs. 87,918 and will have to pay the additional cost of Rs. 1,500. Thus, in all, the board bore and is ready to bear a cost of Rs. 39,419, though the original condition was for Rs. 27,935 only. The district board did not grudge that but the Government did not pay a single cowrie. The district board is bearing the cost of maintenance of the school amounting on an average to Rs. 15,157 per annum, while the district board gets an income of on an average of Rs. 5,561 from the school fees and the sale of manufactured articles. You will see, Sir, that the district board has been imparting instruction to the students and undertaking all these things, but Government have refused to give them any help.

The district board by letter No. 6 of the 1st April, 1919, addressed the Commissioner of the Division, requesting the provincialisation of the school; and till provincialisation to grant a monthly contribution of Rs. 500. The Commissioner asked for a reference to the original memorandum with which the original proposal was submitted to Government, but no reply has been received. After that there was a conference held at Rangpur—

The PRESIDENT: You have exceeded the time-limit.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: I have nearly finished and I hope, Sir, you will allow me to go on for a few moments.

The PRESIDENT: I am afraid I cannot allow you to go on any longer, as there is only time to finish one more speaker before I adjourn.

Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: I deeply regret that I find myself unable to congratulate the Government very much upon the very first Budget presented to the Council under the Reforms Act. I fully appreciate the difficulties under which the Hon'ble Finance Member laboured in manipulating the figures and in making out the most of a bad job. He has no doubt done the utmost that could be done under the circumstances. The difficulties brought about by the financial settlement of Lord Meston's Committee and the extra expenditure entailed by the changes under the Reforms Act were no doubt very great. But my regret is that much of these difficulties were foreseen and could easily have been partially, if not wholly, provided against. The economic pressure had been felt for a long time and the Government ought to have been fully warned of the difficulties ahead. The total estimated receipts have been taken at a little over Rs. 9 crores, and the total expenditure at little over Rs. 11 crores, leaving a deficit of over Rs. 2 crores in the Budget and

I shall not be surprised if at the end of nine months this deficit is actually found to exceed this estimated amount. This deficit has been sought to be met from the swollen balance of the previous years, which again has been considered to be an altogether unsound policy. The appalling deficit in the Bengal Budget was clearly foreshadowed by the Meston settlement. It did not come to the Government as a surprise. But, what did the Government do at such a juncture to provide against such an appalling deficit? They apparently went on expanding their expenditure altogether, regardless of the situation with which they were faced, as if their expending capacity was as elastic as in previous normal years. Take for instance—on the very eve of the Reforms and with the dismal shadow of an appalling deficit falling before them they hastened to increase the pay of the Provincial Executive Service. With the same disregard they have come to increase not only the expenditure for the Judicial Service, which accounts for no less than Rs. 9 lakhs in the expenditure under Judicial administration, but also of the Excise Department, at a cost of nearly Rs. 4 lakhs (Rs. 3,85,000). All these improvements, even if they were necessary, ought to have been suspended, pending the changes that were bound to come with the introduction of the Reforms and the operation of Lord Meston's financial settlement. And now the result is that the expenditure under the reserved heads has swollen to 65 per cent, leaving only 35 per cent for the ministerial departments. Thus the Ministers are handicapped and they are forced to cut their coat according to their cloth. The Government has no doubt earned considerable popularity with a certain section of the services, but the unfortunate Ministers, who should have been given a wider opportunity to give a good account of themselves, have been driven into a corner, where they would be bound to put up with considerable discontent and adverse criticism. This is a very lamentable feature of the Budget. The salaries of the ministerial officers and the menial servants have long been the subject of bitter complaints, and I am of opinion that their hard case should have received consideration long before the case of the superior officers, to which I have already referred. The increment given to the latter goes to swell their accounts with the Savings Bank, but the poor earnings of the former go to the grocer's shop, to which their chronic indebtedness drags on from month to month. In fact the Reforms and the improvements seem to me to have begun at the wrong end. I welcome the provision of Rs. 45 lakhs to meet the case of these hard-worked ministerial officers and Rs. 3½ lakhs for the improvement of the pay and prospect of equally ill-paid members of the Subordinate Educational Service, although I am not quite sure if the latter provision will bring in adequate relief to the poor teachers, who have been so lamentably neglected for a long time. I now come to draw attention to a few of the new items of expenditure under the Budget. Foremost among these the increased provision of Rs. 27 lakhs for the improvement of the Police looms very large. Not long ago considerable expenditure had been incurred for the improvement of this service, but even conceding that further improvement is necessary, I would urge their suspension or curtailment in this year of extreme difficulty and at the very outset of the reformed administration. The contemplated improvement can safely be deferred for at least one year to enable the Government fairly to maintain its equilibrium. I have noticed that a provision has been made of Rs. 3,18,000 for raising house-rent and acquiring land for the sergeants of the Calcutta Police (35,000 + 2,83,000) and of Rs. 2,75,000 for the revision of the rates of pay of the Inspectors of Bengal Police. I confess I quite fail to understand why specially the first elaborate provision has been found so urgent at this moment. These may very well be deferred for the present. I also take exception to the large increase made in the Secretariat establishment. If an additional Secretary be at all necessary, I do not see why a number of Deputy Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries should have been found so urgent as to be incorporated in the Budget under the present financial difficulty. In this year of hardship there is naturally a cry for increment all round. But at a time, when we cannot make the two ends of the Budget meet, an altogether novel act of generosity has been shown by the Government by providing Rs. 4 lakhs for increment of small pensions. I am not without sympathy for these pension-holders, but there are equal if not greater hardships of a vast population outside the pale of public service, and no Government can by doles of grant bring relief to all its suffering subjects, and while there are pressing demands for the nation-building departments, which we cannot meet, these new and unexpected and unurgd-for provisions should not have been gratuitously offered. Let us be just before we can be generous.

Now, if all these items to which I have drawn attention were to be considered and cut down, I think a savings of nearly Rs. 50 lakhs might be obtained, which will be available to the transferred subjects. This additional grant will certainly strengthen the hands of the popular Ministers to a considerable extent and enable them to put forth some substantial work under the coming Budget.

Against all this I beg to point out that a very small provision has been made for primary education in the mufassal. One lakh of rupees under this head does not bear testimony to our earnest desire to improve and develop primary education in a vast province like Bengal. It is notable that a provision of over Rs. 3 lakhs has been found for the improvement of site and establishment of only 4 schools in Calcutta and 2 schools in the hills. I find no indication in the Budget that it is contemplated to take any steps towards the inauguration of a system of vocational education, for which a resolution was recently adopted in this Council, and some sort of assurance also given by the Hon'ble Minister for Education. I do not see that any appreciable provision has been made for water supply and drainage in the rural areas. Vast projects may be made for drainage and sanitation, but they cannot be effected within a short time, and their efficacy, however great, cannot be either understood or appreciated by the masses, who urgently require immediate relief in the vicinity of their homes. There are loud cries for drainage and sanitation throughout the province, and you cannot expect the suffering population to be satisfied with the prospective results of a Grand Canal or the purchase of costly dredgers (Rs. 90,83,000) while rivers and channels, khals and tanks in the remote villages are being silted up and the scourge of malaria is spreading fast and wide amidst decimated areas. I earnestly suggest that large grants should be made to district boards, municipalities and unions to bring home to the people the attention we are giving to their hard lot and harder conditions in life. It has been said by the Hon'ble the Finance Member that "agricultural developments also have received adequate attention." All that is found in the Budget are the creation of a few new posts at a cost of nearly half a lakh of rupees and grant of Rs. 60,000 for distribution of seeds. I leave the discussion of what the department has so long achieved for a future occasion, but I must suggest in short that it should be possible for the Minister of Agriculture and Industries to make suitable grants for actually introducing better methods of cultivation and for the improvement of that important branch—Co-operative, which seeks to solve the problem of agricultural indebtedness of the country. For all these purposes the transferred subjects should account for much larger proportion of revenue than a mere 35 per cent.

I notice with satisfaction that the Government have moved the Government of India for a fair share of the percentage of income-tax recommended by the Joint Parliamentary Committee, and I also hope the Government will strongly urge for the export duty on jute, which is our own special product, being surrendered to Bengal. And I urge that any relief, that may be obtained from these sources, should be given over to the nation-building departments.

In conclusion, I desire to point out that there is a strong feeling in this country for the removal of the triple control of the Revenue Department. Bombay and Madras, where there is no permanent settlement, are carrying on their work with only dual control, but unfortunately for Bengal, which is a permanently-settled province, a chain of three successive authorities, viz., the Collector, the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue is held to be wholly indispensable. Government would do well to take note of this fact and take the initiative with their own hands to do away with the unnecessary intermediate authority which involves an expenditure of over Rs. 5 lakhs annually, and for which an additional provision of Rs. 75,000 is found even in the present Budget.

Adjournment.

The Council was adjourned till 3 P.M. on Wednesday, the 2nd March, 1921, at the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Wednesday, the 2nd March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 93 nominated and elected members.

The Budget, 1921-22.

The discussion on the Budget was resumed.

THE PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! Babu Amulya Dhone Addy.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: It appears that the Government of Bengal has already laid down a principle that primary education in Bengal should not only be compulsory but also free, and I had expected that the Government would be pleased to provide substantial grants for primary education in Bengal. I am really astonished to find that a very small grant has been provided for that purpose. Sir, in order to improve the material condition of the people of Bengal, it is absolutely necessary that we should develop our industries. We should encourage agriculture, commerce and industry in Bengal and that is the reason why I had expected that, with the co-operation of the Ministers, or in accordance with the advice of the Ministers, Government would be pleased to provide a substantial grant for the establishment of agricultural schools, commercial schools and industrial schools in Bengal. I am strongly of opinion that there should be at least one agricultural school with a farm attached to it in every district of Bengal, one commercial school with a museum attached to it in every division of Bengal, and one industrial school with a workshop attached to it in every division of Bengal, and I had therefore expected that a substantial grant would be provided in the Budget. But I find that a very small grant has been provided for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural schools in Bengal. So far as industrial schools are concerned, I find on page 96 of the Budget that Rs. 7,36,000 was provided in the Budget estimate for 1920-21 for technical and industrial schools. I am really sorry to find, as appears from the revised estimate for that year, that that amount has been reduced to Rs. 1,33,000. I am extremely sorry to find in the Budget estimate for the ensuing year under the heading of Technical and Industrial Schools that no provision has been made for them. Is that the way, Sir, to encourage industrial education in Bengal? I am sure that in this way we cannot expect the development of industries in Bengal. It may be said that we have got a deficit Budget. It may be said that, though the closing balance is Rs. 52,00,000, we have got a deficit Budget. The expenditure is more than the revenue by Rs. 2,09,00,000, and therefore it may be said that Government is not now in a position to provide sufficient funds, though they are highly necessary, for the encouragement of primary education and technical education. That is the reason why I beg to suggest that we should try our best to curtail other expenditure, so far as would be practicable.

It appears from page 35 of the report that Rs. 65,000 has been provided for fees for the design for the widening of the Howrah Bridge. So far as I remember, while I was a member of the Calcutta Port Trust some years ago—the Port Commissioners spent Rs. 35,000 for a design for the widening of the Howrah bridge and they have already got a design and estimate for it. I do not know what the revised estimate for the widening of the Howrah Bridge is. I presume it is three crores of rupees. I beg to submit, Sir, that it is not necessary to incur any expenditure at all for the Howrah bridge not to speak of a design, because we are not in a position to commit ourselves to a scheme which will cost us three crores of rupees. I admit that the Howrah bridge should be widened, but I do not think that the matter is so urgent as to commit ourselves to this expenditure at present.

It appears from the Budget, and it has been observed by the other members of the Council, that Rs. 2,85,000 has been provided for the acquisition of land for married sergeants' quarters, Rs. 20,000 for their house allowance and Rs. 1,25,000 for the town police of the 24-Parganas and Hooghly. I beg to submit, Sir, that this expenditure does not appear to me to be very urgent, and it can be postponed for the time being. It further appears that Rs. 75,000 has been provided for a grant to the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institute, and Rs. 10,000 for the purchase of their furniture. I do not think that it is very urgent, if at all necessary. Sir, it also appears from page 45 of the Budget that Rs. 90,000 has been provided for the band establishment. It appears that in the year 1920-21, Rs. 41,750 were provided for that establishment and now it has been increased to Rs. 80,000. What is the reason? It appears that the price of the necessities of life has gone up. I submit, Sir, that it is just the contrary. It has gone down and it is expected to go down still further. But, notwithstanding that fact, the Government has provided an increment of about Rs. 40,000 on that ground. I do not think it is necessary. I also find that Rs. 4,25,000 has been provided for a lunatic asylum in Ranchi and Rs. 1,75,000 for the European Asylum. It also appears that Rs. 20,000 has been provided for the Victoria School at Kurseong, and another Rs. 20,000 for the Dow Hill School at Kurseong and Rs. 80,000 for the St. Andrew's Colonial Homes at Kalimpong, and Rs. 70,000 for the building of a European school. I submit that these works should be postponed till the financial condition improves. Sir, we are afraid that within a year or two the Government will feel the necessity for levying further taxation, and therefore, I think, Government would not be justified in sanctioning these grants at present.

I come to another item. It appears from page 56 that Rs. 70,00,000 has been provided for the Grand Trunk Canal. So far as I remember, when the original scheme was placed before the public for opinion, the total estimate was a crore of rupees. The alignment has since been changed. It has been shifted from the southern to the northern suburbs of Calcutta. I admit that this is a very important measure, I admit that it would improve the trade of Calcutta with the Eastern districts of Bengal, but I am afraid that the revised estimate would be prohibitive. We are not in a position to commit ourselves to that scheme. We are not in a position to spend three crores of rupees for the execution of this work, and, so long as our financial condition does not improve, we would not be justified in committing ourselves to this scheme and in incurring expenditure of Rs. 70 lakhs this year for that project.

Mr. F. A. LARMOUR: I do not propose to address the Council at any length and I am rather pleased to think that the members will not have to hear the tinkle of that musical bell on the Registrar's table by the time I have finished. I am unfortunately not blessed with the power of eloquence, which has characterised many of the speakers, who have preceded me. Sir, I am not going to complain that I have not had sufficient time to study the Budget. It has been in my hands for the last six or eight days. What I do try to think is that this Council has only been in existence for a matter of six weeks, and I consider that the Budget, as placed before us, is all that we can expect and all that we can hope for. I have listened with considerable attention to many of the speakers, who have preceded me, and it has struck me that the whole tone of their speeches has been one of destructive criticism. Not one of them has offered any suggestion as to construction. I do not ask, nor do I expect for one moment that our criticisms will necessitate the scrapping of the whole Budget and that the Government will listen to all the suggestions made by the different members of this Council and frame a new Budget entirely in accordance with the suggestions offered by individual members. I paid careful attention to the first three or four speeches, that were made, and everything that need be made in the way of destructive criticism was already made by them and all the criticisms that have been made by the later speakers are simply accentuating those criticisms. I hold no special brief for the defence of the Government and I hold no brief for the defence of the Ministers or the Executive Councillors, but, Sir, I have been surprised at the utterances of some of the members. Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea, than whom, I take it, there is no more genuine or staunch patriot in Bengal, has had his words flung back at him in utterances which he made when he stood on public platforms as a reformer. Sir, I feel, and I know that every member of this Council feels, that when he gets into a certain office, whatever it may be, political or commercial, his opinions change, and he cannot say from the Government chair what he would say as a political man advocating the best interests of his country. Sir, I yield to none in my love for India and in my love particularly for Bengal. I have been here for nearly 50 years and for 50 years more I hope to remain. My greatest friends, and my most staunch and intimate friends, are amongst the Bengalis, and I am here to-day from a sense of duty to the country, at an age when I am entitled to peace and retirement. I am afraid, as I have said before, I am not blessed with the powers of eloquence like some members of this Council, and I have to fall back for assistance on what is called manuscript eloquence—I look in vain for any promise of sane, consistent and constructive policy on the part of this Council. Mr. S. N. Mullick sees in the Budget which is before the House the old enemies of the people—enemies which the Ministers should have crushed the very day, on which they entered upon their offices—rearing their unhallowed heads, he will forgive me if some of us see in the Budget debate ominous signs indicating that the same fatal weakness, which has retarded social and political development in the past, has not yet been eliminated. In the old days before the Morley-Minto reforms, and even during the currency of the Morley-Minto reforms epoch the Government having drawn up the Budget the Council had practically to accept it. The responsibility was the Government's, and the Budget debate was a rhetorical competition in which those, who could abuse Government loudest, were accounted the victors. Some of the speeches, to which we have listened in the course of this debate, suggest that the old mentality has not yet given way to that wider and saner outlook, which ought to follow on increased responsibility.

It is up to this Council to vote the supplies, without which the administration cannot be carried on. But every game has its rules, rules which are the embodiment of those conditions, under which alone the game can be played. What are the conditions of the game which is just starting? What is the Budget of the Government? How is the administration of a Province or country to be carried on? The first condition is continuity. The only way in which you can dispense with continuity is by a revolution. Some prominent persons in India seem to want a revolution, but I gather that this view is not shared by any one in this Council.

What was then the position on the 3rd January last? A new era was inaugurated, but the administration had to be carried on. If the Budget for 1921-22 had not been already drafted, we could not now be discussing ways and means for the coming year. What did the Council expect the Ministers to do? By drawing on balances the estimate was so framed that the total additional expenditure during the coming year both capital and recurring had to be got within Rs. 2,00,00,000. I can imagine the programme of expenditure which confronted the Ministers and Members of the Executive Council. Apparently it is the view of many that the Ministers should have brought the administration to a standstill, unless and until large sums were made available for certain forms of expenditure. Each Member has advocated some sort of retrenchment. The hon'ble member to my right has suggested the discontinuance of the replacement of the Hughli bridge. He says he was on the Port Commission a few years ago when this question was mooted. I have been on that Commission up till about 2 months ago, and he will perhaps be surprised to hear that the bridge has been pronounced to be in a highly dangerous state. It has been carrying on the work of this port for the last 41 years. The foundations are of iron and we know that they rust and corrode, and, if something is not done to relieve the pressure on the old bridge, we shall very soon find communication between Calcutta and Howrah cut off.

Now I would go back to the matter of expenditure. I would ask, what about the commitments of the Government as a whole? The Council is not, for example, called upon to vote the salaries of Imperial officers. The whole administration is not in the hands of Ministers. We have accepted a system of dyarchy, and we are committed to trying to make it a success. Are we likely to do so if we start by ignoring the need for give-and-take?

A good deal has been said about the cost of establishment. I come from a race, which does not believe too much in state activity, but this unbelief is not shared by modern India. Members of this House, who paint lurid pictures of the villainy of an arrangement, which involves spending money on a Government department, will, with their next breath, as it were, advocate some new form of departmental activity. If you want your Government departments to do practically everything for you, you must pay them. Complaints have been made about the reorganisation of the Imperial and Provincial Services, and the improvement of their pay and prospects. It is now suggested that the reorganisation should have started at the bottom and not at the top. But the Public Services Commission, which visited India in 1912-13, 1913-14 had all the subordinate services excluded from their purview. Did the public men of India protest about this? The talk was then only of equality as between Europeans and Indians. Most of the Provincial Services were reorganised last year. Did the public men then suggest that this was unnecessary? Not a bit; on the contrary, press and pulpit vied with one another in demanding the best terms. I am not saying that this reorganisation was not right. I say that it was, and I think that it must be carried on, until all grades of the public service are placed on a proper footing. But I do not see how you can reorganise any department if you begin at the bottom.

I deprecate the extraction from the budget of detached items, and the composition of flowery passages of rhetoric on this basis. "Rs. 10,000 for furniture for Nurses' Quarters," "Rs. 15,000 for dispensaries," "Rs. 2,83,000 for land for the quarters of married Sergeants," "one lakh for primary schools in the mulassal." No one has tried to ascertain for what purpose Rs. 15,000 was included for dispensaries, or the provision of one lakh for primary schools made. The Ministers will doubtless explain. But Rs. 10,000 for furnishing Nurses' quarters is surely a perfectly justifiable provision—really a necessary one. The Medical College Hospital is an enormous institution and it ministers mainly to Indians. I think I am right in saying that seven-tenths, nay I am safe in saying that four-fifths of the patients treated in the Medical College Hospital are Indians. I would therefore ask you, would it be reasonable to leave these quarters without furniture? Why drag in the fact that the nurses are Europeans or Anglo-Indians? Is this fair? Do those who talk like this insinuate that Indian nurses would not be employed if they were available? Then, what about the police sergeants? Do the critics of this provision suppose that Government would have included it, if they had not been compelled to do so? What are the facts? I suppose that it is not a crime even for a European sergeant to be married, but if he is married, his wife and children must live somewhere. At present, I understand, they are living in rented houses at an unreasonable and ever increasing cost to the taxpayer, and what is more, they are scattered. Efficiency as well as economy demands that they should be concentrated near Lal Bazar. Of course many members apparently regard all police as an unnecessary imposition. Is this a time for weakening or antagonising your police force either in Calcutta or anywhere else? I would ask you to look at the daily papers of yesterday and to-day and see what is going on at our very doors, at Lillooah.

Here the member having reached the time-limit discontinued his speech.

Mr. S. R. DAS: I am not in a position either to congratulate or condemn the Government on the Budget, which they have presented before us, for the simple reason that I have not sufficient knowledge. A number of points have been raised by the members in criticism of the Budget, and, if they are correct there is no doubt that the Budget deserves severe condemnation. But I propose to keep an open mind, until I have heard the replies of the Hon'ble Members and Ministers and then I shall be in a position to make up my mind as to whether to condemn the Budget or not. There is, however, one point on which I feel I must express regret, and that is the meagreness of the information which has been vouchsafed to us by this Budget. I do not propose to go into the details, but I will give one illustration. Take the head of non-voted. There is nothing to show what the items under that heading consist of, and it is impossible for this Council to judge, whether the items which would be included under the head of non-voted really come within the exceptions under section 72D, or whether they are really items which this Council is not entitled to deal with. I have no doubt that the meagreness of the information given in the Budget is to some extent due to the fact that this new régime came into existence only on the 3rd of January last, but I hope that in the next Budget the Finance Member will consider whether he cannot give us fuller information. I feel that a good deal of criticism and a good deal of time of the Council will be saved, if fuller information is given to us.

There are one or two matters on which I should like to have an explanation from the Finance Member. I find from page 2 of the statement furnished to us that a sum of Rs. 86 lakhs and odd is proposed to be refunded to the Government of India. I find that it is not under the heading of either voted or non-voted. I take it therefore that the item is excluded from the purview of this Council and has been merely stated there by way of information. I should like to know how the Government propose to pay this amount back to the Government of India without first submitting the matter to the Council. I find, for instance, under rule 14 of the Devolution Rules, that the surplus is a part of the revenue which is being allotted to us. Section 14 says: "The following sources of revenue shall, in the case of Governor's provinces, be allocated to the local Government as sources of provincial revenue, namely—

- (a) balances standing at the credit of the province at the time when the Act comes into force "

It is clear from the accounts given on pages 1 and 2 that the opening balance is Rs. 3,44,00,000 and that this Rs. 86 lakhs is to be paid out of that sum. Now, under section 14 of the Devolution Rules this is a source of provincial revenue from the 3rd January, and under section 72D of the Government of India Act, proposals of the local Government for the appropriation of provincial revenues and other monies in any year shall be submitted to the vote of the Council in the form of demands for grants. This Rs. 86 lakhs has, by reason of section 14 of the Devolution Rules, become a part of the provincial revenue, and it appears, as I have said, that the Government do not propose to submit that before this Council at all. I have no doubt that the Government have considered this matter carefully, and probably the Hon'ble Finance Member will be able to give a very satisfactory reply, and I hope he will vouchsafe an answer to this question. But I will assume for the present, Sir, that Government are entitled to make this payment to the Government of India without consulting the Council. I would however, ask the Government to consider whether, even if they possessed that right, it would not have been better, if they had in this matter taken the Council into their confidence, and whether it would not have been better to place before the Council the reasons why they desire to make this payment to the Government of India immediately, although under the Act we can take 12 years to make this payment, and then ask the Council to support them in their views to make immediate payment? It may be that they have very good reasons for making the payment this year. But the complaint I desire to make is merely that they should have, before making up their mind to return this money, consulted the Council and asked their views on the subject.

I propose, Sir, to make an appeal to Government on this point. We started with a surplus of Rs. 3,44,00,000, the whole of which, with the exception of about Rs. 50 lakhs, is proposed to be spent during this year. I may assume for the present, because I am not in a position to judge yet, that the whole of this expenditure is necessary. I will ask the Government to consider what we propose to do after we have spent all this surplus in the next year. A large portion of this surplus is being spent for the purpose of increases in salary. I am not one who is going to grudge an increase of salary to the officers, to whom it is proposed to be given. But this is a permanent increase, and we shall have to meet it in future. The surplus, with the exception of about Rs. 50 lakhs, will probably be spent this year. How do the Government propose to meet the increased expenditure, which we shall have to prepare for in the coming years? If of course the Government of India come to our rescue—and we hope and trust they will, and in fact they must, if they want this Council to do any useful work—we may be able to meet this increased expenditure, but shall we then have sufficient money to meet the necessary expenses on sanitation and education? Nothing particular has been provided for this year, so far as those subjects are concerned. There may be very good reasons for making no provision this year. I hope Government will be able to give us some explanation in that connection. But we have to spend a good deal of money in this and in the coming years, and if we spend the whole of the surplus this year, I would ask the Government to consider whether we shall really be in a position to meet these needs. Now my appeal to the Council is this. Could not something be done to spend less during this year? I would suggest that they should spend whatever may be absolutely necessary to spend, but there must be some projects on which money is proposed to be spent this year which may be deferred for a year or two, these projects should be postponed, so that we may be in possession of a sufficient surplus to spend something during the coming years on such subjects as malaria and education. Now, take, for instance, this Rs. 86 lakhs, which we are going to return to the Government of India. As I have said, I do not know whether there is any urgent reason for making the payment this year, but if there is nothing to prevent it, why should we not retain this sum this year and arrange for the payment of the interest on it and pay only by instalments according to the power which has been conferred on us under the law? Then we could utilise this money, or, at any rate, if we cannot utilise the money this year, we could utilise it in future years on matters I have mentioned.

There is another item of Rs. 2,83,000 which is proposed to be spent for the acquisition of land for accommodation of married sergeants. I should like to make it quite clear that I am not raising any objection to this money being spent for sergeants' quarters, which may be absolutely necessary. But is it necessary that we should spend this money this year for the purpose of purchasing land which means another Rs. 8 to Rs. 10 lakhs probably next year for erecting a building on that land? Is it necessary that we should do that, when it is possible that we may get some of our big landlords in Calcutta to build sufficient accommodation which we could get by paying rent? For instance we might make a provision of Rs. 16,000 or Rs. 17,000 a year for the purpose of paying rent for the accommodation instead of making a provision of Rs. 2,83,000.

There are other items of that description. I notice an item of Rs. 4 lakhs and odd for the purpose of building police quarters in Bhowanipore. I do not propose to go into all the items. It is really for the Government to consider, because I am not in a position to say, whether these expenses are so urgently necessary that they must be incurred during the present year. It is for the Government to consider whether there may not be some of those items of proposed expenditure, which could be put off for some time, so that we may retain a large portion of the balances. I again ask Government to consider this. There is, Government are aware, a cry of non-co-operation outside, and we, in spite of that cry, have all come here, because we believe that we can serve our country best by co-operating with the Government. We have come here for that purpose. Now, would it not be of great assistance to us, and would it not make this new Government under the Reforms Act exceedingly popular, if the Government could show that they are keeping back a large portion of the surplus, say Rs. 80 or Rs. 90 lakhs for the purpose of fighting the ravages of malaria, which they are unable to spend this year, because they have not had time to prepare a scheme, and which they keep in reserve for the purpose, when a scheme is forthcoming? I appeal to Government to consider whether something like that is not possible, so as to make our task easier, and so as to make Government under the Reforms Act really popular in the country, and so as to catch the mind of the country and practically give a direct answer to those non-co-operationists.

Maharaja KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY Bahadur: Under the rules of the Council we are permitted to express our opinion, and make our criticisms on the Budget at this stage, and to make our remarks on the general administration, as it affects the financial position of the Province. I hope and trust that under the changed order of things our opinion on the financial statement will carry greater weight than it did before. I must confess that in the form, in which the Budget is presented to us,

I find it very difficult to fully understand the items of expenditure, and to find out whether they are justified or not. Previous speakers have already referred to the very short time given us to study the Budget, thereby giving us little opportunity of criticising the details, except on the main items which stand prominent in the Budget. The expenditure on the Police is an important and indispensable instrument of Government administration, but the cost, I am afraid, is out of all proportion either to its necessity or its efficiency. It has been the policy of the Government to try to improve the department by creating new high appointments and increasing the pay of the highly paid officers. Too much importance seems to be attached to the work of supervision and control, but the fact is overlooked that the real work and the brunt of it falls on the shoulders of the subordinate staff, whose prospect, in spite of the abnormal rise in the cost of the Police Department, has not been materially improved. The Calcutta Police seems to receive a tender and especial care at the hands of the Government and it also affords a typical case of extravagance. I mention the sum of Rs. 2,83,000 provided for the acquisition of land for quarters of married sergeants, and next year's Budget will be burdened with the cost of the building. It seems either the poor constables are all bachelors, or they are never expected to live with their wives, whereas the married sergeants must be given this luxury! There is a provision for strengthening the emergency Police force in Asansol, about the necessity of which I am not convinced. I might observe, in general, that the allotments made for Education, Public Health, Agriculture and Industry are ridiculously small, and it does not augur well that the Ministers are not provided with adequate funds to inaugurate and carry out schemes which are urgently needed, and on which the prosperity and progress of the province, to a large extent, depend. To illustrate my point, I might mention that only Rs. 40,000 has been provided for the improvement of the pay of primary school teachers of more than 37,000 schools, and a lakh of rupees for primary education, in the new grants. This has been done, I believe, to bring into operation the Primary Education Act in the 25 districts. I may inform this Council that the district boards spend more than Rs. 22 lakhs on primary education in rural areas and only a lakh to help the introduction of the Act in rural and urban areas is ridiculously insufficient. I find that the Hill and European schools have been treated rather too generously. I fully appreciate the necessity for well equipped European schools, and do not grudge our European fellow subjects the facilities provided for the education of their children. What I object to is the want of sense of proportion in the distribution of new grants, and the apparent partiality and favouritism shown to particular institutions. The allotments for Public Health, Agriculture and Industry are not only insufficient, but I am afraid will be of very little use, and some important projects and schemes are neglected.

His Excellency the Governor, addressing the District Boards Conference in 1919, was pleased to observe that before the Bengal Agricultural and Sanitary Improvement Bill became law, and without waiting for it, he had decided on certain projects for anti-malarial schemes, and kindly promised to provide funds for such schemes in the current year's Budget. The Anjana scheme in Nadia was the first of those schemes, but up till now nothing has been done in that respect and I am surprised to find that no money has been provided even in next year's Budget for that purpose.

Representing the district of Nadia as I do, I feel it my bounden duty to bring to the notice of the Government one of the crying needs of my constituency. The drainage scheme of the Krishnagar municipality received administrative sanction so far back as 1915, and the Government very kindly agreed to bear the whole cost, as the municipality was too poor to undertake it. Unfortunately no effect has been given to it yet. You know, Sir, that Krishnagar is an insanitary town, and the public health of the place is materially affected by want of proper drainage. The stagnation of water and dirty water in particular, is the reservoir for the breeding ground of mosquitoes, and the cause of the outbreak of malaria of a malignant type, and of other contagious diseases. The Krishnagar water-works is now in progress, and will be completed very shortly, and, if the drainage work is not undertaken, the water-works, specially in Ward No. 1, instead of being a blessing will be a curse, as it will cause greater stagnation of dirty water with its concomitant evil effects. I hope and trust that steps will be taken to save the citizens of Krishnagar from that scourge by providing it with good drainage, to which Government is pledged.

I am glad to find that the poor officers of the ministerial establishment have come in for some consideration at the hands of the Government. It was a matter of surprise that, while the Government was rather generous in the case of the high and the highly-paid official, it paid rather scanty attention to the work of relieving the distress of the poor clerks in the mutassal, who, in these hard days, find it difficult to make both ends meet, and have to deny themselves even of some of the bare necessities of life. Their lot is truly a pitiable one, and I appeal to the Government that, when an increase is sanctioned to their salary, justice will be done to them and retrospective effect will be given to the increase as was done in the case of the higher officials.

We hear in these days a good deal of vocational and industrial education, and I am glad to find that the Government is also paying some attention in that direction. Among other things, some weaving schools have been started and others are proposed. I am surprised to find that it has not struck the Government that one of the best places for such schools is Santipur in the Nadia district, which I may justly claim as the home of the weaving industry, and which shares that honour with Dacca. Santipur cloth and fabrics still maintain a well deserved reputation in this country, and weaving schools in that centre will revive the industry, which is now fast falling to decay; and its revival will bring prosperity to thousands of poor and desolate homes.

I fully support the proposal of Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri to increase the value of stamps, as it will add to our revenue and will not cause appreciable hardship.

I add my humble voice to the general demand that the duty on jute be handed over to Bengal, and hope that her legitimate claims to that revenue will be recognised by the Government of India, and, if this is not done, we are bound to have recourse to drastic retrenchment or further taxation. Taxation in the present economic condition of Bengal will be unbearable, and we cannot think of it. It will certainly lead to very great discontent and unrest.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: From our boyhood, we have been seeing that generally the speeches of the hon'ble members of the Council were being directed to one direction, viz., the cry for the reduction of the cost for police, that of new appointments of highly salaried officers, and the postponement of the construction of public buildings, and the desire to allot the money to sanitation and education, industries, etc.

Before entering into this Hall, many of us were under the impression that we would hear something new, but as fate would have it, even here, in the Reformed Council, we hear the repetition of the same cry.

Attempts were made in various ways to postpone the discussion on the Budget, as it was presented to the members only the other day, but all attempts failed. Mr. D. C. Ghose in his very able speech put forward some unavoidable reasons for the delay, and I may add, another, viz., that the papers and books of this department got burnt. But one point that strikes me most and appears rather very curious, Sir, is that this Legislative Body in its old stage passed the Bengal Municipal Act and the Local Self-Government Act. In those Acts, it is compulsory in municipalities and district boards that 15 days must pass between the date of presentation of the Budget and its final discussion. But most unfortunately the same body has made no such law for its own guidance. Sir, the necessity for more money under the heads of primary education, sanitation, etc., has been felt even by such European members as Mr. Travers and Colonel Pugh. The former was kind enough to suggest means for that purpose.

Colonel Pugh was pleased to inform us that we have got the Self-Government, so long desired by us, but that the Ministers were not ready with their programme. The definition of Self-Government, as put forward by Colonel Pugh, comes to this—A form of Government where the members have no right to vote for the allocation of money according to the needs of the country. In reply, I beg to submit that if that is his idea of Self-Government, I must say that his long stay in Bengal has had a very bad effect on him and he needs a change. As to whether the Ministers are ready with their programme or not, I, like Mr. Stark, do not hold any brief for the Ministers and I hope that the Hon'ble Minister will satisfy him on that point, on the ground of 65 per cent. and 35 per cent.

Sir, I had absolutely no intention to enter into sectional questions, but not only myself but all my friends desire that replies to some of the questions are necessary. Mr. Stark told us—as if it was not known to any one of us—that the income has been specified by the Government of India, and the Hon'ble Finance Minister gets figures from each department and allocates money accordingly. Therefore not he, but the Reformed scheme is responsible for this kind of Budget, and that there must be difficulties in the transition period. But, Sir, may I ask why the popular side always feels these difficulties? May I know, Sir, why there was no money for the people before the introduction of the Reformed Council and no money after its introduction, and why the people should always be told that they must suffer whether there is reform or no reform?

He has told us that not one lakh but 24 lakhs have been provided for primary education. In reply, I would refer him to paragraph 8, page 13 of the Hon'ble Finance Minister's General Review.

Then, Sir, dealing with the grants to European schools and Colonial Homes at Kalimpong, he passed several sarcastic observations and told us that the Europeans and the Anglo-Indians have raised a large sum as donations, and if the Bengalis, who, according to him, are rolling in money, do the same, they may also expect to get similar grants. On this subject, Mr. Forrester asked and inquired how much income-tax is realised from the respective communities. Apart from the legal aspects on this point, if I am not accused of any rudeness, I will put one question which will be an answer to both of these questions.

May I ask, Sir, where this money was earned from which donations and income-tax have been paid? This finishes the whole thing.

We have heard to-day from another European member Mr. Iarmour, who raised three points—(1) That every member made a destructive but not a constructive speech.—In reply I beg to submit, Sir, that Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, Mr. S. R. Das and Mr. D. C. Ghose have made definite suggestions, and we would salaam him a thousand times, if he can induce the Government to accept the suggestions.—(2) That “Is it a crime for the police officers to marry?”—In reply I beg to inform him that “no, it is not; on the other hand the construction of buildings will induce other police officers to marry.”—(3) That after the latest incidents of yesterday and the day before, no one should discourage the help to the police. But unfortunately perhaps he does not know that the police, for whom these buildings are suggested to be constructed are the traffic police, and not those who are engaged in the prevention and detection of crime.

Sir, it will be found from paragraph 9 at page 14, of the observation that the Hon'ble the Finance Member has been pleased to make, that "the necessity for educating cultivators in improved and scientific methods of cultivation is pressing. The need for more money to spend on sanitation and medical schemes is well-known to every member of the Council . . . new departments such as Industries, Fisheries, Agriculture, Co-operative Credit are all alike in need of funds."

This is very significant. It seems that the Hon'ble Member, after allotting all the revenue to other heads, found to his utter surprise that money has not been allotted on primary Education, Sanitation, Agriculture, etc., and, like the guardian of minors, he asked our countrymen to wait and assured us that our future would be bright.

Does he intend to say to our countrymen that he has provided money for the maintenance of sufficient police to see that they become law-abiding and are brought to justice, when they are found in any way lawless or disorderly, but unfortunately he could not find money to provide means for saving them from the grip of death and to see that they live and become law-abiding and orderly. Does he mean, Sir, to tell us that in order to avoid difficulties, that may confront our future generation for regulating the traffic, he has made arrangements for permanent location of those, who will regulate the traffic of the town, by the acquisition of lands and the construction of buildings for them, but that there is no money to save the life of future generations, who are dying in thousands, and, according to our Minister, the number of their deaths is appalling. Is it a fact, Sir, that he has been able to provide money for the establishment of a new university and for the construction of buildings for that purpose with intent to extend higher education to our countrymen, but, unfortunately enough, he has no money to give them for primary education, and to make the usual grant to the already existing university? Are we to understand, Sir, that he has been able to provide money for the construction of buildings, acquisition of lands for the partition of the Midnapore and Mymensingh districts and also for strengthening the Criminal Intelligence Department, but unfortunately for us he could not find money to help industries, fisheries and agriculture, etc.

May I inquire, Sir, why no money, except the Imperial recurring grant, has been provided for in the Budget as grant to the University of Calcutta? As far as I know the Calcutta University has got to make a substantial contribution to the mufassal colleges, and, if no grant is given to this University, the result will be that these colleges will cease to exist. Is it the intention of the Government to do away with all mufassal colleges in this part of Bengal? Is it not possible, Sir, to postpone the construction of buildings at Dacca, and to use those palaces for the purposes of the University, that were constructed, when Dacca was made a capital, and to make a grant to the Calcutta University out of this sum? In this paragraph (9 of page 14) we find that the Hon'ble Finance Member observes that "A special officer is engaged in drawing up a scheme for the improvement of primary education in Bengal. As soon as some line of action in this matter is decided upon, very large expenditure will have to be faced!!"

May I inquire, Sir, whether this special officer is Mr. Biss. Will the Hon'ble Member kindly let us know whether or not Mr. Biss has submitted his report in December, 1920, and is he now going about in the municipalities and districts showing by diagrams how primary education is to be spread? Is it not a fact that the scheme suggested by him is very costly, and is almost prohibitive for municipalities and district boards for taking it up themselves? If that is so, why should provision of money for this purpose be delayed? May I take the liberty of requesting information, Sir, as to when, by whom and on what basis, 65 per cent. and 35 per cent. have been allotted to the reserved and transferred subjects, respectively? Is there no chance for reconsideration or revision of this percentage? Sir, this is a double-edged weapon to us. If we go to the Ministers, they say that we have been given only 35 per cent.; we cannot spare more and, if we go to the Members, they say your countrymen are in charge of it, so, what can we do?

Sir, on page 13, the probable receipt on the interest on provincial loans and advances has been shown to be Rs. 4,21,000, while, on the expenditure side in page 13, expenditure on this item has been shown to be nil.

On page 17 of the receipt side, probably the income from experimental cultivation has been shown to be Rs. 2 lakhs.

On page 18 on the receipt side of the Budget, the probable income from cinchona cultivation has been shown to be Rs. 16 lakhs.

Sir, as suggested by Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri and Colonel Pugh and Mr. S. R. Das, the repayment of loans of Rs. 86 lakhs to the Government of India may be put off. May not, Sir, the construction of the new buildings under the head "Civil Buildings," the strengthening of the Criminal Intelligence Department and the Partition of Midnapore and Mymensingh be postponed?

Is it too much for the people of Bengal to ask that this saving may be spent to save them from malaria, and find out means to prevent child mortality? May not they appeal, Sir, to spend a portion of this sum to save the future generations of Bengal by establishing institutions for the training of dhais and midwives and subsidising them in the different districts, and by making arrangements for the supply of pure milk to the infants and by establishing hospitals and dispensaries? May not they reasonably ask to spend a portion of this on primary education, and for the establishment of industrial institutions to provide means of occupation to the young men of our country?

At this stage the Member having reached the time-limit, asked for extension, but this was disallowed by the President.

Mr. S. M. BOSE: I wish to confine my remarks to the subject of education, which, to my mind, is the most vital of all our problems. I rejoice to find that the budgeted expenditure for this head is Rs. 4,65,000 more than the estimate for 1920-21 and Rs. 18,22,000 more in the revised estimate. Owing to the enforced economy during the war, the expenditure for education was unfortunately cut down. I trust that now it will be greatly increased to make up for past years and go further, and ask the Hon'ble Minister in charge to beg or borrow the money, so that he can spend a sum greatly in excess of the amount now budgeted. I plead specially for a more extended scheme of primary Education. I am glad to find an additional sum of one lakh rupees for primary education in the mulassal. But it behoves our local bodies to bestir themselves, and to take the fullest advantage of the money given to them in this matter, so that the amount provided may not remain unspent owing to their lack of enterprise.

I plead earnestly, Sir, the cause of women's education, for I firmly believe that the country will not progress, unless our women are better educated and better able to take care of themselves. We must fully recognise the fact that a woman has duties to herself as well as to others, and that woman will be most truly a woman, when all the latent possibilities of her nature have been fully developed.

I ask now particularly for a great extension of primary education for girls. I am glad to find an additional sum of Rs. 15,500 kept for ndanashin classes in addition to the sum of Rs. 17,000 kept as usual for zenana classes. This is a move in the right direction, and I venture to request the Hon'ble Minister to see if he cannot in the course of the year spend more for this purpose. To my mind, women's education is quite as important as men's if not more, and I would therefore press the attention of the Government and also of the public to the supreme importance of the subject. Private liberality should be forthcoming in a larger measure to supplement Government aid. We cannot blame the Government, if in allocating funds when there are great many demands, they recognise the principle of self-help and help those who help themselves.

There is another matter, to which I wish briefly to draw the attention of the Government. There are many excellent schemes in connection with women's education involving the capital outlay of large sums of money. It is obviously impossible to finance these schemes all at once. So I suggest that loans be raised by the Local Government for the purpose. In addition to the interest on these loans, a sum should be set apart each year for a sinking fund to repay them. The Government and school authorities asking for the loan should jointly contribute towards the annual interest and the sinking fund in such proportion as may be in each case determined. The advantages of this course are obvious. It will enable the Government to take in hand many useful schemes at the same time and the payment of the cost is spread over a number of years. It will also foster the spirit of self-help and local patriotism.

Lastly, I venture to put in a word for that much maligned body, the Calcutta University, and I would request the Government to see if it is not possible to give it a larger contribution. It is unfortunate that we cannot expect much help from the Government of India. Bengal owes a deep debt of gratitude to the University, and I am loth to believe that it will kill its alma mater by starvation.

Before I finish, I am impelled to refer to the unfortunate note of discord sounded yesterday by some friends here. I am very sorry for this, as it will tend to mar the spirit of mutual help and toleration that should prevail here. May I not appeal to all those in this Council to refrain from uttering a single bitter word, that would foment disunion among us? May I not appeal to them to resist the temptation to say smart things that merely appeal to the gallery and cause unnecessary irritation? May I not appeal to them to lead the way, and show respect and regard for every interest that is represented here? Let us always remember that minorities have also their rights.

We all have to remember that we have set out hand to the stupendous work of nation-building, and I need hardly point out that this work of construction should be based on the solid foundation of mutual help and esteem. In this great work we want the assistance of every body, Christian, Muhammadan and Hindu, European and Indian. With malice towards none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, let us go forward and strive with all our united might for the establishment of the government of the people by the people and for the people.

Mr. D. J. COHEN: The Budget presented to us is disappointing, especially in view of the admission in paragraph 7 of the Budget that "The Presidency is faced with an unparalleled demand for development in every direction." It largely contains provisions for additions to buildings and increase of salaries. No one can grudge the increase of salaries in view of the abnormal rise in prices of foodstuffs and clothing, but we should have liked to see included in it provisions for several useful and urgent schemes to the exclusion of less important projects. None of the departments under the Ministers appear to have received sufficient attention. The small amounts that have been included are wholly inadequate. Were there no useful schemes ready, prepared by the various departments that could have received the approval of the Ministers? Having regard to the important subjects in the hands of the Ministers, the percentage allowed them, as against that allowed to the Members, appears to be ridiculously low, if we want these particular departments developed and not to remain in the state they are in now, and I trust that the Ministers will press for an equal division in the ture. The low percentage does not affect the present Budget because apparently the Ministers could think of no schemes, that could usefully be launched next year, otherwise we would have expected them to protest against the immediate repayment of the large loan of Rs. 86 lakhs to the central Government at this juncture, as they might have utilised the amount for some useful measures.

Under the heading of Police, while a large provision is being made for acquisition of land for providing sergeants' quarters, I regret to find that no provision has been made for a new building to replace the present condemned structure at Bankshall Street. The Chief Presidency Magistrate has pressed Government in this matter for some years without avail. In the meantime the inconvenience to Honorary Magistrates, who sometimes have to go back home for want of accommodation, will have to continue and this means expense and trouble both to litigants and witnesses. The building of the Scaldah Police Court is in no better position. It could never have been intended for a court house, as a result of which, especially after the appointment of a second Police Magistrate, the inconvenience to Honorary Magistrates is very great.

While dwelling on this, I would request the Government to seriously consider once again the desirability of having one Central Court instead of three. Apart from the saving in funds one Central Court would effect, the convenience afforded to the public of having several Courts is more than counterbalanced by the inconvenience they have to suffer to get pleaders from different courts to attend to cases, and to have to pay them special fees.

Turning to the hospitals, while provision is being made for less important objects, I find no provision has been made to provide an adequate staff of doctors. As far back as I can remember, we have always had four members of the Indian Medical Service in attendance at the Medical College—two physicians and two surgeons. Now that we have added the Tuberculosis Ward and the Prince of Wales Hospital, the same number is expected to look into the serious cases of all these hospitals, including the Ezra Hospital, and to deliver lectures to students. Taking into consideration the fact that these consultants have large private practice, one can imagine how impossible it is for them to give the urgent cases the attention they deserve. The outdoor branch of the hospital is also suffering for want of a sufficient number of doctors, and I draw the attention of Government to this as well.

I have come to learn only to-day that the Mayo Hospital authorities intend closing the Ripon Street branch for want of funds. It is only a few years back that they were forced for the same reason to close the outdoor branch of the Chandney Hospital. Their Ripon Street dispensary is admittedly doing very useful work, judging from the number of patients attending daily, and it is up to Government to step forward and put the hospital authorities on their legs. We know that all our hospitals are overcrowded. Is this the time to allow a dispensary to be closed?

Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: I wish to offer a few general observations on the Budget. The most outstanding fact in the Budget for 1921-22 is an increase of expenditure over the estimated income. The deficit with which we are faced is not a small amount. It comes up to over two crores of rupees. There is just a chance that the Government of India might come to the rescue of Bengal. They might carry out the direction of the Joint Parliamentary Committee that the peculiar financial difficulties of Bengal should receive their special consideration. This consideration the Government of India were evidently not in a mood to show so far. If they had done so, the position of our Presidency would have been less serious than it is at present. If, however, the Government of India give effect to the recommendations of the Joint Parliamentary Committee even now, they would help in smoothing our difficulties. But even with such help the financial position of Bengal will continue to be difficult.

If the Reforms, that have been introduced, are to be a reality in Bengal her finances should above every thing be placed on a stable basis. By this I mean that this Presidency should be enabled to start on her new career with a proper income. Our resources are not in any way inadequate. Bengal's present plight is, however, to be attributed to the new financial readjustment which dispossesses her mostly of her share of expanding sources of revenue. A portion of this should now be restored to Bengal, if she is to be saved from financial ruin and bankruptcy.

In his speech introducing the Budget, the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr remarked that so far Bengal had been in the position of a young man in the possession of a fine estate, but limited in regard to his expenditure to the annual sum allowed to him by his guardians, and he congratulated the Province on its release from the financial leading strings of the Government of India. Mr. Kerr appears to have taken a too optimistic view of the situation. He seems to have forgotten that no considerate and dutiful guardian would ever be a party to an arrangement, which provides for his ward, when he comes of age, an income which, as has been the case with the Budget before us, falls far short of his expenditure, the scale of expenditure having practically been fixed at the instance of the so-called guardians.

We have this year the good fortune of having at our disposal an opening balance of about three crores and a half. This balance will help us in meeting our deficit for 1921-22. The year, however, is expected to close with a dwindled balance of Rs. 52 lakhs only. This diminished balance might be further reduced, for it is feared that the expectations as regards increase of revenue might not be realised. The conditions of trade are as uncertain as they are precarious. The monsoons are equally dubious and doubtful factor, and nobody desires an increase in the excise revenue. The financial prospects of our Province appear, therefore, to be such as to cause the most serious misgiving in the minds of those who are anxious that Bengal should now launch on a well-considered programme of social reconstruction and reform.

It is to be noted that the budgeted expenditure for 1921-22 far exceeds the annual expenditure of any past year and that the estimate for the coming year is higher than the revised estimate of the current year by over two crores and a half. A substantial part of this increase is due to additional expenditure for carrying on the ordinary work of administration. The deficit will thus continue, and there will be no surplus to fall back upon, when the time for the framing of the next budget comes. Unless, therefore, we are provided with funds from some other sources, there will be no course left to us for meeting even our ordinary expenditure than to impose fresh burdens on the tax-payer, that to say of expenditure for special projects for improving the general condition of the people.

There are three ways in which the financial resources of Bengal may be improved. These are: firstly, fresh taxation; secondly, provision of funds by borrowing; and, thirdly, inducing the Government of India to augment the share of revenue that has been allotted to Bengal. Fresh taxation appears to me to be unthinkable at the present moment or a variety of reasons especially after the new proposals of the Government of India. In the first instance, any imposition of fresh burdens on the tax-payer would prejudice the successful working of the Reforms by creating distrust and suspicion in the public mind. Further the taxable capacity of the people has, in the opinion of many competent persons, reached its furthest limits. Then, it has to be borne in mind that it is never prudent for any Government to resort to such a course for the purpose of carrying on the ordinary work of administration. The Finance Member has explained that, until the present deficit is got rid of, we cannot use our borrowing powers to the best advantage. Besides, owing to the existing condition of the money market this cannot be considered to be a suitable time for floating loans. The only possible solution of our present difficulty lies, therefore, in the adoption of the third course. Bengal can very justly claim for herself the proceeds of the income-tax as also the duty on jute, which is entirely a provincial source of revenue. This would afford the needed relief to Bengal.

It is very unfortunate that the proportion of expenditure on the reserved subjects has been kept unduly high while that on the transferred subjects is unduly low. While there has been a considerable increase in expenditure on General Administration, Justice, Police, and Civil Works, there is not any real increase in expenditure on Education, Sanitation, Agriculture, Industries, etc., which have very properly been described as nation-building departments. This is certainly not the time for indulging in expenditure on superfluous appointments and unnecessary civil works. Yet these are the objects, to which much of the increased expenditure is devoted. Very little has been allotted to primary education, and no increase of grant has been made to the Calcutta University, which has such a large number of students and serves the whole of the Province. I am glad that Dacca has got Rs. 11 lakhs. But the Calcutta University certainly did not deserve the neglect that has been shown of its needs and requirements. More tangible encouragement to agriculture and industries was demanded than the usual one of providing new buildings, and extravagant establishment charges. Considering the present financial stringency of the Province, the authorities should not have undertaken the costly Grand Trunk Canal project now.

Sir, I would be failing in my duty as a member of this Council, if I did not take advantage of this opportunity to give expression to the keen disappointment of the public at the unsatisfactory character of the Budget from the people's point of view. So far the Budget used to be framed entirely by the officials. This was the first time, in which Indian Ministers took part in the preparation of the Budget. The public naturally expected that the Ministers would be able to provide for increased expenditure for schemes of social reconstruction and advance matters which had so far received very inadequate attention at the hands of the authorities. The Budget does not show that the subjects that have been transferred to Ministers have received greater attention than hitherto. The present Budget is exactly like those which preceded it. We find that the proportion of expenditure in the transferred departments to that in the reserved departments is the same in the present Budget as before. There has been an increase of Rs. 2,65,04,000 over the revised estimate for 1921-22. A careful scrutiny of the figures will show that the Budget, in fact, places the departments, over which our Ministers preside, in a worse position than that in which they had been under the old régime, for an increase in the staff and in the emoluments of officers does not constitute any real advance. Even in this year of stringency and special difficulty, when we are faced with a huge deficit, funds appear to have been freely provided for departments, which have so far enjoyed more attention and care than either the funds at the disposal of Government or the circumstances permit. No new or important scheme for the improvement of the general condition of the people has been undertaken. So long as funds are not made available for the proper development of the transferred departments, the Reforms cannot be expected to be considered by the people to be a reality.

Besides the provision by the Government of India of suitable funds for Bengal, there is another way in which it is possible for the authorities to avert the financial danger that threatens our Province. They should take the courageous step of applying the pruning knife to the overgrown and continually over-growing expenditure on the administration. Burke's dictum that the encumbrance of useless office lies "no less a dead weight upon the services of the State than upon its revenues" is one which may very appropriately be commended to them. The principle which he enunciated in the course of his great speech on the economical reformation of the Civil and other services in 1780, that "all offices which bring more charge than proportionate advantage to the State . . . ought to be taken away" applies with—

The PRESIDENT: You have exceeded the time-limit.

Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: May I have a minute to conclude my sentence?

The PRESIDENT: Yes, I allow you one minute to conclude your sentence.

Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: With equal force and emphasis to the case of Bengal. Never was there a greater need for economy and retrenchment. As Lu Chi, a political philosopher of Asia, who flourished in the eighteenth century put it—

The PRESIDENT: You were given time to conclude your sentence not to conclude your speech. I cannot permit you to go on.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: I should like to make a few general observations on the Budget. We have been asked to make the Reforms a success; by this I understand that it is the duty both of the Government and the governed to try their best to enable the country to be in a position to govern itself as soon as possible. Taking this to be our goal I shall scrutinise the Budget as it is before us.

Now, Sir, when one looks into it, one has to rub one's eyes to find out if there is any indication in the Budget which gives one an idea that the Government is, in earnest in its desire to make the Reforms a success. If we consider the heavy expense which we have been called upon to meet as an indication of success then can the Reforms be said to be a success. If we think that the appointment of a few Indians on high salaries is an indication that the Reforms are a success, then certainly they are a success; and if this fact that we have got five Indians filling up the highest offices in the province, be considered to be the rationalisation of the Government, then, from that standpoint, the Reforms are a success. But, Sir, the Budget as it is does not give us much hope.

When we consider the great deficit of about two crores of rupees, we find that certainly our house is not in order. We have been told that we still have a balance to our credit, but we know what that balance means. We are not children, and so we should, as we have done before, persistently demand that the Government of India should deliver to Caesar that which is Caesar's; it should give back to us the tax on jute which has been appropriated by the central Government for itself; then and then only shall we stand on a substantial financial basis.

The other matter which attracts our attention, is the giving away of Rs. 86 lakhs to the Imperial Government by the Government of Bengal. Sir, we are going to pay this amount on the 1st day of April. To my mind, what this Government should do is to write to the Imperial Government on the 1st April that it has decided to keep this amount in safe custody, and to pay them interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., which they are entitled to get on the major portion of the loan. Sir, to consider the matter very seriously, it passes our comprehension that at a time when we are mostly in need of funds to meet our demands, we are in a hurry to give away the money to the Imperial Government. We find that the only way to meet the many demands on the Government will be to raise loans, and these loans we are going to raise very possibly at a much higher rate of interest. While we had crores to our credit the old Government was quite content to pay heavy sums by way of interest for the loans contracted, and this Government pays back the loan when it needs money the most. This neglect of principle on the part of the Government to safeguard the interests of the people, to save what little money it could, shows, to my mind that the Government is not willing to make the effort that it is necessary for it to do, in order to make the Reforms a success.

Sir, besides that, when we look into the enormous rise in expenses we find that the task before us is hopeless. With your permission, Sir, I shall read a few notes which I have prepared with respect to expenditure on land revenue. If we make a comparison between the expenditure in 1917-18 and the expenditure which we are called upon to incur this year, we find a difference of about Rs. 24 lakhs. In Excise, too, we find a big difference in expenditure; in Stamps, Forests and everything; and particularly when we look at the particulars of the General Administration, the difference stands at more than Rs. 11 lakhs. Then, when we come to the Administration of Justice, we find that the difference is Rs. 40,48,000. One of the items which struck me most in this connection, was the setting apart of a certain amount for the Judges of the High Court. Under this item we find that in 1919-20 the amount was Rs. 7,18,754, in 1920-21, it was Rs. 7,44,000; but this year it is Rs. 7,84,000. Considering the gradual increase that we are making in this direction, I think that very possibly, the lawyer-members present in this Council have a very good chance of becoming Judges of the High Court. a

Then, as has been pointed out by my friend Mr. S. N. Mullick, the increase in the expenditure on Police has risen by one crore. It was lakhs in 1910; it is 1 crore and 90 lakhs now. To my mind, the step which the Government of Bengal has taken seems to be a dangerous leap, and instead of making the Reforms a success, this sort of expenditure cannot but retard the progress of the people.

Now, Sir, leaving aside this matter, when we scrutinise the action of the Ministers who represent the people, we are simply astounded. Under new schemes, the provision that has been made is simply ridiculous. For Agriculture we get an addition of only Rs. 5,000. Is it not that many districts in Bengal are badly in need of agricultural farms? Under Public Health, we find another sum of Rs. 15,000 has been provided. Under Education, we find only Rs. 1 lakh provided for Primary Education. These are for new schemes, but, Sir, we have to remember that we have met under the aegis of the Reforms; we are pledged to the Government and the people, to see that the Reforms are a real success. In order to make the Reforms a success we ought to be in a position to grant sums necessary to bring the people out of ignorance, and to teach them to be able to realise their rights and responsibilities. Sir, we know that nothing whatsoever has yet been done to ameliorate the condition of the toiling millions. If the nation is in huts, what is it that we have done for them? Have we enabled them to come out of ignorance? Have we enabled them to grow sufficiently on the soil, so that they may live well? No, nothing has yet been done. It is our duty, it is the duty of every human being to do that which lies in his power to uplift the masses, and for that, these small sums which have been provided in the Budget are not all adequate; very much more is necessary. And what should we do? First of all, we have to demand to get back the tax on jute; we should try to tax luxuries, cinemas, theatres, the race course, and with all the money that we shall be able to get by these means, we shall amply be able to uplift the masses. If this amount be not sufficient, then on the security of the amount. I think it should be our duty to raise loans in order that necessary measures are taken. We should not hesitate, and our Government should be alert, and so should our Ministers. The time allotted to me is very short, and in order to finish, I shall read a few lines from the farewell address of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. Speaking of the message he would take to the people of England he says: "What message can I take back to England? I shall say this, that a greater effort must be made in England to understand and appreciate the Indian point of view. The voice of India has not carried the weight and does not carry the weight which India has a right to claim."

To my mind, this is a message which should be delivered to the people to remember and cherish, and it should be delivered to the Government officials to realise that the people do not like to remain subject to the sort of treatment, which they have hitherto received. The people of this country have rights of their own, and they must have them.

Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: If I may not agree with the way in which the funds have been allocated in the Financial Statement, I cannot but congratulate the Hon'ble Finance Member for the lucid way in which he has presented this statement to us. He has been of great help to us in his endeavour to explain to this Council how to understand the Financial Statement. He has shown us clearly the heads, from which the income is derived for the provincial Government and the heads of expenditure. There was one matter which I looked for, but did not find, viz., he has not indicated in the statement what has been done to reduce expenditure. In ordinary business concerns when the expenditure exceeds the income, there is a reduction either of branches of the business or of establishment, and in such other ways; but we do not see in this Financial Statement as to how the Finance Member, has sought to meet the situation. This is a principle, which is recognised in administrative finance, and has been indicated by Mr. Hailey in his speech delivered in the Legislative Assembly yesterday. With your permission, Sir, I will read a short extract from that speech.

. . . But the fact remains that we have been outspending our income and unless we take early steps to make both ends meet we shall assuredly find sooner or later that, with our revenues mortgaged and our credit impaired, not only will there be no money for the development, moral and material, which India so greatly needs but it will even be difficult to carry on the administration at its present level of efficiency. To retrace one's steps uphill is never a pleasant process but it is a process which must be followed by every country which is determined to set its finances in order. I lay down two propositions as elemental and essential. In the first place we must either by decreasing our expenditure, or by increasing our revenue, or by a combination of both measures, make our accounts balance. In the next place, in so far as we are not able to fund our floating debt or a reasonable portion of our fiduciary note issue in our long-term loans, we must also direct our financial policy in such a way as to replace from revenue the deficits, which we have been financing by the expedients which I have mentioned. For, camouflage the situation how it may, no country can continue indefinitely to live on its overdrafts, even worse is it to attempt to paper over the chasm between revenue and expenditure by the simple process of printing currency notes.

This is what the Finance Member of the Government of India says, and in the Government of India they have a much greater advantage than we have here, because they have sources of revenue not only elastic but of an upward tendency. Customs have been taken away from us; we all expected now that the war is over, trade would revive and customs would increase. So also with income-tax; that has also been taken away by the central Government. In Bengal the sources of revenue are mostly inelastic; land revenue is absolutely stiff, except in khas mahals which are not very wide in Bengal, and for the stiffness I must say that we owe it to the way in which the bureaucracy managed the administration from the close of the eighteenth century to the present day. It was probably necessary at the time, when the country had to be settled and landholders had to be pacified, but it is wholly unnecessary at the present day.

Then, coming to the Land Revenue heads, as shown in the Budget, I find that apart from expenditure on survey and settlement operations in the four districts, in which they are now being carried on, it is proposed during the current year to start settlement operations in three other districts. In Bengal, settlement is not so absolutely necessary as in those provinces, where there is a temporary settlement of revenue or a provision of settlement at the end of 15, 20, or 30 years. Settlement was provided for in Bengal under the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. At this time of financial stringency, settlement operations in other districts should not be started, as it will involve a very large sum of money. This may well stand over for a short while, as they have stood over for more than a quarter of a century, even if authorised by legislation.

Then I find that a very large part of the increase over ordinary expenditure is due to the increase in the pay of the services. Having regard to the high prices prevailing, an increase was undoubtedly necessary, but the way in which it has been shown in the Budget is that the increase has been made permanent instead of temporary. We do not know when normal conditions will be restored and prices come down again; when prices come down, there will be no necessity for the increase to continue; why Government has fixed these increases permanently, I do not know. From what little information I have been able to obtain, I gather that there have been increases in the services in England, but they are all temporary during the prevalence of high prices.

I find in the Budget an item of expenditure under "Salt" of Rs. 2 lakhs. So far as I have been able to make out, the revenue from salt goes entirely to the Government of India; there is no reason why the provincial Government should contribute any part towards the cost, and I should also like to ask the Member in charge of Finance as to who pays for the upkeep, and for the construction, of the salt golahs at Kidderpore and Sulkea.

I should also like some information as to how the revenue from stamps, which are both postage and revenue, is going to be apportioned, because you cannot say how much is applied for postage and how much for revenue; a large part goes for revenue purposes, that part should come to the local Government. If there is no new method of making the apportionment, then the old method which has prevailed previous to the last 10 years, should be enforced again; that is, revenue stamps should be denoted as such, and postage stamps should be separately treated.

While on Stamps, I take the liberty to suggest that, with regard to increasing revenue there is a very large amount of share transactions in Calcutta and a large amount of revenue may reasonably be derived from these transactions. What happens ordinarily in these transactions is that the original holder of a share signs the transfer deed; the transfer deed has to be signed both by the seller and the buyer; the buyer sells it to another person, who in his turn sells it to a third person, and so on for the next 20 transactions, and the same stamp on the transfer deed is utilised throughout. So that Government loses the ad valorem duty on 20 transactions and gets a revenue duty on one transaction only. As I have already said, a very large amount of share business is done in Calcutta, and if some method can be devised to enforce payment of duty on each transaction, a large amount of revenue is likely to be realised. There is also one method by which our revenue can be realised by stamps. There are a large number of awards under the Indian Arbitration Act and also under private agreements. These awards are filed in courts and by virtue of legislation, instead of going through any hearing in court, they have the force of decrees and can be executed immediately. When a party goes to a court and files a suit, he has to pay an ad valorem duty on the amount of his claim; while in filing the award he has simply to pay, probably 8 annas in courts outside Calcutta and Rs. 2 in the High Court and in courts inside Calcutta; and, although the award may be for Rs. 5 lakhs, the party gets the whole machinery of the judiciary to help him to realise his dues. If an ad valorem duty is imposed, having regard to the large increase of commercial transactions, some amount of revenue may be realised in that way.

Then there is the question of death-duties which has already attracted attention. It is an exceedingly difficult problem, having regard to the intricacies of the Hindu and Muhammadan law; but I think on a carefully considered plan the law may be made to agree with the requirements of the public revenue.

In regard to the expenditure on Forests, as shown in the statements, it did not appear to me that there was any expenditure which might be said to be reproductive. There is nothing like afforestation or the introduction of useful trees or anything of that kind; and we all know that Bengal is nearly denuded of forests except the Chittagong Hill Tracts, the Sunderbans, the Darjeeling district and parts of the Duars. We have apparently no forests, although forests bring in a very big revenue to the United Provinces and Burma.

It has been repeated over and over again, in the course of the last few days that our administration is top-heavy; I do not want to repeat it again, but I find, on looking at the expenditure on industry, that there is going to be a Secretary and staff. It is a new department and we have a Director. What necessity there is of having a Secretary is not quite apparent. Private business firms would think twice before having a staff like that in stringent times.

There is also some expenditure on military assistant-surgeons. If they are military assistant-surgeons and employed on military duty the expenditure should go to the central revenue; but if they are in civil employ, probably, the expenditure should be debited to Bengal. The Financial statement does not, however, show it.

Then, there is the expenditure for purchase of printing presses. Having regard to the fact there is a very large number of private presses and some of them are well-organised, if there is any extra work which the Government presses are unable to cope with, they might be sent to the private presses, instead of a capital expenditure being incurred for the purchase of presses at such a time as this. Then, as regards industrial and agricultural education, we have been hearing for some time past about the schemes formulated by Captain Petavel and others, who say that these schools may not only be made to pay their own way but may bring in some revenue.

The speaker, having reached his time-limit, resumed his seat.

Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: The Budget presented for consideration to the Council appears to be disappointing. Its striking feature is that sufficient attention has not been paid to the urgent needs of the province, viz., Education, Sanitation and Agriculture. It is high time that the masses should be properly educated. The appalling ignorance of the masses is well-known, and the percentage of literate people amongst the depressed classes is very small. Particular care should be taken about the education of these backward classes and the Muhammadans. At present there is a section of the people who do not ask for any help from the Government. On behalf of the depressed classes of Bengal, I appeal to Government to provide a substantial grant for the spread of education among the depressed classes, who form about half of the total Hindu population of Bengal.

Then, as regards the munsifi at Chikandi in Faridpur, there appears to exist differences of opinion regarding its site. The District Administration Committee proposed its removal to a different place. I, therefore, think that the project for construction of buildings for the courts and quarters of the munsifi of Chikandi may safely be postponed. The subdivision at Gopalganj in the same district was created long ago and the people of the subdivision are experiencing great inconvenience for a long time owing to the fact that they have to attend munsifi courts at Bhanga and Madaripur at a great distance. I come to learn from an answer to my question that an estimate of the buildings of the proposed munsifi at Gopalganj has not been received as yet. I do not know the cause of such unusual delay in such an important matter. The people of the subdivision expected that money would be provided for in the next year's budget for the purpose. I hope that the money set apart from Chikandi may be provided for the munsifi at Gopalganj.

I wish to say a few words about the Madaripur Bil route canal and its embankment on the left side. Since the construction of the canal and its embankment the people of the villages on the right bank of the canal are suffering much. The embankment has almost closed the natural outlets of water, and the canal is not a sufficient outlet for the volume of water of the whole area. In the beginning of the rains water of the canal overflows the villages on the right bank and damages the aus crop, and in the dry season, the continuous flow of water from the canal keeps the pastures under water. Those lands were formerly culturable. In my humble opinion the area may be protected from inundation by one or two sluice gates or any other means the Government think fit.

Communication is very difficult in the district of Faridpur. For the greater part of the year the headquarters station is not easily accessible from the interior. The Railway Board is said to have sanctioned a traffic survey for a railway line between Faridpur, Bhanga and Madaripur, but I do not know whether the matter has been taken up in right earnest. The District Board wants to improve the Tetulia khal and excavate a khal from Faridpur to Sripur. If this project be carried into effect, it will improve sanitation, agriculture and communication. I hope a liberal grant will be made for this purpose. The people of the interior of Faridpur suffer much for want of medical aid, as there are few good charitable dispensaries. I do not know what would have been the fate of the poor people, if the mission dispensary at Orkandi did not exist. Some of the villages of the Kasiani police station have been almost depopulated by malaria and influenza. The number of daily patients at the Orkandi Mission Dispensary rose to several hundreds. I therefore hope that adequate provision will be made for medical relief in the district of Faridpur.

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: Many have been the speeches and several have been the comments on the Budget, and I think mine will be the last straw that will break the camel's back as I fully realise that all the members of the Council are very much tired at this late hour. It is really a sad spectacle to find that our province cannot make two ends meet without drawing on the unspent balances of the past years, and it is also deplorable that whatever increase you make in your expenditure, you are unable to face the vital question of sanitation and medical relief of the country with that amount of attention which they eminently deserve. Ravages of malaria and cholera and many other preventible diseases exact a toll, the like of which can hardly be conceived by any other civilised country. But it is curious that the allotted sums, however paltry on the above subjects in previous years, could not at all be spent, as schemes did not fully mature!

Coming to the Police, may I know what has been the urgent necessity of budgeting Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land for married sergeants of the Calcutta Police, and would the Government really justify the increase of Rs. 64,50,000 in course of only 4 years on the Department of Police alone? But whether you make any increment or not in this department, the net benefit practically remains the same. Goondism is still as rampant in Calcutta as 20 years ago, and detection of crime and criminals no better. Is it seriously conceded that the needs of the Police Department are more important and urgent than the provision of charitable dispensaries and medical outfit or the question of sanitation, or primary education?

But before proceeding further I like to be disillusioned about one particular point, and that is this: what is the value of these discussions unless we have substantial power to modify, alter and improve the existing state of affairs? Is it simply our pious wish to ask this and that thing as a beggar or have we got any weight which no Government can resist? If it is the former, we have no business to be here—but if it is the latter, I would like to know at once why no provision has been made for giving effect to the resolutions that have been carried here by the majority. Will it not be proper to earmark and allocate a decent amount every year to give effect to these resolutions, and motions. It is then and then only that we will be able to justify our presence in this Council and our participation in the debates will have some meaning.

Many previous speakers have already lamented on this year's deficit. But I warn my countrymen that this deficit is likely to be recurring, unless and until they can modify and unsettle the settled arrangements consequent on the reports of the Meston Committee. I do not understand why Bengal has particularly received this step-motherly attention at their hands, but I say this, that this unjust and inequitable distribution and transfer of our money cannot be tolerated any longer.

I now come to particular items, that are uppermost in my mind. The first is a standing disgrace to the Government and the Calcutta Corporation. Need I say that I mean the municipal railway running through the heart of this premier Indian city, carrying abomination and filth in overloaded and uncovered wagons, at all parts of the day. It is no argument to say that this item depends solely on the activities of the Calcutta Corporation. But forty years have passed since this question was raised by Dr. Coull Mackenzie, the then Superintendent of the Campbell Medical School, but we are to-day where we were forty years ago. Is it not now time for the Government to intervene?

As a medical man I have got a few suggestions to offer for the improvement of sanitation. Granting that the resources at our disposal are inadequate, instead of providing crumbs to all the districts together, I would like to take up the question of sanitation one district at a time, and a large part of the available resources should be directed to that district alone for that year. It is thus that malaria can be checked, if not entirely prevented, throughout the province in the course of 25 years; otherwise even 125 years will not mend matters.

To check cholera in the rural areas seems to me to be a comparatively easy task. You know, Sir, that cholera is principally a water borne disease, and provision of good drinking water will efficiently mitigate the incidence of this disease. If all our village unions be compelled to provide at least one deep well for public use, every year, I am sure almost all the villages will get good and uncontaminated drinking water in course of only ten years and that cholera, diarrhoea and dysentery will be a thing of the past. District Boards, Government aid and private charity should all combine to give effect to this humble but reasonable and important scheme.

Sir, as regards the provision for medical education in Bengal, I am aware that the accommodation and resources are exceedingly inadequate in the existing medical colleges of Calcutta, considering the large number of candidates for admission, and instead of two medical colleges, another two colleges should be provided for by raising the status of the existing medical schools at Sealdah and Dacca and the Mayo Hospital and Sambhoo Nath Pandit Hospital should also have a medical school attached to them, as also the districts having first grade arts colleges, such as, Chittagong, Rajshahi, Mymensingh, Nadia, Hooghly, Barisal, etc.

Turning my attention to my own district (Faridpur), I am grateful that Government has done something for opening the Madaripur Bil route, but the drainage of Chandana and the removal of silt from its junction with the Padma will improve the health of at least a lakh of the population, and my appeal to Government is to give early attention to this. Our regret is, however, that the Government has eyes which see not, and ears which do not hear, and some specialists are necessary to bring them to their senses.

MR. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: I regret I do not find any item in the education grant for providing any kind of instruction for our working classes. Evening schools and institutions for working classes have played a great part in Europe and Japan. In fact technical education of a very elementary type, suitable to each particular industry, will mark a new epoch in real industrial education of our province. Once the Government decides on this, they will no doubt get plenty of financial support from owners of industries, who are equally anxious to see our workmen acquire knowledge of technique. I can assure the Hon'ble Minister in charge of Education that the cost will not be heavy, and will be more or less supplemented by donations and subscriptions. As an alternative the Government can induce factory owners to inaugurate evening class or Sunday classes for the benefit of the employees.

Referring to the grant for industries on page 122 of the estimate, I find the usual item of fisheries recurring from year to year. Sir, I have personally done my bit for this Industry as a commercial man and have had occasion to criticise the usefulness of this department. Many of you are aware of the dramatic origin of this department beginning from the purchase of the Fishery Trawler "Golden Crown" and the luxurious steam launch for discovering Fauna of Fish in the Bay of Bengal and Sunderbans. Sir, these scientific researches could have been well done by the Indian Zoological Department. What the public wanted was an extension and commercial development of our fresh water and estuarine fisheries, so that supply would increase and new varieties be added to our list of fresh food, and prices come down. Nothing of this kind has happened, and after nearly 12 years' hard work the Department has found its salvation in undertaking the supply of fries of carps to owners of tanks and ponds, a work hitherto done by individual producers. The Department is also taking up the management of Khas Mahal fisheries with a view to increase revenue and so justify its existence.

Sir, I would ask the Minister in charge to look into this matter carefully, and reduce the department into a Fisheries Bureau pure and simple for distributing and publishing fish information without undertaking expensive experiments, such as has been undertaken by my friend, Mr. Southwell, the Director of Fisheries, e.g., discovery of hilsa fries with a view to propagate them—hatching hilsa and eury spawns and the rest of it. The result was failure from the beginning to the end.

Sir, to my mind, half of this grant, viz., Rs. 27,000 (page 122) may be profitably utilised to start a small model evening school somewhere in the centre of the Jute mills for teaching working boys just a little technique of carding, spinning and weaving Jute. The results will more than surprise him, and the mill-owners will thank him, when they will find that they can select supervisors and masters from Indian workmen thus trained, and they will reduce their import of hands from Scotland.

Babu HEM CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI addressed the Council in Bengali.

Babu NIRODE BEHARY MULLICK: The late President of the United States, I mean, President Wilson, has said: "A nation is as great and only as great as its rank and file." I know the term "nation" in India is a misnomer; still I hope I shall not be accused of claiming an undue latitude for the term if I attempt to understand the policy of the Budget, now before the House, in the light of this very democratic maxim.

Take first, the Department of Education. Education has been divided into five parts, namely, University, Secondary, Primary, Special and General. In this connection, I have been struck like other members of this House, by the glaringly inadequate amount set apart for primary education. The Hon'ble Member for Finance voices the sentiment of the whole province when he says that the question of the education of cultivators is pressing. It is now desirable that a sum sufficient to give effect to this sentiment should be provided in the Budget.

In the next place, if the rank and file are to be educated, higher and secondary education should not be made a thing of luxury for the few. And with this end in view, secondary schools in villages should be specially encouraged. In villages, not only a considerable number of boys can attend schools from their own homes, but, owing to the well known hospitality of Bengal, a large number can also find comfortable homes in many families—sometimes for nothing and sometimes only at a nominal fee, and this even they can pay in the shape of teaching comparatively well-to-do-boys. Even off-hand I can name several schools which, with a little occasional help from the Education Department, can be made perennially beneficial to a large section of the people.

In the third place, in the matter of Local Self-Government a pure policy of non-interference with district boards and other local bodies will not do. In the constituency which I have the honour to represent in this House, namely the subdivisions of Pirojpur and Patuakhali, to my great surprise, I have found that some villages have more roads, bridges and tanks than are necessary and there are villages too, and their number is considerable, where not a single road or bridge is to be found. It is desirable that the Hon'ble Minister for Local Self-Government should look into the matter, and issue instructions, so that this glaring irregularity may be a thing of the past as soon as possible.

Next, it is not stated in the Budget as to how much money has been specially allotted for Muhammadans and the backward classes. And in connection with this point I should like to put the case of the backward classes at some length. So far as Government is concerned their demands are very few. A few hostels here and there, a few stipends here and there, a few dispensaries here and there, a few grants-in-aid in those places where they burn their own bricks after the day's toil, in order to meet the demands of the Education Department that for certain hours of the day the young boys must sit in an airy and hygienic building if they want education at all—some representation in the administration of the province, a little relaxation of the Bengal Tenancy Act, so that they may remain assured in the enjoyment of the small pieces of land which their forefathers took years to cultivate and fertilise and with which their very soul and heart is associated—these are all their demands, and surely these elementary needs no Government, not to say of the highly civilised Government under British rule, can deny. A noble-hearted Englishman whose name is all the more worthy of respect, as he has chosen to keep himself in secret, has contributed a sum of Rs. 50,000 for the education of the backward classes. This noble example of a generous son of Great Britain ought surely to awaken the Government to their sense of clear duty.

In this connection, I should like to submit that a real responsible Government, capable of withstanding any storm, cannot be established until and unless there has been an all-round progress of all classes. A nation like nature abhors artificiality. By merely swinging the pendulum swiftly from outside you cannot advance the hands of the clock permanently. And indeed even the whole machinery might get wrong to the great detriment of the best interests of the country. If then there is a desire in a certain quarter to establish a premature self-government by hoodwinking a certain class of England's politicians by any such movement as that of non-co-operation the sooner the idea is banished from Bengal and from India the better. And on the other hand, it behoves those who are responsible for peace and tranquillity and dispensation of even-handed justice to all classes to remove those weak spots, on which the flesh-flies of a handful of non-co-operators work. I, therefore, confidently appeal to the Hon'ble Members and Ministers to consider this side of the question justly, and, may I add, sympathetically. Lastly, I desire to respectfully submit that the policy of the Budget should be so framed that huge sections of the rank and file on which depends the strength of the nation may not be deprived of their due share of State help and patronage.

Babu JOCESH CHANDRA SARKAR: The Budget which has been presented to this House by the Hon'ble Finance Member is after all a deficit Budget, although some of its provisions seem to indicate that it is a prosperity Budget. The prominent feature of the Budget is the neglect of the interest of the masses who bear the bulk of the taxation, and who are urgently in want of relief. The provisions for sanitation, medical relief and primary education are utterly inadequate, and instead of them we find costly schemes, which may well stand over till actual prosperity comes. A lakh of rupees only has been provided for primary education, although primary education may be said to be a panacea for most of the ills, which the masses are heir to, as decreased mortality and improved agriculture are bound to follow in its wake. Thousands die annually of preventable diseases, and it is no compliment to the members of a civilised Government that they look on this scene with indifference and with an easy conscience.

It is pleasing to note that provision has been made for increments in the salaries of ministerial officers and teachers of schools. Revision of salaries was long overdue, but it is a pity that it was begun at the wrong end. Those, whose bank balances were not augmenting as before, were given increments first, and those who were faced with the prospect of one meal a day came afterwards. Would it not have been better, if both the increments were given simultaneously from the next year? Better late than never, and let us hope that the increments to the salaries of ministerial officers and teachers will be adequate.

I am afraid nearly double the amount provided for primary education has been and will be spent on the Bangabasi defamation case now pending in the High Court. The case was brought to vindicate the character of an Inspector of Police. So great was the stake that money was and is being freely spent, as if the Government thought that their very existence was jeopardised by the comment of a fifth-rate newspaper. It would have been better if the Government had conducted the case with an eye to economy in view of the hard times which were approaching.

It is gratifying to find that Government have at last thought fit to dispose of khas lands in the Western Dooars with tea leases on receipt of a salami. The Hasimara plot of about 1,200 acres fetched a salami of Rs. 1,36,000 at a time when the tea trade was experiencing the utmost depression. If the Government had pursued this policy from before then there would have been no heartburnings, and at the same time the Government would have been the gainer.

Most of the lands and the climate of the Duars are fit for the cultivation of tea which is undoubtedly a more valuable crop than paddy. But the woes of the purchaser begin, when he applies for conversion. The question of adaptability of the soil and climate is frequently lost sight of in upholding the Government policy of not restricting the cultivation of paddy which is abundantly grown throughout Bengal, and which may be and is easily imported by rail to supply local wants. Would it not be better to allow conversion on payment of a fixed salami per acre for the cultivation of tea, and earn a little revenue? I hope the Hon'ble Finance Member will consider the matter.

The other aspects of the Budget have been thoroughly discussed by the other Members. I will just offer a few remarks. The entire revenue from railways is taken by the Central Government, but the cost of the Railway police amounting to Rs. 7,15,000 will have to be borne by the Government. Would it not be fair to ask the Government of India to contribute a moiety at least of the cost of the police? Similarly the revenue for income-tax is taken by the central Government. But it does not appear that the cost of realisation of the tax is paid by them. Would it not be fair to ask the Government of India to contribute 15 per cent. of the revenue as cost of realisation?

SHAH SYED IMDADUL HAQ addressed the Council in Bengali.

The PRESIDENT: I have seven speakers more, and as the time is short I propose to sit a half hour longer. Even then I cannot give more than 10 minutes to each speaker.

Maulvi FAZL-UL HUQ: I have been a silent listener so long, and if I rise to say a few words at this far-end of the debate, I wish to do so because I feel it my duty to express my own opinion on the points that have been discussed during these three days. I do not propose to say anything new or startling and I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by repeating what has been already said before, but will content myself by merely making a few general remarks.

Sir, it is said that we are on the threshold of a great experiment. There are some who have even said that in launching these Reforms the Government have adopted administrative measures, which in their importance have hardly any parallel in any country in the civilised world. Whether the Indian people have got what they expected, time alone will show, but, thus much is certain that, if these Reforms are to be any success at all, that success must be attained by the hearty good-will and co-operation of not merely the officials and non-officials, but of all sections of the community. Sir, I am constrained to say these words, because I have listened to a sort of controversy between certain Indian members and European members. Speaking for myself, I do not wish to see that kind of racial spirit introduced into the discussions in this Council, because I feel that, whether a member is a European or an Indian, he has come here pledged to uphold the gracious message of His Majesty the King-Emperor that under Providence these Reforms will usher in a Government of prosperity, of progress and happiness for the Indian people. If we all come here to make these Reforms a success, it follows that we cannot continue our discussions in a spirit of rivalry or in any manner, in which it may be said that one section of the community was competing unjustly or unduly with another. I remember in this connection the words of Lord Curzon—one of the noblest of his utterances in India. When addressing Europeans and Indians alike he said: Let the European remember that without the Indian he cannot get on in this country. Let both European and Indian remember that we have to tread along this path for many a long day. Let the Indian feel that he cannot do without the European; and let the European feel that he cannot do without the Indian. Let both try to consecrate a union, which has in it something of the Divine, and let our common ideal be a happier country of a united people. Sir, if this ideal is to be attained, it must be attained not by criticisms, not by a spirit of petty party strife, but on that broader ground of fellowship and sympathy upon which really co-operation can be based.

Sir, I would like to say a few words to the official members of this Council. It is up to every official member to see that extravagances of all kinds are put a stop to. It is most disconcerting to us—who are always ready to work and make the Reforms a success, that we should open with a Budget which shows that the administration is in a state of bankruptcy. It is true that the Government have drawn on unspent balances this year, but it must be remembered that the unspent balances will soon be exhausted, and, unless new avenues of revenue are started we will be in a hopeless plight very soon. Let the officials remember that, if they cannot curtail the expenditure and somehow meet the growing needs of the province, they will only give a handle to the opponents of the Reforms, and make our position in the country doubly insecure. I am speaking quite frankly. We have come here, let there be no mistake about this, against a large volume of public opinion. I wish just to repeat a few words of what Shah Syed Emdadul Haq said in Bengali: We have come here in the teeth of opposition. We were told that this Reforms scheme is a toy which has been given to the Indians simply to lull them into inactivity. Don't be deceived. We have given them this answer: "We know that we will be able to co-operate with Government and other sections of the community to work and work for the good and prosperity of our people." Well, Sir, if we are faced with a deficit Budget every year and if every year we are told that new taxes have got to be imposed in a country, where the people cannot already bear the taxes that are in existence—how can it be said that we will be able to meet our constituents and say that we have been able to make good our promise, and that these Reforms are not meant for retrogression or for want of progress but for a really steady march towards the realisation of the goal, which is really the ambition not only of every Indian but of every European in this country. Apart from the suggestions of the non-official members let the official themselves consider whether the expenditure is not in one or two items extravagant. I will not repeat what I have said, but I am sorry to say that the Police Budget has been going up instead of coming down. I do not wish to go into the details and suggest, because suggestions have already been made and proposals will be made during voting on the Budget pointing out in what respects in the opinion of the non-official members of the Council curtailments can be usefully made—but I will say this much that the manner in which the expenditure on the Police Department is going up from year to year is somewhat appalling. During the first year when I entered the Council I remember distinctly it was somewhere near Rs. 90 lakhs, it was a little over Rs. 85 lakhs. Now in the year of grace, 1921, it is nearly Rs. 2 crores. It may be that the growing needs of the province require growing expenditure on such an important department, but then there are limits to growth of expenditure, and I will ask the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler to consider whether some room for curtailment is not possible.

Then, Sir, as regards Education, I know the Minister in charge has got the amplest sympathy for the aspirations of the Muhammadan community for the spread of Muhammadan education and I know what interest our friend Mr. Hornell takes in this matter. Several years ago I moved in the Council several resolutions for the establishment of an Arts College in Calcutta. I am sorry I see no provision distinctly made for this institution. At least there was no provision in the Budget that was presented to us, and whether any provision is made or not, it is time again to consider if the Arts College is to come—whether it has got to be an apology for an Arts College or a fully equipped Arts College with an efficiency equal to that of the Presidency College or the Dacca College I do not know exactly, but so far as the community is concerned the cry is not now so insistent as it was in 1914-15. I know the cry is less and less for Arts colleges and more and more for technical education. I do not know if the majority of the members of this Council will be able to say something on the subject, but I propose to bring the matter up for discussion after the Budget has been dealt with formally. Then, Sir, Mr. Hornell will remember that there was a committee appointed to consider various problems connected with Muhammadan education. The committee, of which I happened to be a member, made several recommendations to Government. Some of these recommendations have been carried out, but there are no indications in the Budget as regards many important recommendations, about which some initial expenditure is necessary. I am making a general remark and I leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Director of Public Instruction. I do not wish to trespass into the time which is allotted to some other member. I hope the official members will be able to see their way to make some improvements in the Budget and curtail expenditure.

Munshi MAKRAMALI addressed the Council in Bengali.

Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: The Budget as presented to us is a depressing one and does not inspire much hope for the success of the Reforms.

We start with a deficit and have to draw on our unspent balances.

When the Imperial grants were made a few years back, high hopes were raised that some of the crying needs of the province would be partially attended to. Those hopes were not realised, the war was responsible for it. We, however, lived in hope that after the war the unspent balances would be spent for the purpose for which the grants were originally made. But by a strange irony of fate, as a result of the introduction of the Reforms, those balances have been merged in the general revenue, and public health and primary education suffer. We find that there is a great deficit in the Imperial Budget, and it is for the Finance Member of the Government of India to find the means how to meet it.

It would be no justification however to deprive Bengal of its just and legitimate dues. I refer to the duty on jute, for which the Government of Bengal and the people make an unanimous demand from the Government of India.

I am glad to find that the long delayed University of Dacca is now going to be an accomplished fact and I hope it will be established as early as possible, and I trust it will be the means of high education in the true sense of the word.

It is a pity that the Ministers in charge of Public Health, Education, Agriculture, and Industries are not provided with sufficient funds to carry on useful projects. There is no good investing the Council with responsibility and power over important departments of administration without providing adequate funds for the working of the same.

I would like to draw the attention of the Government to village Sanitation and vocational Education. These questions should have special and tender care at the hands of the Government.

The money spent on the department of Fisheries has been so long a mere waste, and I think it can better be utilised for more useful purposes,

The hookworm experiments and researches have not produced any appreciable result, nor is the matter of much importance as has been attached to it.

I think we should concentrate our attention on malaria and other epidemics, and, after we have fought those battles and won them, we can take up the question of hookworm and other experiments.

The Government maintains a highly paid officer as Inspector of Civil Courts offices. The work entrusted to him can be more economically and more efficiently performed by an experienced member of the Provincial Judicial Service.

Provision has also been made for an Inspector of Septic Tanks. This is a work for which the Divisional Deputy Sanitary Commissioner should be made responsible, and he can have one or two ordinary Sanitary Inspectors to work under him. This will cause a great saving on this head.

Maulvi SHAH ABDUR RAUF: I must thank you, Mr. President, for so kindly allowing me to express my views on the Budget that has been presented to the House for discussion.

I must confess, Sir, that the Budget has been placed in our hands at a very late hour. Hardly we were given an opportunity to go into and understand the minor details of it, so as to come forward with more healthy criticisms about them.

At the fag-end of the day and also at the close of the discussion of the Budget I do not like to go into the detailed heads of Receipts and Expenditure, but I would like to discuss the Budget as a whole.

Sir, a perusal of the Budget makes one afraid of a gloomy future. We start with a deficit of more than 2 crores of rupees. An attempt has been made to conceal this aspect of affairs from our view by making up the present year's deficit with the closing balance of last year. But embers hidden under ashes always prove dangerous. From the figures on the expenditure side of the Budget relating to the reserved subjects it seems that the Hon'ble the Finance Member, who drew up the Budget took no notice whatever of the deficit; perhaps because, failing to have a sympathetic treatment at the hands of the Imperial Government, our Government means to make up the deficit by fresh taxation. But I assure you beforehand that people would prefer to remain without the blessings of Reforms rather than submit to any taxation, which to the people at large means nothing short of starvation. I believe, Sir, that Government is aware of the present struggle for existence of its subjects. The abnormal high prices of the daily necessaries of life have left very little room to raise funds by compelling people to submit to any taxation. If were much better if, pending the decision of the Imperial Government about our demands, the Hon'ble the Finance Member would have curtailed and postponed some heads of expenditure in the reserved subjects—heads of expenditure, which can easily be curtailed or postponed for the future.

It is a pity indeed that in the face of this deficit the Government did not hesitate to increase the salary of the high paid officials almost in every department of administration, while men in the subordinate services were still neglected.

I must however congratulate the Hon'ble the Finance Member for his ungrudgingly setting apart a sum of Rs. 45,61,000 for the increment of the salary of the heavily-worked and low-paid ministerial officers and menials, but at the same time I cannot but remark that it will hardly bring them the desired and deserved relief.

Sir, since the advent of the new era—the constitution of the Reformed Council—we, members of the Bengal Legislative Council, as well as men outside it, who have faith in the Reforms, have been anxiously looking forward for better days to come, so far as the material progress and prosperity of the country is concerned. We were credulous of the good effects of the Reforms, inasmuch as people, who understand us and our requirements, are there—placed in charge of departments otherwise known as transferred subjects, which have rightly been called “nation-building” departments. Indeed to build up a nation of a country like Bengal, where education of the masses is almost nil, where the sanitary condition of the masses is worse than nothing, and where agriculture is the main source of wealth, where ignorance and poverty go hand in hand, the “nation-building” of such a country truly and rightly depends on the proper administration of the departments of Education, Sanitation, and Agriculture among others, with due care and attention. We have faith in our Ministers, so far as due care and attention are considered; but the “nation-building” will have to be postponed for future years as the present year's Budget gives the Ministers very little material to carry on their “nation-building” work with appreciable result. I will not repeat the figures, that have been allotted to the departments that are in their charge—they have been most ably dwelt upon by the speakers who have preceded me.

Sir, we were asked to believe that the Reforms are void of any utility to the country. We lent a deaf ear, but the present Budget, is a chapter of disappointments and the way in which the transferred departments have been dealt with by the Finance Member, almost shakens our belief in the Reforms.

Since the creation of the Council, we have been crying ourselves hoarse for the improvement of sanitation and education of Bengal. We have been trying to bring home to the Government that these are the crying needs of the country. But how meagrely have these subjects been dealt with in the Budget! I quite appreciate the peculiar position of the Ministers, and so I sympathise with them. The Hon'ble Ministers have been placed in charge of departments, which are very, very important so far as the material progress of Bengal is concerned. But have they been given sufficient materials to work on? They must have a sympathetic heart and a willing hand to work; but will they mend affairs? I am afraid adverse criticism awaits them from the countrymen for no fault of their own.

Franchise has been given to a people, 99 per cent. of whom are literally illiterate. Under such circumstances, is it not indispensable necessary that primary education should be favoured with the immediate attention of the Government? But the sum set apart for this subject is ridiculously low—it is better not to mention it. I would ask, what is the utility of asking the people to share in the government of a country without giving them the requisite education for it? The Hon'ble the Finance Member in his review of the general financial situation in the Explanatory Budget book, at page 14, paragraph 9, has himself admitted the importance of the three departments of Education, Sanitation and Agriculture. It is better that I read out those lines—

“A special officer is engaged in drawing up a scheme for the improvement of primary education in Bengal. As soon as some plan of action in this matter is decided upon, very large expenditure will have to be faced. The necessity for educating cultivators in improved and scientific methods of cultivation is pressing. The need for more money to spend on sanitation and medical schemes, is well known to every member of the Council.”

But in spite of all these the three departments have been sadly neglected. To me it is kismet.

In conclusion, Sir, I beg to submit that to make the Reforms successful and to avoid any misgivings about them it is necessary that the transferred subjects should have better fate in the Budget, so that the people outside the Council may at least feel that they are enjoying the blessings of a new era.

Babu SARAT CHANDRA JANAH: Before proceeding to discuss the Budget that has been placed before the House, I very much regret to say that the short time that has been given to the non-official members to get themselves acquainted with its contents has greatly handicapped them. This is the first Budget after the Reforms, and most of us are new men. It would have been of great help to us if some time would have been allowed before the discussion could be taken up.

But, saddled with that great disadvantage, I shall try to say a few words about the present Budget. Sir, I would begin with certain salient facts, about which there cannot possibly be any divided opinion. It is a fact, Sir, that India is the poorest country on the surface of the earth. It is also a fact that administration in India is more costly than it need be. Coming to Bengal particularly, it is an admitted fact that it is a very poor province, that both the vitality and the span of Bengali life has considerably fallen off—that the expectancy

Bengali life is very low—that the birth rate in Bengal is lower than the death rate at present—that the Bengalis are a dying nation. It is therefore quite plain, Sir, that the first duty of the Government—and it is a responsible Government and if it is admitted that the Government exists for the people and for them alone—the first and the foremost duty is to remove those causes and those circumstances which are eating into the very vitals of the nation. Sir, we must live first and then be governed.

The first and the foremost need of the country is education—education on a very large and extensive scale.

In the Budget, Sir, though under the head of Education we find a grant of 1.26 lakhs of rupees, this is only 10 per cent of the total expenditure of revenue and only 4 annas per head of population. If we deduct from it the 14 lakhs of rupees which go for the Dacca University and other purposes, there remains about 1.12 lakhs. Sir, in England, 99 per cent., in Japan 97 per cent., in Bengal only 9 per cent of the people are literate. Still in England we find, Sir, there are 33,600 primary schools in 1918, 1,793 secondary schools, 3,143 technical schools and 18 Universities and the total expenses on education by the Education Act of 1918 are borne by the County Councils and by the Central Government. The Central Government paid £56,081,000 = Rs. 84,00,00,000 in the year 1919-20. In Bengal the total population is 46,300,000 and from the fact that about 25 per cent of the whole population is of school-going age, the total number of pupils would be 11,800,000 and the total grant when distributed would be about 13 annas per head of pupil.

We find, Sir, from the statistical accounts of 1913-14 that in Bengal only 23 per cent. of the boys and 5 per cent. of the girls are at school. In Japan, on the other hand, 99 per cent. of the boys and 98 per cent. of the girls are at school. There are in Bengal about 37,000 schools, i.e., there is one school for about 1,250 persons. But in England there is one school for about 135 persons, leaving aside the Universities. It is needless to say, Sir, that the educational needs of the country are enormous.

There has been a great deal of talking about the grants for European and Anglo-Indian education. Do figures ever talk, Sir? I submit, they do, and sometimes more eloquently than facts, and I would, therefore, place certain figures and ask the Hon'ble Members of the House to draw their own conclusions therefrom.

From the Census of 1911 we find the total number of Europeans and Anglo-Indians in Bengal is 45,246. Taking double this number as an approximate figure for 1921, we see that the total number would be about 90,000, on a most liberal calculation. Taking 25 per cent as the usual number of the population as of school-going age, the total number of pupils would be about 22,500 and the total special grant in the Budget is Rs. 1,99,000, i.e., about Rs. 9 per head of pupil besides the general grant under the head Education, whereas the expenditure on each head of Indian pupil is something like 13 annas and on the whole population is 4 annas per head.

Then, Sir, we find that of the total expenditure 17 per cent. is for the Police, 10 per cent. for Education, 4 per cent. for Medical, 1·6 per cent. for Public Health, 1·8 per cent. for Agriculture and 1·1 per cent. for Industries. Or, to make the figures clearer, the total expenditure or revenue on each head of population is about Rs. 2-9-6. Out of this each head pays 7 annas to the Police, 4 annas to Education, 1 anna 6 pies to Medical, 6 pies to Public Health, 6 pies to Agriculture, 6 pies to Industries. If a man, Sir, who is illiterate, is half-starved, half-naked, thin and emaciated with various sorts of ailments, strikes out a scheme for expenditure of his income like the one now before us—what would any reasonable and sane man talk of him? I leave it to the hon'ble members of the Council to decide what they would do with such a man. And the Budget before us is exactly the same.

Coming next to agriculture the total area of Bengal is 84,000 square miles. Of this, the area of arable lands is about 50 per cent. or roughly 42,000 square miles or 26,880,000 acres. The percentage of people living upon agriculture is 79 in Bengal; or there are about 34,000,000 people living on agriculture or agricultural labour. Though there are so many agricultural farms and agricultural experts maintained by the Government, their unity is almost nil. We have not seen any improvement in this direction. More money and a thorough organisation is needed not only to spread the results of research, but to make the cultivators adopt improved means of agriculture and manuring. Agricultural capital must be raised. Cattle-breeding and tending of cattle on improved scientific lines much be carried on and demonstrated to the people at large. They should be persuaded to adopt the improved methods by actual demonstration of the results of improvement and research. The total acreage of lands now under artificial irrigation must be increased. In Bengal only 9 per cent. of the cropped area is under irrigation. In fact, there are numerous items on this head, on which money ought to be spent and urgently too. But under this head, we have a grant of Rs. 21,41,000, i.e., about one anna per acre of cropped area and half an anna per head of population.

Then, Sir, with regard to the item of police expenditure, the total grant exceeds the items of Education, Medical, Public Health, Agriculture and Industries put together. The charge under this head has gone up considerably from 1917-18 when it was 1,26,13 to 1,90,85 thousands in 1921-22 and there is an increase of Rs. 27 lakhs over the last year's expenditure. From the Statistical Reports I find that there were 99,424 policemen including superintendents, deputy superintendents, inspectors, sub-inspectors, constables, dafadars and chaukidars in the year 1908. This, of course, does not include the Railway Police and the River Police and the police in the Presidency town. I am sure the number has considerably gone up since then. Taking the total number approximately as 1 lakh, there is one policeman for every 463 people in Bengal, and the cost on each head of police is on an average about Rs. 190. Let us compare the figures of some other countries. In the four important towns London, Berlin, Hamburg and Bordeaux there were 2 policemen per one thousand population in 1899. There were 14 policemen per 10,000 of population in England, 11 policemen per 10,000 of population in Scotland, 29 policemen per 10,000 of population in Ireland, or 15 policemen per 10,000 of population in the United Kingdom in 1899. The total number of policemen including the London City and Metropolitan police in the United Kingdom was 72,497 on the 29th September 1916. The population of the United Kingdom in 1911 was 45,500,000 hence there was one policeman to 632 people. If the population of London is excluded, then there would be one policeman to a population of about 700 men.

It cannot be urged, Sir, that the number of crimes is greater in Bengal. On the other hand looking into the statistics we find, Sir, that the case is otherwise. Why should Bengal then be compelled to maintain such an extravagant number of policemen at such an abnormal cost?

Taking the number of criminal convictions at an average of 5,000 for each district, which is a very high figure as would be apparent from the average for 1902 to 1911 in the following districts

24-Parganas	19,132
Midnapore	3,800
Faridpur	3,350
Bakerganj	4,910
Dacca	3,710
Chittagong	1,910

there are in Bengal altogether 150,000 convictions. But in the United Kingdom, the total number of convictions are:—

			Indictable convictions.	Commitments	Non-indictable offences convictions	Total
1913	46,913	800,107	847,020
1914	43,968	730,702	774,670
1915	42,808	626,732	669,540
1916	43,546	694,741	738,287
1917	47,329	501,645	548,974

N.B.—Commitments and acquittals are not counted.

The number of offences in Great Britain is therefore five times as much.

Where then is the necessity of maintaining a host of policemen?

From the Administration Report, Bengal, 1917-18, we find the number of political offences in that year came down to only 7 from 37 of the previous year, and surely, there is no case of political offence under report in the years 1919-20 and 1920-21 in Bengal. We have a very big branch of police—the Intelligence Department or the C.I.D. which came into existence in the years 1905-6 and the number of employees in that Department has gone on increasing ever since. Cannot this Department be got rid of now and Rs. 6,00,000 saved? On a consideration of all these facts, I am constrained to say, Sir, that the Budget is sadly disappointing, and there is nothing to encourage the members to work on such a Budget. The Reforms are said to have introduced a new era. I venture to think, Sir, that it would inaugurate a new era of enormous expenditure and would be a veritable white elephant if the Budget is accepted as it is. Where is the improvement? It is on the same beaten track, in the same old groove that the machinery of the Government is driven on! What benefits have the people got? I venture to submit, Sir, it is nothing.

Maulvi MUHAMMAD ABDUL JUBBAR PAHLOWAN: There has already been much discussion on the Budget, and so I do not wish to dilate much on this. But there is one point, which I, as a loyal subject of His Majesty, and as a representative of the people in this Council, cannot but make clear to the Government.

I cannot understand the spirit of statesmanship, in which the present Budget, as presented before us, has been framed. I find in the Budget there is a deficit of about 2½ crores of rupees and this is proposed to be met from balances; but I do not think it is wise for the Government to go on without any balance. Moreover, although this deficit has been met from the balances, I see every probability of a similar deficit in future years being met by imposing fresh taxation on the people, who are already overburdened with taxes. So, if people, in order to have relief are tempted to non-co-operate, which is quite natural with every human being, and God forbid if such a contingency ever arises, then I must say Government will be responsible for that, and this I think will be disastrous to the Government and the people alike. So I appeal to the Government to revise the Budget in such a way that there may not be any deficit, and thus save the people from the influence of the unhealthy atmosphere of the day.

Adjournment.

The PRESIDENT: All those who wanted to speak have, I believe, spoken, except one or two members, who are absent. The Council is adjourned till to-morrow, at 3 o'clock, and I will begin with the Government Members, who will speak by way of reply.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on the 3rd March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 90 nominated and elected members.

The Budget, 1921-22.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! Mr. Hamid-ud-din Khan was in the list of members desiring to speak. By mistake he was not called upon to speak yesterday. I will therefore give him the opportunity of making his speech now.

Maulvi HAMID-UD-DIN KHAN: We are under the deep shadow of a great calamity; the alarmingly large deficit in the Budget is sure to prove a source of calamity to the millions of people of Bengal, and is calculated to strike fear into the minds of all concerned. A Budget with a deficit of over Rs. 2 lakhs is a Budget of intense dismay and disappointment.

I will not be guilty of betraying secrets, when I say that a few days ago we were given to understand by the venerable old Minister of this Council at the time of discussion of the reduction of Ministers' salary that there is no deficit in the Budget; but, Sir, now we are sorely disappointed for we never thought for a moment of a Budget with such an alarming deficit. We never for a moment thought that we will have to fall back upon the closing balance of last year to swell the receipt side of our Budget with the result of a closing balance of Rs. 52,36,000 for next year. We cannot now understand what will be our position next year, unless the Government of India comes to our rescue.

Sir, before going into the details of the different heads of expenditure, I wish to be enlightened by the Hon'ble the Finance Member as to the principle of calculating the heads of voted and non-voted items in the Budget.

The Budget shows on the side of receipts a sum of Rs. 9,71,82,000, but I am sorry to say that the Police Department alone has taken away Rs. 1,90,85,000, and thereby swallowed up more than one-fifth of the whole receipts, leaving other important departments to take care of themselves.

Sir, turning to the Police Department we find that a sum of Rs. 2,83,000 will be spent for acquisition of land for married sergeants. I do not understand why provision has not been made for the unmarried sergeants, to bind themselves in matrimonial ties as soon as possible. But, Sir, I know not why provision has not been made for the poor Indian constables and head constables.

Sir, one will be surprised to think that an allotment of Rs. 1,25,000 has been made for reorganisation of the town police of the 24-Parganas, and another sum of Rs. 20,000 for strengthening the emergency force at Asansol. These provisions may lead one to think that we are on the verge of a revolution: hence there is such an organization.

A glance at the Department of Education will show what amount of care is taken by the Education Department for the advancement of primary education.

	Rs.
For primary education in the mufassal	1,00,000
For enhancement of pay of teachers of primary schools	40,000

whereas we see a provision—

For the revision of the staff of the Victoria School, Kurseong	20,000
For revision of the staff of the Dow Hill School, Kurseong	20,000
For additional grant-in-aid to St. Andrew's Colonial Homes, Kalimpong	80,000
Additional grant to Loreto Convent, Entally	20,000 and what is more—

For works in connection with Dow Hill and Victoria Schools, a sum of	70,000
--	--------

Sir, it is a matter of great shock and surprise that, in spite of the passing of a resolution in this Council for the creation of hospitals in every thana to save the poor inarticulate millions of people of Bengal from malaria and other fell diseases, no provision has been made in the Budget, but we find that a magnificent sum of Rs. 15,000 has been allotted for all the mufassal dispensaries of Bengal. One will surely be shocked at the idea that Rs. 15,000 is provided for all the dispensaries of Bengal, and Rs. 10,000 only for the furniture of the Nurses' quarters at the Medical College Hospital.

The most important department of Agriculture has been greatly neglected. In spite of passing a resolution for the establishment of an Agricultural School at Rajshahi the other day, no provision has been made in the Budget, but an allotment of Rs. 5,000 has been made for five farms.

The Government of India has contributed a sum of Rs. 1,02,000 for Agricultural education, but we find on page 117 of the White Book a big blank against Agricultural education. What misfortune is this.

I do not like to enter into the details of other heads of expenditure, as the time allotted to me is very short. I wish to make a few suggestions for the probable savings that can be made in the present Budget under discussion:—

- (1) A sum of Rs. 2,50,000 may be saved by postponing the development of Kalimpong, as we have Darjeeling as our hill station.
- (2) A sum of Rs. 1,46,000 may be saved without giving the money as rewards to Excise officers.
- (3) A sum of Rs. 1,00,000 by abolishing the Hill and Dacca allowances, together with travelling, of all Heads of Departments, such as Inspector-General of Registration, Director of Revenue, Commissioner of Excise, Member of the Board of Revenue, Inspector-General of Jails, Legal Remembrancer, Inspector-General of Police, Director of Public Instruction, Surgeon-General, Sanitary Commissioner, Director of Agriculture, and the Registrar of Co-operative Societies.
- (4) A sum of Rs. 1,30,000 by stopping the preparation of paper-books in the High Court.
- (5) Rs. 1,33,000 for 20 Munsifs and three Sub-Judges, as litigation is decreasing in the mufassal.
- (6) Rs. 24,000 by not amalgamating the offices of the Administrator-General and Official Trustee.
- (7) Rs. 2,83,000 by stopping for the time being the acquisition of land for married sergeants.
- (8) Rs. 1,50,000 by abolishing the Famine Relief Insurance.
- (9) Rs. 6,00,000 by postponing the provision for the Lunatic Asylum at Ranchi.
- (10) Rs. 30,000 by reducing the band establishment of His Excellency.
- (11) Rs. 3,13,000 by postponing the leave allowances likely to be paid by the Secretary of State and High Commissioner to the officers of the Imperial Service on leave in England.
- (12) Rs. 1,50,000 and Rs. 2,75,000 for the revision of pay of the higher subordinate staff of the Calcutta Police, and the revision of pay of the Higher Subordinate Executive staff of the Bengal Police, as there is a lump provision of Rs. 2,17,000 for the Presidency Police.
- (13) Rs. 65,000 for payment of fees for the design of the Howrah Bridge.
- (14) Rs. 1,52,000 by abolishing the Steam Boiler Commission.

(15) Rs. 7,15,000—Railway Police. As the railway income goes to Imperial funds, it is the duty of the Imperial Government to relieve the Bengal Government of the burden.

(16) Rs. 10,00,000—partition of Mymensingh and Midnapore.

By these means we may effect a saving of Rs. 37,00,000, and last of all, the repayment of Rs. 86,58,000 to the Government of India may be arranged to be spread over 12 years, and thereby save Rs. 77,00,000, making a total of nearly Rs. 1,14,00,000 without taking into consideration the loan of Rs. 70,00,000 for the Grand Trunk Canal, which should be postponed for the present.

We have come to this Council against the overwhelming opposition from the country, and why have we come? We have come to make the Reforms a success; but, Sir, unless we can do something substantial for the amelioration of the condition of millions of our countrymen through the medium of Education, Sanitation and Agriculture, this Reforms will not be worth the name.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: May I be permitted to ask the Hon'ble Finance Member if I am correct in my interpretation of the Devolution Rules by which, I think, the whole of the Public Works Department has not been made a transferred subject, because there is a difference between the term "provincial subject" and "transferred subject." If I am correct, in that view, how is it that the whole has been shown as a transferred head in the Budget, and no portion of it as reserved? It seems to me that the allotment of over a crore of rupees refers to works of other departments, and if they be transferred to the reserved head, the proportion will be much lower.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): I am not prepared to give any answer off-hand on the technical interpretation of the Devolution Rules. It is, of course, a fact that the Public Works Department is a transferred department. It is also a fact that the Public Works Department, like many other departments, carry out work for the benefit of the whole administration. The question of the allocation between the transferred and the reserved departments will be further dealt with in detail this afternoon; I need not say anything more at present.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): I have to deal with the main heads—Excise, Agriculture and Industries. Criticism has been directed mainly against the estimates of expenditure under the head Agriculture and has followed the line that the expenditure is quite inadequate for a department of such importance to a province so largely dependent on agriculture, as Bengal. Colonel Pugh has said that it is playing with the subject, and has urged the department to "Wake up and get a move on." But, Sir, I may point out that there are certain preliminaries to the inclusion of a proposal for expenditure in a demand for a grant. If the scheme requires the sanction of the Secretary of State or the Governor-General in Council, it is obligatory to obtain such sanction before provision can be made in a demand for a grant, under rule 27, sub-rule (1) of the Devolution Rules. Where such sanction is not required, it is still necessary to prepare the scheme and send it to the Financial Department for examination and advice before provision can be made for it in the estimates. Rule 37 (g) (iii) of the Devolution Rules lays down that the Financial Department shall examine and advise on all schemes of new expenditure, for which it is proposed to make provision in the estimates, and shall decline to provide in the estimates for any scheme which has not been so examined. I assumed charge of my office on the 3rd of January last. The Budget estimates had to be more or less cut and dried before the end of that month. I submit, Sir, that it is unreasonable to complain that Ministers have not matured new schemes and included them in their demands for grants, since in the time available it was absolutely impossible for them to do so.

I turn now to more particular criticisms, and deal first with Excise. Mr. Travers has suggested that the Excise revenue might be increased by enhancing the duty on excisable articles. This is a possibility which Government does not lose sight of. The duty on country spirit is enhanced from time to time both to increase revenue and to check consumption. The selling price of excise opium has been raised from Rs. 50 to Rs. 60, with effect from the 1st April next. Only yesterday the rates of duty on liquors of a foreign description, such as beer, rum and gin, manufactured in Bengal, were raised appreciably in consonance with the increased Customs duty imposed by the Government of India on imported liquors of the same kind.

The expenditure under the head "Excise" shows an increase of Rs. 4,41,000 over the revised estimates for the coming year. The bulk of this increase, namely, Rs. 3,85,000, provides for the revision of pay of the Superintendents and Inspectors of Excise. The Excise Department raises a large portion of the total revenues of the province, and, to protect these revenues, it is essential that the officers of this Department should be able, reliable and contented. The policy of Government has been to secure for the Superintendentships of Excise men of the same class as Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collectors, and for the Inspectorship men of the same class as Sub-Deputy Collectors.

The pay of the Deputy Magistrates has lately been increased, while the revision of the pay of Sub-Deputy Collectors is under consideration. In order that there may be no falling-off in the class of officers recruited for the Excise Department, it is essential that their pay and prospects should also be improved.

The next head with which I am concerned is Agriculture. This main head includes the Veterinary Agriculture, and Co-operative Credit Departments. Under the detailed account No. 34 A (Veterinary charges) we have been able to make provision for the appointment of 15 additional veterinary assistants and two additional veterinary inspectors. Detailed account No. 34 B deals with the Agricultural Department. Provision has been made for two new appointments, which have long been felt to be necessary, namely, a Deputy Director of Sericulture and a Deputy Director of Agriculture. The work of the Sericultural Department is of such importance, and has reached such a stage of development, that the services of a Deputy Director to administer the department are essential. As regards the Deputy Director of Agriculture, it has been the aim of Government for some years past to have a Deputy Director of Agriculture for each division in the province. At present there are only three Deputy Directors of Agriculture and two more are therefore required. These posts could not be filled up earlier owing to the difficulty of recruitment during and immediately after the war, but there is reason to hope that it will be possible to secure one officer during the coming year. Provision has also been made for the appointment of 55 demonstrators. The work of the Agricultural Department falls into two main divisions—research and demonstration. The work of research must come first, but, when definite results have been arrived at, they must be demonstrated to the agricultural population. The Agricultural Department have now definite results, such as improved seed for jute and rice, to bring to the notice of the public, and it is the policy of Government to go on year by year increasing the number of demonstrators. Government hope that with the completion of the programme for the construction of farms and the multiplication of small agricultural associations, there will eventually be one demonstrator for each police-station in Bengal. The provision of Rs. 5,000 for the establishment of five new farms, I may explain, is not intended for the construction of new farms. This sum is required to provide certain staff or establishment for new farms which have already been, or are being, started. A member of the Council has expressed regret that no provision has been made for an agricultural school at Rajshahi in compliance with a resolution passed by the Council during its last meeting. I may refer again to the rules which I have already quoted, and point out that it is not permissible to make provision for this purpose until a scheme has been prepared and examined by the Finance Department.

I come now to detailed account No. 34 C—Co-operative Credit. This is a young and growing department and provision has been made for its expansion during the coming year. The rapidity of its growth may be judged from the fact that in the year ending on the 30th June last the total number of societies increased by almost 1,200, and an ever greater increase is expected during the current year. On the 30th June last the working capital of the societies then in existence was Rs. 2,82,61,000. A financial crisis among these societies would clearly be a disaster of great magnitude, and it is essential that the standard of inspection laid down by Government should not be relaxed. In order to maintain it at its present level, additional officers are necessary, and for this provision has been made.

Under the head "Industries" a sum of Rs. 79,000 has been provided for the improvement of mining education. Mining education is a very important matter, which has been neglected in the past, and the present arrangements are admittedly quite inadequate. The scheme will be of immediate benefit to the province, as it will turn out men fit to be foremen and assistant managers of coal mines. There is a large demand for men of this class, and the passed students will have no difficulty in finding suitable and remunerative employment. In this connection also provision has been made of Rs. 9,000 for the erection of a mining lecture hall at Sitarampore for the development of evening classes in mining.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): I have listened with great interest and close attention, and may I add, with some patience—when the same point was repeated by more than 30 different speakers of the 58 who spoke:—but none the less, I have listened with attention to the many interesting speeches delivered by so many members of this House. I may say at once that although I have been strongly criticised, yet I feel every sympathy with my critics, and when I say that, I may assure the House that I do not use any language of convention. I shall at once tell the House why I sympathise with my critics. Sir, when I am criticised and when I criticise others, I often try to place myself in the position of those whom I criticise, or who criticised me. I often find that this is a habit very helpful in being just to one's opponent. Applying this rule of conduct here, Sir, what do I find? The members of this House have sought election at great personal sacrifice, in spite of strong opposition from the enemies of Reforms, and in some cases in spite of ridicule and obloquy. They have entered this House with a keen desire to serve their Motherland, and with high hopes of rendering useful service; as enthusiasts they are naturally anxious to do great and good work; they are naturally impatient and are anxious to start their work with as little loss of time as possible. They naturally feel disappointed if they find that one year out of the very short period of three years is going to be wasted. From their point of view, therefore, need we wonder if they feel strongly, or if they feel disappointed, they use strong criticism, nay, perhaps, bitter criticism at times? Should we be surprised if some of them, in their impatience and enthusiasm, have been tempted to use language somewhat extravagant, and have expressed sentiments, which I have no doubt they themselves in their cooler moments will regret. ~~Let us remember the nature of the Budget they~~ have been discussing after a somewhat cursory examination of it—for we must remember that the time at their disposal was none too long—and in this connection may I make, Sir, a confession. Two or three days after I entered upon the duties of my office, a skeleton Budget was placed in my hands, and I must frankly confess that after a cursory perusal of those Budget papers, I also felt keenly disappointed, and my feelings at that moment were somewhat similar to those of some members of this House, but when I found the time and the opportunity to look into these papers more carefully, when I went into them more fully, I realised that the Budget was not really so bad as a cursory examination of it led me to apprehend; and when I finally tried to think out coolly and clearly the possibilities of the Budget, I came to the deliberate conclusion that in many cases there was enough money in the Budget to keep me,—and those of my countrymen who, like myself, are anxious not to lose a day or even a moment in starting our great work—fully occupied for the year 1921-22. Lastly, there is one all-important fact, which we must not overlook in judging the criticisms—the bitter criticisms—of many members of this House, namely, that the Budget is admittedly not a satisfactory one, and, regard being had to the manner in which the Government of India have treated us up to the present moment, it cannot be a satisfactory one; and no one knows that better than the Finance Member, who has so lucidly and frankly explained the defects in the Budget in his illuminating speech. For these reasons, Sir, I am perfectly sincere when I say that I sympathise with my critics and I bear no resentment against them for their criticisms. The first point which the House has to consider is this: Is the Budget as satisfactory as it could be in view of the limitations imposed upon us by authorities over whom we have no control?

The next point the House ought to consider is whether we have enough money to take up immediately some of our cherished activities in the nation-building departments. I trust that I shall be able to convince the House, at any rate the majority of the members, that with regard to both these questions only one answer is possible, and that answer is in the affirmative.

Sir, I desire to make another remark of a preliminary nature, namely, that we, the Ministers, are not really responsible for this Budget. If the members will turn to page 29 A of Mr. S. M. Bose's book named "The Working Constitution in India," they will find that section 37 clause (g) sub-clause (iii) of the Devolution Rules, lays down some of the duties and the functions of the Finance Department. The sub-clause says that that department has to "examine and advise on all schemes of new expenditure for which it is proposed to make provision in the estimates, and shall decline to provide in the estimates for any scheme which has not been so examined." Now, Sir, when we remember further that, under the rules of the department, schemes have got to be sent up, so far as my department is concerned, to the Accountant

General before the 7th or 10th of November, the House will be able to realise that, so far as we, the Ministers, are concerned, who entered upon their duties on the 3rd January last, it was not possible for us to formulate or frame any schemes. The statutory provision of the rules which I have just read to the House, ought to convince the members that neither the Ministers nor the Finance Department had any option in the matter. The Ministers may have had many pet schemes. Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur has pointed out that the Ministers are tried men—at any rate it is to be expected that they ought to be tried men. I agree with the Rai Bahadur, but I certainly expected that, before a member of the House of the ripe experience of the Rai Bahadur took upon himself to make a criticism of this nature, he should have read the Devolution Rules which, after all, are statutory rules. It is also to be expected that, if members are to offer helpful criticisms and helpful suggestions, they should be more informed about their criticisms, and it is to be expected and it is not too much to expect that the members of this House should be familiar with all the statutory rules.

Sir, I do not desire to dilate on this point further. I think that it ought to be pretty obvious, that we, the Ministers, are not really responsible for this year's Budget. If in the next year's Budget there are just grounds for criticism, we shall be perfectly willing to undertake responsibility. But, although I say that we are not responsible for this Budget, my remarks must not be taken to mean that the old Government did not do its duty. When I have placed certain facts and certain materials before this House, I am sure the majority of the House will be convinced that so far as my department is concerned, it tried its best, as it has provided enough money.

Some of the criticisms and suggestions made by the members of this House are of a specific nature, but others are of a general character. I propose to examine many of the important criticisms, but I am afraid the time at my disposal, even if I speak at length, will not be enough for the purpose. I desire to take up first of all the all-important criticisms, of a very, very specific nature, repeated perhaps by 30 or more speakers, that I have neglected the interest of primary education in this province by providing only one lakh of rupees—mark the figure, only one lakh—in this year's Budget. I desire, with the leave of the House, to take up this question first.

We have been told repeatedly that the provision is a provision of Rs. 1,00,000. I suppose it will surprise many members of this House who have not perhaps had the time—or they will pardon me if I say—they had not the inclination to look into the Budget more carefully, for they will find that there is a provision for Rs. 31,52,000 and not Rs. 1,00,000. I do not ask any members of this House to take me on trust, but if they will only refer to the Civil Budget estimate, which has been placed in their hands some time ago, what will they find? They will find, on turning to page 95 of the Civil Budget estimate, that there is a provision for Rs. 1,04,000 for primary schools, made up of Rs. 49,000 for primary schools, Rs. 17,000 for zenana schools, and Rs. 38,000 for circle school grant—altogether Rs. 1,04,000.

Turning next to page 99 of the Budget, they will find a provision for Rs. 4,48,000 for Guru-training schools, and I may remind the House that this is a provision of some importance, for if you have to tackle the question of primary education, we must not only aim at increasing the number of our pupils, but we ought to aim at improving the quality of teachers. I do not claim for one moment that the gurus turned out from the guru-training schools are not above improvement. But certainly here is an attempt to improve the teachers of primary schools. On that very page, if the members will turn to the last column, they will find that, according to the "Accounts" of the last year, the total sum which was spent that year was Rs. 2,79,000, or, in other words, we have provided for Rs. 1,61,630 more for guru-training schools than what was spent last year.

Now the next item to which I will draw the attention of the members of this House is an item at page 104. There they will find that the fourth item provides for Rs. 24,84,000 as grants-in-aid to primary schools alone.

Now below this item there is an item for zenana classes for Rs. 3,000, which is also for primary education. Then, right at the end of that page, the last but one item is a special grant of Rs. 1,51,000, out of which Rs. 1,00,000 is for primary education. But here I cannot justly say that there is enough explanation to indicate to the members of this House that this item has reference to primary education. As regards the other items, there is enough explanation in the Budget itself. If the members will turn to the last column—Accounts of last year—they will find that only Rs. 19,64,794 were spent in grants-in-aid to primary schools, but this year we have provided Rs. 24,84,000, that is to say, we have provided Rs. 5,20,000 in grants-in-aid more than we spent last year, and we have provided an additional sum of Rs. 1,00,000 in the special grant item.

If the members will turn to page 105, under the head Scholarships in primary schools, they will find that Rs. 10,000 has been provided for this purpose, as against Rs. 5,921 spent last year. Then at page 103, under the head Miscellaneous—the last but one item—zenana education by central gathering, there is a provision for Rs. 3,000. Here, again, I am free to admit that it is not possible for members to understand that this Rs. 3,000 was for primary education. Now, if we add these items, we find that the exact sum provided for primary education next year for this province is Rs. 31,52,000 and further, if we will compare the column of the "Budget estimates" and the column of the "Accounts, 1919-20," we find that this year we have provided Rs. 8,26,001 more than what was spent last year. The criticism that for the province of Bengal I have provided only Rs. 1,00,000 on primary education is, therefore, based on misapprehension.

Now, Sir, I desire to convey some further information to the House. This year, within the six or seven weeks that I have taken charge of my office, I have arranged to pay Rs. 3,00,000 to the Calcutta Corporation for their primary education scheme; and the Corporation, I understand, is going to provide Rs. 5,00,000 in their Budget; and I may mention here that this Rs. 3,00,000 comes out of a provision for the current year, made by the old Government which has been criticised so strongly by so many members of this House, and in the Budget, which I hope you will soon pass, there is a further provision for Rs. 3,00,000 for primary education in Calcutta.

I may inform the House that I have arranged to pay this year Rs. 6,000 to the Rangpur Municipality, which placed before me only very lately, a definite scheme, through our special officer, Mr. Biss. The Rangpur Municipality, I am glad to inform the House, has agreed to impose an education tax of 1·6 per cent., and they are going to provide free primary education. I congratulate the Municipality of Rangpur on its public spirit. Out of the 116 municipalities we have in Bengal, Rangpur—a comparatively poor municipality with a population of 16,000 has been the pioneer. I trust that other municipalities will come forward and follow the lead of Rangpur. I have already given directions to make over Rs. 6,000 to Rangpur this year, as soon as certain preliminaries are settled. I desire to inform this House that within the short period that I have been in office I have arranged to pay a further sum of Rs. 10,000 to three union committees in the district of Khulna, through the District Board of that district. The District Board of Khulna forwarded to me lately a definite scheme relating to three union committees at Tala, Arulia and Bagerhat, within the district of Khulna, and I have arranged to make over to them Rs. 10,000, the full amount of their demand. As I have commended the action of the Rangpur Municipality, I take this opportunity of commending the action of the District Board of Khulna and of the union committees mentioned. I believe there are many members of this House who are also prominent members of some of the District Boards of Bengal. I desire to convey this message through them to those who are not here, that if the district boards of Bengal will try and follow the good example of Khulna the question of the primary education in rural areas will soon be solved. Therefore, Sir, within the short space of less than 8 weeks, thanks to the provision made by the old Government, I have been able to arrange to pay before this official year is at an end Rs. 3,16,000 in the cause of extension of primary education. May I not also claim this, that during this official year, the only self-governing bodies, which showed signs of self-help and were ready with their schemes were helped by the Government, and for this help the House ought to thank not me, but the old Government who provided the money. It is sad to reflect that out of the 116 municipalities—I am including Calcutta and 25 district boards—altogether 141 self-governing bodies of this great province—only four have come forward, with definite schemes. I trust the self-governing bodies will stimulate the enterprise and the public spirit of these four I have shown that I have provided Rs. 31,52,000 in the Budget for meeting the demands of primary education of this province. I have also shown that I have provided for Rs. 8,26,104 more than what was spent last year. I am willing to make this statement that I will help every local body in Bengal, who will come forward with definite schemes embodying an adequate amount of self-help and that I have money for the purpose in this much criticised Budget. I shall explain to the House why I consider that I have sufficient money for the purpose but I would remind the House that the explanation will embody my provisional ideas on the subject, which I might change later on. Now take first of all the district boards. It stands to reason that without the help of some local organisation it will not be possible for the district boards to start primary schools in any locality. There must be some village union board or union committee, or some local committee which must be responsible for the management of local schools. Of the local bodies I mentioned I prefer village union boards. Let me assume for the purposes of an illustrative calculation that a new primary school can be started in a village union board for Rs. 40 a month. Let me also assume that in a particular district only 20 more village union boards can be started next year. Then, altogether Rs. 800 a month will be all that will be necessary for a district—out of that the local people ought to be able to find half the expense and the remaining half may well be divided between the Government and the district board, so that the total increased expense to each district board will be Rs. 200 a month or Rs. 2,400 a year, and to the Government for all the district boards will be Rs. 60,000 only—a figure well within the Rs. 8,00,000 and odd we have this year over and above the actual expenses of last year.

Now take the mufassal municipalities. I realise that the mufassal municipalities are mostly poor. Take an ordinary district town with a population of somewhere between 30,000 or 40,000. There are a few houses of pleaders, the basabaries of a few zamindars, and houses of a number of officials and a number of poorer people who cater for these people. There is no industry, unless we call litigation an industry. That being the position of a district town, I cannot expect that many of them will be able to find much money for primary education, but at the same time men of considerable public spirit reside in some of these district towns and men of some wealth too are not wanting. If they would only exert themselves it ought not to be difficult for many district towns to follow the example of Rangpur. If they provide for free primary education as Mongpur has done the expense will be comparatively high, but if they cannot for the present provide for free primary education, they can easily provide for increased expenditure with a view to improve the quality of teaching and increase the number of pupils. This ought not to cost much.

But the move must come from the municipalities first. As I have just now said, each district town may provide for free education—which will mean more expense to them—and I shall be prepared to help them on a liberal scale. But, if the district towns are not prepared to provide for free primary education, at any rate it is up to them to increase their expenditure on primary education. For instance, if a municipal town spends only Rs. 500 a year, it is up to it to increase the expenditure to say Rs. 750. In that case I am willing to pay the amount by which they increase their expenditure. I hope my Hon'ble friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, who is the author of the Primary Education Act, will lead the way in his own municipality before the year is out by formulating a definite scheme of free and compulsory primary education, and I promise that, if his municipality shows adequate signs of self-help, I, on behalf of Government, would come to the rescue of that municipality. But signs of self-help must be adequate. I cannot be unjust to any part of the province. I cannot tax Tippera to pay 24-Parganas. This House, I hope, will now appreciate that there is enough money for extension of primary education.

Now, Sir, I desire to deal shortly with the possibilities of development of primary education next year. In the year 1919-20 altogether Rs. 49,45,000 was spent on primary education in this province. Out of this sum the provincial revenues contributed Rs. 17,00,000 and odd, the different district boards contributed Rs. 7,00,000 and odd, the municipalities a little more than Rs. 1,00,000, and Rs. 18,16,000 were collected in fees, etc. I am glad to see all round a very healthy sign of a demand by the people themselves for education. The fees collected in primary and secondary schools and other educational institutions amounted to a high figure and this shows that the people are willing to pay for the education of their children according to their ability. Then there are the endowments which yield Rs. 6,000 and odd and the subscriptions amount to Rs. 5,00,000 and odd. The provincial revenues, as I have said before, contributed Rs. 17,00,000 and odd. This year we have provided for over Rs. 31,00,000 in the Budget, and, if necessary, we can pay at least Rs. 13,00,000 more than what we did last year. If we spend Rs. 13,00,000 more our total will come up to Rs. 30,00,000 and if the local bodies come forward with another Rs. 30,00,000, then the total will be Rs. 60,00,000, and if from other sources, such as from subscriptions and endowments, another Rs. 28,00,000 can be raised it will be possible to spend Rs. 88,00,000 next year in place of Rs. 49,00,000 of this year. I am sure the House will agree with me that this will mean a very great advance for one year. If, however, the local bodies are not able to pay as much as Rs. 30,00,000 it ought not to be difficult for them to pay at least Rs. 15,00,000, and if they do so, the Government will also come forward with adequate help and perhaps the total expense on primary education next year will come up to Rs. 60,00,000 or Rs. 65,00,000—an increase of about 33½ per cent.

I have appealed to the public spirit of self-governing bodies and I hope the members of this House will not take me amiss if I take this opportunity of reading out to them only one sentence from the remarks of a Divisional Commissioner in forwarding a number of schemes from the municipalities of his Division relating to the proposal for free and compulsory education. The Commissioner says: "It appears that none of the municipalities in this Division is willing to enhance its educational grant or to levy education cess, but every one wants Government to bear the entire cost." If it be the desire of this House that the Government should bear the entire cost, speaking for myself, I shall be quite willing to provide for the money, but the House should consider what it would mean. If a particular locality is benefited it is to be expected that that particular locality should bear a fair share of the cost for their benefit, but if the House in its generosity say: "No, let the whole province bear the burden for the improvement of a particular locality," and if they vote the grant for the purpose, I would be quite willing to accept the decision of the House after I have pointed out to the members that it would be unfair, unjust and wrong to tax say Chittagong for the benefit of Hooghly and vice versa. But if in spite of my warning the members want to tax the whole province for the benefit of a particular locality, it would be their responsibility and not mine.

My friend, Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, in the course of his observations, remarked that the Ministers should have taken the members of the Legislative Council into their confidence. So far as I am concerned, and I daresay so far as my colleagues are concerned, we are perfectly willing to do this. I have often tried to place my information at their disposal, subject to the limitations imposed on me by the oath of my office, but I regret to say that this willingness on my part has not been fully appreciated and full advantage of this has not been taken. If full advantage of this offer were taken, then the time of the Council would not have been wasted—the House will pardon me if I use the word "wasted," because I feel that criticism based on misapprehension amounts to a waste of public time—the time of the Council would not have been taken up by thirty or more speakers repeating that there was only Rs. 1,00,000 provided for primary education and not Rs. 31 lakhs.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I never said one lakh of rupees. I said only one lakh more.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: I have explained clearly that it was at any rate Rs. 8,00,000 more and it would have been quite easy for me to show that it was Rs. 8,00,000 more. But let bygones be bygones. I have made the offer before and I repeat it now that, subject to the oath of my office, I am willing to place all available information at the disposal of members of this House.

Another criticism of a general character, directed against me and the other Ministers, was that we had not formulated any scheme or programme. True we had no schemes, nor had we laid down any policy. I may at once say that this criticism is a natural and proper one, but I would desire the House to listen to our side of the case before they come to any conclusion. It stands to reason that the all-important point in a programme is its financial aspect. But here we are in a position of financial uncertainty. We do not know whether the Government of India will come to our rescue or not. If the Government of India help us, our programme would be of a certain character. But, if on the other hand the Government of India do not come to our rescue, our programme must be of a different type. Then there is another point which I would like the House to consider. I conceive it to be my duty as a Minister not to force any programme or any scheme on this House—it is certainly my duty to think out a suitable programme—but I conceive it to be my duty after I have thought out a suitable scheme or programme to consult, at any rate informally, the majority of the members of this House, consider their constructive suggestions and then to place that programme definitely before the House. Had we time to do all that within such a short period as seven or eight weeks, a good portion of which was taken up by discussion in this Council? Is it not desirable that programmes and schemes, which are of vital importance to the province, should be thought out carefully in moments of leisure, if leisure be possible to the life of a Minister; but at any rate in moments of comparative leisure. The financial aspect of the programme should also be carefully thought out. I promise that, as soon as I have a little more leisure, I will flood the members of this House with various programmes and schemes, and only hope that they would give that amount of attention to those programmes and schemes, which I have a right to expect of them. This criticism has come from, amongst others, my esteemed friend, Colonel Pugh, and I do not wonder at it. To a Britisher brought up in the traditions of parliamentary institutions and party politics the first natural question to ask of a public man would be—What is your programme? But Colonel Pugh perhaps forgot that the limited form of self-government which we have in Bengal is a new experiment. Parties are yet in the process of formation, opinions have not yet crystallised, and as this is the first sitting of the Council, the Ministers in Bengal have not the opportunity, like the Ministers in other self-governing countries, where there are two different parties with the broad outlines of their respective programmes to go upon. So although the question is a natural one to strike a gentleman in Colonel Pugh's position, I daresay, if he reflects over the question more carefully he will find that it is premature for us to formulate a definite programme at the present moment. I may add that more harm than good will be done by hasty programmes.

Another criticism of a general character which has been levelled against us is—Why is there no proposal for taxation? Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, for example, suggested taxation on Stamps; Mr. Travers suggested taxation on Excise. I have always welcomed constructive suggestions, and I welcome these. But I may mention that in December 1917 in a memorandum attached to Mr. Lionel Curtis' book on the "People of India," I pointed out that amongst others these two items were possible sources of taxation. Although these are possible sources of taxation, yet there is one good reason why I object to any fresh taxation at the present moment. I feel that it will not be right at the present moment to tax our province merely because the administration is changed. It will not be right to tax Bengal, when the people will not be getting any advantage from that taxation. The deficit in the Budget is due to the limitations imposed upon us by the Government of India. I feel it will not be right to impose any fresh taxation for carrying on the ordinary administration of the reserved and transferred departments. If in future we improve education, or sanitation, it may be quite open to us to come forward with schemes for fresh taxation. But to tax Bengal for the purpose of making up the deficit, for which Bengal is not responsible, to my mind would be unjust.

Another criticism levelled against us is: Why did we allow Rs. 86,00,000 of loan to be paid off? As regards this point—I am only referring to the matter from the point of view of the Ministers—my short answer is that we are in no way responsible for the repayment of the loan. The Budget will show that this sum did not form any part of this year's grant. It is mentioned there merely for the purpose of information. Whether the action taken by the old Government was right or not, I daresay the Finance Member will give a satisfactory answer. But it is enough for my purpose to say that we are in no way responsible.

Another criticism is—Why were earmarked grants allowed to be swallowed up? What is to be done later on, say next year? In the first place this is mainly a point for the Finance Member to answer and I daresay he will give the House convincing reasons. But I may point out, as I have already pointed out, that under the Devolution Rules it was not open to us to frame schemes for utilising any sums, nor could we keep the money in a separate chest so to speak. Therefore, if we had merely retained these sums without utilising them, it would not have done anybody any good. Furthermore, it would have done the province a good deal of harm. Supposing, if we had kept the total amount earmarked for education in a sort of separate chest so to speak, it would have been necessary this year to tax the province to the extent to which we retained the earmarked grants. The various suggestions of retrenchment put forward by many members of this House may result in the saving of a few lakhs of rupees, but the deficit as you know is of a much larger amount, so that, if we had retained the money earmarked for our departments, the province would have been faced with taxation of over a crore of rupees limiting my remarks to the earmarked grants of my department only.

There is another thing which I desire to state to the Council. The Members on the Executive side of the Government never denied our moral right to these earmarked sums, and they will never deny it. Now, under the Devolution Rules, if any further taxation be imposed the Government will have to proceed under section 30, the provision of which is this:—

All proposals for raising taxation or for the borrowing of money on the revenues of a province, shall, in the case of a Governor's province, be considered by the Governor, with his Executive Council, and Ministers sitting together, but the decision shall thereafter be arrived at by the Governor in Council, or by the Governor and Minister or Ministers, according as the proposal originates with the Governor in Council, or the Governor and Ministers.

So that if this money be required for the reserved departments the proposal will originate from the Member of that department, but I suppose it will be poor consolation to our province as to whether the proposal for taxation originates from the reserved department or the transferred department. The nett result of keeping this money in a sort of separate chest would have been immediate taxation. On the other hand there is the prospect of the Government of India coming to our rescue. Supposing they do not, then it will be open to us to think out schemes of retrenchment. We have six or eight months before us and we can formulate well thought out schemes of retrenchment and not hasty suggestions here and there, and we may also formulate schemes of taxation if the members think we should have taxation. Speaking for myself, I am opposed to taxation to meet ordinary expenses though for increased expenditure of the transferred departments and for public good I would not oppose taxation.

Another criticism, which has been levelled at us, is—On what principle did we consent to the division of 65 and 35 per cent? Here, too, the Finance Member will deal with this question and he will be in a better position to deal with it effectively, but, as I have already pointed out, we are not responsible for the division between 65 and 35 per cent. The question of division would have properly arisen, if we were responsible for the Budget. Furthermore, we took the percentage as we found it, as the old Government was responsible for the Budget. No schemes could possibly be put in and no scheme was put in by us. The House should also consider that we cannot lay too much stress as to the percentage. Should not our view-point be whether a certain expenditure in the reserved or in the transferred department is really for the good of the people or not? It may be quite conceivable that in a transferred department sums may be spent which do not really benefit the people. It may be equally conceivable that in a reserved department sums may be spent for the benefit of the people. So I have no doubt that the House will concentrate its attention on whether a sum spent is for the benefit of the people or not.

Sir, I have already taken up the time of the Council at such length that I am afraid I shall not have much time to deal with any specific points, to which my attention has been drawn, but I shall deal with some of the more important of them. With regard to the allotment of funds between the Calcutta and Dacca Universities, I find that some of my friends have criticised me for allotting more funds to the Dacca University than I should have done. And some others criticise, saying that I have given practically nothing to Dacca. To this my first answer would be that this year's Budget is not my Budget. But, apart from that, even within the short time that I have been here, I have tried to help both the Calcutta and Dacca Universities. As regards Dacca, it had a large earmarked grant, amounting to about Rs. 60,00,000. Therefore, I have allotted Rs. 9,00,000 to Dacca and those who have spoken in favour of the Calcutta University have no legitimate right to complain. As regards Calcutta, I am sorry to say that the old Government was powerless, because the Calcutta University never came forward with any demand in proper time. So far as I am concerned, I practically went out of my way to say that I would be prepared to consider favourably any demand made by the Calcutta University, but at the same time I took care to add that I could only do so after the whole Budget was passed, and, only if I could effect a saving out of the Budget grant. I daresay that if the Calcutta University had helped itself and placed its demands or schemes before the old Government, that Government would have favourably considered the demands or schemes of that University. But I will promise this, that I shall try to do my best for the Calcutta University, for after all it is my alma mater.

With regard to my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, who wanted to know what had become of the lakh of rupees which were earmarked for primary education in the current year's Budget, I may tell him that Rs. 50,000 was reappropriated by the Financial Department in September last, and practically the remaining Rs. 50,000 I have managed to spend since I came to office.

Raja Maniloll Singh has requested me to consider the case of the Sub-Registrars sympathetically. I promise that I shall do my best.

There are various other points to which my attention has been drawn. It is not possible to deal with those points without encroaching too much on the time of the Council. Sir, I have tried to explain my position in the matter. It will be for the House to consider whether the criticisms which they put forward have been properly met or not, but I venture to think that I have tried to meet those criticisms properly.

Before I conclude, Sir, may I appeal to this House that in considering the questions on Budget proposals, the House should lay to heart what our future Viceroy, Lord Reading only yesterday said. Speaking at a large gathering of Indian students and in response to the call of Indian students, Lord Reading declared that the political idealists, who had most influenced him, were Gladstone, Morley and Campbell-Bannerman. Political idealism finds modern expression in reinterpretation of the French watchwords: Liberty, Justice and Love. There could be no justice without love. Love meant power to put oneself in another's position. In political idealism justice stood supreme. I appeal to the members of this House to make justice supreme. British or Indian should always remember that, if we really desire to make the Reforms a success, justice should stand supreme. Thus I say with reference to the Budget proposals about European and Indian education.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): I feel that in addressing the House on this occasion I must offer my congratulations to the members for the interest which they have displayed in the Budget discussion. I am sure that this interest, growing with ripening knowledge and experience, will fructify in results fraught with enduring good to the Motherland. Sir, I feel that we have met, on what may be described not poetically but within the limits of absolute and unqualified truth, as a historic occasion. This House is considering the first Budget of the Reformed Council, armed with plenary powers over important branches of the public expenditure. Sir, I am not guilty of the slightest exaggeration, when I say that we, the representatives of the people, are exercising at this moment what may be described as sovereign authority subject to the limitations which the constitution has imposed upon us. I appeal to hon'ble members to rise to the solemnity of the occasion, to the height of their responsibility. We have listened to the criticisms which they have made, with interest, with attention—and I might add with respect. Some of the criticisms seem to me to have been unfounded. All the same, I feel, and every Member of Government must feel, that they are the criticisms of the elect of the people, their chosen representatives deputed to this Council, to work on behalf of the people and to voice the grievances and the complaints of the people. We regard their criticisms in that light. They may penetrate into our flesh and blood, but the soul remains undisturbed in the magnitude of the task that is before us, in the recognition of the fact that the voice is the voice of the representatives of a people, rising to a sense of national consciousness. Sir, the Budget is a disappointing Budget, and the note of dissatisfaction has been sounded with unerring emphasis. I am afraid in that note of dissatisfaction the Government and the Ministers have been included. We have been held responsible for the Budget. My friend, the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter, has endeavoured to show that we, Ministers, have just recently come into office, and therefore, the responsibility is not ours: but the public voice makes no discrimination and says that it is the Budget of the Government, that it is an unsatisfactory Budget, and Government is responsible for it, no matter whether the Government consists of two wings, the popular and the official; it is the Government—one solid, unified Government, acting and deliberating together. Government must, therefore, bear the responsibility. Sir, I do not object to that. I am broad-shouldered enough to bear the criticisms that may be levelled against the Government or against the Ministers. Sir, the fact that we have been new to office does not count for much. In this connection I am reminded of a bit of evidence which I gave before the Joint Parliamentary Committee in July 1919. That was one of the pleas that I urged in favour of the Reforms. I said that the immediate effect of the operation of the Reform Act would be to bring the Ministers into line with the Executive Government, within the central zone of popular criticism, which would be directed against the Government as a whole, against the Ministers as well as the Members of the Executive Council, and the volume of such criticism would be reduced by its division among Members of the Executive Council and Ministers. That prediction has now been amply justified by the events of the last few days. I do not regret it in the slightest degree. And there was another little prediction, which, as a Brahmin and which I desire to repeat in this Council, I ventured to make on that occasion. It was this, that this first instalment of self-rule was but the prelude to the fuller establishment of complete responsible Government in the provinces. I am perfectly certain that we are on the first rung of the ladder, and that, if in this Council we conduct our deliberations with wisdom, with prudence, with good-sense, without extravagance, and without stirring up racial prejudice, we shall be approaching the goal of self-government within a measurable distance of time. That was the message of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. His parting message was, whether India was to have self-government or not was a matter which rested with the people. They may have it indefinitely postponed, or they may have it soon by the practice of moderation and prudence, qualities which I venture to say are the gift of the people of India and have been their heritage from the ages past.

Sir, I now pass on to some of the detailed criticisms affecting my departments. In the first place, I have to observe that it was Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri who set the ball a-rolling, and he began by observing that the Ministers were to blame for assenting to the diversion of the earmarked funds to purposes other than those for which they were allocated. This is a matter which concerns the department of my friend the Hon'ble the Finance Member, and I am quite sure that in his reply he will be able to convince you that there has been no diversion of any kind whatsoever. A portion of the fund—he will mention the figure—is still there, and is to be controlled by you—you can divert it and use it in any way you like.

Now I pass on to the observations of my hon'ble friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose, whom I always listen to with the utmost pleasure. He is one of those men, who, guided by experience and good sense, has a great future before him, and his eloquent speeches are listened to in this House with great interest and attention. He said that the Ministers have exhibited a deplorable lack of appreciation of their responsibility in the matter of nation-building subjects, and he went on to add that they have shown an equal lack of ambition. I was a bit startled when I heard that statement made by my friend; for up till now nobody has charged me with lack of ambition—it is quite the other way about. I may assure my hon'ble friend that neither advancing years nor the allurements of an easy, peaceful and contented life have deterred me from pursuing my ambitious ideals. However that may be, my friend is generous enough to recognise that we have just newly come to office and, that being so, what he wants us to do is to start the burning of bricks, before we raise our splendid structure. I desire to meet him on his own ground. My friend perhaps does not know that to start brick-burning takes at least six months, and we have been in office only for a couple of months. I am not a manufacturer of bricks, but it so happens that for the last 30 years I have been closely associated with a municipality which controls extensive brickfields. They start operations in the month of October, they collect the clay, then temper it with water, expose it to the sun, mould the bricks, dig holes, put them in and burn them. The operations begin in October and end in March. My friend will be generous enough to allow us at least six months' time to start the brick-burning to which he alludes. Now, I ask, would any programme or any policy be worth the paper upon which it was inscribed, if it was deliberated upon and designed in a couple of months? It would be worse even than the historic scrap of paper, which the German Chancellor brushed aside with derision and contempt. We must have time for a thing of this kind. I may tell my friends that I am already in communication with my constituted adviser, Dr. Bentley, the Sanitary Commissioner. I have asked him to work out a programme for three years, and the operations will be taken in hand and will be prosecuted from year to year, until we have completed it. I have asked him to consult the Sanitary Engineer on the subject. I hope, after our plans are ready, to place them before you and ask you to do something more than merely to discuss them. It will be my duty to invite you to vote money, because that is the cruz of the matter, and what I venture to assert is that, if Bengal is really to be released from the grip of malarial fever, it must be as the result of extensive operations over the whole province. A thousand here and a few thousands there and a lakh elsewhere will not do. You must have a comprehensive scheme of operations designed and carried out by your scientific experts; and, if you vote the necessary funds, I am sure that it will make Bengal what she once was—a land of peace, plenty and prosperity; and that is the ideal that I have before me. If you will give me your support and not make statements founded upon misapprehension and prejudice, something I hope will be done in that direction.

Then, Sir, my friend made a serious mistake when he said that only Rs. 15,000 had been provided in the Budget for charitable dispensaries in the mufassal. I find the same mistake repeated by my friend over there, Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, and by my friend, Mr. Tarit Bhusan Roy. There seems to be a comedy of errors enacted in this Council Chamber in connection with this matter. As a matter of fact, instead of Rs. 15,000, we have provided Rs. 2,88,000 in the Budget—there is a very considerable difference between Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 2,88,000. Then my friend, Mr. Tarit Bhusan Roy, has told us that the Budget provision for Public Health was only Rs. 3,29,000 besides Rs. 7,000 for anti-malarial operations. The figures in the Budget estimate for 1921-22 provide Rs. 19,46,000 for Public Health and not Rs. 3,29,000, but that is not all. This sum represents an increase of nearly Rs. 4,00,000 upon the Budget estimate of the current year, and Rs. 9,50,000 over the revised estimate of the present year. Therefore I claim that a considerable advance has been made in this matter, and whatever criticisms have been made must be regarded as baseless and unfounded. Something more has yet to be said. Mr. Tarit Bhusan Roy observed that only Rs. 7,000 has been provided in connection with malaria. He perhaps took the figure of the pay of the Deputy Commissioner for malarial research. What are the facts? We have provided Rs. 75,000 for quinine distribution, Rs. 20,000 for the reclamation of the Bhairab and Rs. 1,00,000 to be given to the Irrigation Department in connection with anti-malarial work. Even that is not all, Sir. Here I hold in my hand a statement which shows the works that we have undertaken. Large provision, too, has been made in the

Loans Budget for loans to enable various schemes in progress to be carried out:—

		Rs.
Arul Bhil	...	50,000
Amta	...	1,50,000
Jabuna	...	2,00,000
Nowie Sunti	...	2,00,000

in all Rs. 6,00,000.

My friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, for whom I have great respect as a man of facts and figures, and who delights in these things, has, in the exuberance of his zeal to criticise the Budget, indulged in an unusual performance. Babu Surendra Nath Ray complains that there is a large number of municipal water-supply and drainage schemes, for which no provision has been made, and he has referred to the scheme of water-supply in the riparian municipalities and to the extension of the Serampore, the Comilla and the Patuakhali water-works. May I tell him that the scheme for the supply of water to the riparian municipalities has been revived by me. When I entered office on the 3rd of January last, I enquired about this particular scheme, for the simple reason that I am personally interested in it. Patriotism is an expansion of the domestic affections; it all centres in the home, and from the home it radiates forth in all directions. Being an inhabitant of Barrackpore I am deeply interested in the scheme, and when I inquired what had become of it, I was told that it was dead. To this I said that I must revive it, it cannot and must not be dead. The scheme has been revived and correspondence is now going on, and possibly a meeting of the representatives of the riparian municipalities, south of the Palta water-works will soon be held. The real difficulty was this, that the Mill municipalities declined to have any part or share in it; they withdrew from the scheme, which, as I understand, they had promised to support. What I have suggested is to include all municipalities from Palta downwards to Cossipore-Chitpur. These are the lines on which we are now proceeding. Therefore my friend may rest assured that, so far as my department is concerned, everything will be done for the purpose of reviving the scheme into life. My friend's catalogue of mistakes does not end here. He has told us that only Rs. 60,000 was provided for municipal schemes in the Budget. My friend must have forgotten altogether the statement which the Municipal Department laid on the table in reply to a question asked by my friend, Rai Harendranath Chaudhuri, and that was only a few days ago, on the 21st February last.

Provision has been made for the following schemes—not Rs. 60,000, but several times Rs. 60,000, as you will find :—

	Rs.
Dacca Town sewerage	... 3,00,000
Comilla water-works	... 50,000
Naihati water-supply	... 10,000
Patuakhah water-supply	.. 5,000
Basirhat drainage	... 5,000
Chittagong drainage	... 75,000

In addition to this we have provided for loans to the amount of Rs. 4,69,000. Therefore, Sir, the statement of my friend that Rs. 60,000 has been provided for municipal schemes is wholly beside the mark.

My friend, Mr. Tarit Bhushan Roy, has told us that, while Rs. 1,90,000 was provided for water-supply in the towns, not a single pice has been given to the rural areas. My friend must have been oblivious of the history of the grants to the district boards which were made by the Imperial Government a few years ago. I was at that time a Member of the Imperial Legislative Council. The proceeds of the Public Works Cess, at that time amounting to Rs. 28,00,000 a year, were made over to the District Boards for the purpose of supplying drinking water. They have got that grant of Rs. 28,00,000 from the Imperial Government for the purpose of water-supply, and that grant of Rs. 28,00,000 has now risen to about Rs. 34,00,000. If they want more money, why don't they apply to us? Not a single case of such application has been received by Government, and if any is made to us, I can assure my friends that it will receive sympathetic consideration.

There are some other matters to which I desire to call attention. My friend, Mr. Amulya Dhone Addy, has observed that we should postpone the grant of Rs. 75,000 which we have made to the European Nursing Institution. I am sorry that my friend should have raised this question. I have carefully gone into the matter. It is a most useful institution, and it is very badly in need of funds. The Secretary saw me on the subject some time ago and asked me if I could raise the grant. This grant has been continued by Government for a period of ten years, and to postpone the grant would be to close down the institution. It is quite true that this is an institution for the training of European nurses. But the bulk to whom they minister are Indians. It is quite natural that we should like to employ Indian in preference to European nurses, but they have not yet got the requisite training, and we must in a matter of life and death employ the most efficient agency. About four-fifths of those who are benefited by the ministrations of European nurses are Indians. Thus we are benefited by them. The money is ours; let us spend it upon a beneficent purpose like this. It will redound to our credit. I think my friend will not put in any motion for the withdrawal of this grant; for, although it would be unpleasant for me to have to oppose it, I am sorry I shall have to do it. And akin to this question, is the complaint regarding Rs. 10,000 being given for furniture for the quarters of the European nurses. Now that we have got the quarters, without furniture they cannot be occupied. Are you going to keep them empty? I won't do it; you won't do it; nobody would do it. Therefore, as practical men, let us face the situation as we find it; here, again, the old point rises that the nurses, for whom you are going to provide this furniture, are persons who are employed for your benefit and for ministration to our suffering countrymen.

My friend, Rai Pyari Lal Doss Bahadur has invited us to establish a medical college at Dacca. I have the deepest sympathy with this object. But I have an appeal to make to him; he appeals to me, might I return the compliment by an appeal to him? We are soon going to have the Dacca University; the Dacca University is an institution equipped with a Medical Faculty. I have not the slightest doubt that, if there is need for such a college, the University will try to start it. And I think it would very much facilitate matters, and it would go far to bring about the realisation of my friend's idea, if he were to offer a handsome donation to the University of Dacca for the purpose of establishing a medical college there. I am perfectly certain that it would be a spur and an incentive to the University, which would go a long way towards the fulfilment of his wishes, and if funds are locally raised and an application, is made to Government, Government will sympathetically consider the matter.

Let me now turn for a moment to a similar application made by my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, in respect of a medical school at Chittagong. In this connection, I desire to say that is a part of the policy of Government to add to the number of medical schools in the mufassal as far as practicable. We heard the other day that there was only one qualified medical man to serve 42,000 of our population. This is a grievance—a serious grievance—and I am tempted to use very strong language, which would not perhaps befit my position as Minister. In any case, this state of things should be remedied, and Government will do its best, if you co-operate in the removal of this great want. I appeal to my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, to raise funds locally. There was a talk about this matter in July last between the local leaders and the Surgeon-General, and funds were promised. What has become of the promise? If you can show that there is a local feeling—and the money-test is the true test of all sincerity—if you can give us money, Government will be convinced that you are really earnest in the matter, and Government will contribute towards the fulfilment of the object which the people and the Government have so much at heart. Maulvi Yakuinuddin Ahmed has also made a proposal of the same kind. He suggests that more students should be admitted to the Calcutta Medical College. This College is at present far too crowded; I think there are about 1,100 to 1,200 students; there is no room there; there is no hospital accommodation suitable to the proposed enlargement of the College. He makes this suggestion in order to minimise the provincial deficit, and indeed he has a sort of idea that the provincial deficit might be wiped out by the influx of a huge crowd of students joining the college. But immediately afterwards, with a strange forgetfulness, my friend wants them to be admitted free; the students who will pay fees for wiping out the provincial deficit are to be admitted free into the Medical College! I am afraid I must confess my inability to follow my friend through the labyrinthine mazes of a reasoning which lead to a conclusion of this kind!

Well, Sir, I have now another matter to refer to. There is a proposal brought by the Maharaja of Nadia; he asks the Government to bear the whole cost of the drainage of Krishnagar. I feel great concern for the people of Krishnagar, and for more reasons than one. At one time Krishnagar was a sanitarium, and Warren Hastings built a house there and would visit it for a change. It was a sanitarium in the days of my youth. It is now stricken down with malaria; it is now a deserted place, full of wild jungle, covered with dilapidated houses, with the people running about hither and thither to escape from the scourge of malaria! Any attempt to restore to Krishnagar something of its former salubrity must evoke the sympathy of every right-minded man and of the Government. But, Sir, Government is circumscribed by the limitations of finance. We made a large grant to Krishnagar for the purpose of its water-supply and have advanced a loan also; we could not provide the whole cost. Here again, I must appeal to local patriotism, and tell the local people that if they would raise funds, we are prepared to consider their application sympathetically. There is Babu Nuffer Das Pal Chaudhuri who offered at one time Rs. 5,00,000 for some public object. Why should he not come forward again? There are other rich men who might help with similar grants. I am certain that, if they come to Government, Government will consider their application.

Sir, one word more and I am done. I am sorry to have to refer to a matter which my esteemed friend, Mr. Surendra Nath Mullick, alluded to the other day. I am sorry that in this Council Chamber issues should be raised which, I think, should be buried in oblivion. We are here, representatives of the Indian community, representatives of the European community, we are here, Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians, for one common object. We are here to combine, to co-operate, to act together in order to make this great experiment the success that it deserves to be. The future of India depends on the successful working of this experiment and, if you wish to co-operate, if you wish to make the experiment a success, let there be no friction, no irritation, no cause of controversy. Let us make this Council Chamber the temple of concord, of unity, and of brotherly love. We have to forget and forgive many things. Let us forget and forgive. Let us blot out the past in the hope of the great future that is before us. I appeal to my friends, and I think I am entitled to advise them, having regard to my age and my long career of public service, I think I am entitled to advise my friends to adopt the policy which I have ventured to suggest. Sir, my friend was very despondent having regard to the character of the Budget. What are Reforms worth with a Budget of this kind?—said he. Well, Sir, is it not too early to despair? We have just got the beginnings of responsible government, and now at the first shock of disappointment we are so disconcerted that we throw up our hands and say that we do not want them. Is this a frame of mind that would qualify you for self-government? We have heard a great deal about nation-building. Read the constitutional history of other countries. Note the disappointments, the trials and tribulations through which they had to pass, before they secured the great boon of freedom, for which they yearned. That should be a lesson to us. Let us not forget the traditions of courage, patience and fortitude which are the heritage of our race. The Budget is indeed disappointing. But let me tell my friends that it is not the last of your disappointments. You will have many more, many trials and tribulations of this kind, before you will have crossed the desert and entered the land of promise. Bear in mind that with the growth and development of the qualities of courage, patience and self-restraint the dark clouds that now frown on the horizon will pass away, and a bright and splendid day will dawn upon this great and ancient land.

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): When I joined this Government I did so with my eyes open and I am, therefore, bound to accept my share of the legacy left by the old Government. I have listened very carefully to the debate on this Budget, and I cannot help feeling that the trend of the whole discussion has been that one section of the Government has not got enough money and that the reserved section of the Government has in this respect treated the transferred section very badly. But I venture to submit to this House that, if they carefully examine the Budget, item by item, they will find that even in our section of the Government there are only items which are absolutely necessary. There was considerable criticism levelled at the way the Budget has been divided into "non-voted" and "voted." So far as my department is concerned the members will find that in the Administration of justice, the non-voted amount is Rs. 26,17,000, while the voted is Rs. 1,14,40,000, and for the Jails the non-voted is Rs. 1,83,000 and the voted as much as Rs. 40,05,000. That I submit, Sir, is a very strong proof of the extent to which confidence has been reposed by the new scheme of Reforms in this Council, and therefore, the Government will naturally expect that in return the members will repose similar confidence in the Government. The powers that are entrusted to the Council are very considerable, and, if the members were so inclined, they could paralyse the Government much more effectively than any non-co-operationists. But I am perfectly sure, although we have listened to good many very trenchant criticisms, that the House will, when it comes to the voting of grants, act prudently, discreetly and reasonably. So far as my department is concerned and also the other departments belonging to this section of the Government, I am afraid some of the speakers have treated these departments in a somewhat step-motherly fashion. Some departments are very happily described as nation-building departments. I do not quarrel with this. But if education, for instance, is a nation-building department, I venture to describe my departments, namely, the Administration of justice, as "nation-preserving departments." I always thought that, so far as the courts of law were concerned, they enjoyed a great deal of the respect of the people of this province. I might almost say their affections. Am I to believe that there has been a change of attitude in this respect? I can hardly believe that. The Council must remember that this is a department which is indispensable to good Government. What is the scope, for instance, of the Judicial Department? It properly includes not only the courts of law, but also the Police Department, because without the police the courts cannot enforce law and order in the country. As a corollary of these, unfortunately, we must have jails. These are really primary departments and I am sure, when it comes to the voting of grants, this Council will treat them with the greatest consideration, for any tampering with any of these departments will be disastrous to the administration of the country.

So far as the administration of justice is concerned, I shall ask you to remember that, when you are levelling your criticism on the working of this department, you are dealing mainly with the High Court. It is the High Court that is really in direct charge of the administration and supervision of justice in this province. The learned Judges, who are administering justice and supervising the administration of justice throughout the province, are in the best position, therefore, to judge of the wants and needs of the department. No member of the House can for one moment think that the High Court does not know what is wanted in the establishments of the courts. I am sure the Council will not doubt for a moment that the High Court keeps a vigilant eye on the lower courts, and sees that they do their work properly, and that they work as they are expected to do for the full time. I know from my experience of this province and also other provinces, that for a considerable time litigation has been constantly increasing in the country and for the last two or three years there has been a considerable increase in litigation in this province. I was not at all surprised, therefore, when I met with a demand from the High Court for a considerable strengthening of the subordinate judiciary. They wanted as many as forty Munsifs and five subordinate Judges and a number of Additional District and Sessions Judges, and the figures that they supplied showed amply that that demand was justified. I heard one speaker take objection to the addition of Munsifs. I must admit frankly to this Council that I was more than surprised at this criticism. The Munsifs, as every one is aware, are a very hard-worked body, and any relief that could be given to them, should I think, appeal to the sympathies of this Council. What we have done in this Budget is to provide for 20 additional Munsifs and three Subordinate Judges and some Additional District and Sessions Judges. This provision the High Court will probably not consider as wholly adequate, but everyone tried to cut down his demand in these times of financial stringency and my department also had to curtail its full demands.

Then, as we all know, for a long time there has been a cry from all quarters for the increase of pay of the Subordinate Judicial Service. It is not only the officers themselves that have been asking for more pay, but in their demand they have had the sympathy of the entire province. The greater portion of the increase in the Budget for the Administration of Justice is due to the increase of pay that we have been obliged to give to the Provincial Judicial Service.

Then, in the course of the debate, complaint was made of a Paper Book Department that has been recently established by the High Court. That after all is not a very big item; it is a small item in this year's Budget, about Rs. 50,000 and in the ensuing year we have budgeted for Rs. 1,30,000. The whole scheme is still under consideration, and it is possible that some items of the anticipated expenditure might be curtailed, but we ought to take it that the High Court found itself compelled by circumstances to establish this department. As many of the members may be aware, the High Court has always required that paper books should be printed not only for second appeals, but for the first appeals or regular appeals. The paper books for second appeals were printed under the supervision of the High Court itself, but so far as the first appeals are concerned they were printed by junior vakils. The Privy Council in several judgments complained of the way in which some of the paper books in the appeals from the judgments of the High Court had been prepared. They also complained a great deal about the delay that there has been in the appeals being heard, so much so, that they went to the extent of laying down with reference to appeals to the Privy Council (all appeals, which go to the Privy Council, have to be of the value of more than Rs. 10,000), that the paper books must be prepared and printed under the supervision of the High Court. That order the High Court was bound to carry out. So far as the appeals below Rs. 10,000 are concerned, the Privy Council, as a rule, are not concerned with them, but, as a lawyer member of this Council said, even in cases below Rs. 10,000 appeals may be preferred to the Privy Council either by consolidation of a number of appeals, or by special leave. The High Court found it impracticable to have two sets of rules, one for the preparation of paper books for appeals above Rs. 10,000 and another set for appeals below Rs. 10,000. In their opinion such separate arrangements would be rather difficult to work. The learned Judges found it very difficult to deal properly with the appeals, heard by them, having regard to the way in which the paper books had been prepared. As everybody knows, the cost of printing has gone up very considerably lately, the cost of materials has gone up and the cost of labour has also gone up, and it is therefore becoming more and more difficult for junior pleaders with limited means to do their work efficiently in preparing the paper books. What has been the result? A great number of these paper books caused great difficulty to the learned Judges in following the case, and therefore, for the efficiency of business, they found themselves compelled to change the system and to take away the preparation of the paper books from the hands of the junior pleaders. I fully realise that this rule has caused hardship to several pleaders, who depended, to some extent at least, on the small income they derived from the preparation of these books. No doubt every one will have sympathy with the struggling junior pleaders, and I need hardly assure the House that, having myself gone through a similar experience in the profession, I sympathise with them very considerably. But the House will have to look at a question of this sort from a much larger point of view, not from the point of view of individuals but from the point of view of the efficiency of the administration. Anybody who is concerned with the methods of legal business, must know that, if the record is not properly prepared, that there would be a considerable risk of miscarriage of justice. The Judges have, therefore, to be very careful in seeing that the record is properly prepared, and, surely it is the duty of the High Court Judges, if they find that the records that they have to deal with, were not properly prepared, if they find difficulty in following that record, surely it is their duty to change the procedure in order to ensure that there should be as little risk of miscarriage of justice as possible.

Sir, something was also said about the cost of the administration of justice. I have had considerable experience of the administration of justice in this country for the last 30 years, both in the profession as well as on the Bench, and I quite agree that the administration of justice under the present system is very costly, but it must be remembered that the cost to the litigant is not so much on account of the court fees levied by the Government. I myself belong to the legal profession, and I should be the last person to say one word against it, but it cannot be denied that the cost to the litigants in the shape of fees which they have to pay to pleaders and barristers is much higher than the amount of court fees payable by them.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE [LAND REVENUE] (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan):

It is only six weeks ago, or a little more than that, that I had to deal with some of the departments which have now received the nomenclature of "nation-building" and "nation-preserving" departments. Considering the rather warm welcome that these departments have received in the way of criticism, I am perhaps not quite so sorry that I am not at the present moment in charge of them. The departments which I have to defend, if I may also give a name to them, may be called the "nation-feeding" departments, for without revenue, I do not suppose the Finance Member himself could very well introduce a budget, and therefore it is somewhat surprising that a certain amount of criticism should have been levelled at some of the provisions made in the Budget for bringing in more revenue for the members of this Council to play with for the different projects of the several departments in which they are mainly interested. I shall now deal with some of the points which have been raised by certain members of this Council.

First of all Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur gave us a word of advice about the development of the forest revenues. I may point out to him that the Budget, so far as it relates to the provisions under the head Forests, is always made with an eye towards getting more money into the exchequer, and, if the hon'ble member, who made the suggestion that the department concerned should have an eye towards the development of forests, were to examine some of the items which we have included in the Budget, he would find that they are all practically items which will bring in revenue in some shape or other. To give an example there is a provision for Rs. 38,000 for the completion of working plans in Chittagong. The work was started in 1918 and was nearly completed in 1920-21, but owing to certain difficulties—one of them being the resignation of the officer in charge and the general shortage of officers in the Forest Department—it could not be completed, and it is necessary that the work should be completed next year. It is a remunerative work—the extraction of timber in the Chittagong Hill Tracts, and as such, I am sure will be welcomed by this Council. If we took at the provision of half a lakh for the khedda operations in the Chittagong Tracts, it will be at once apparent to the members of this Council that this is a remunerative work. I shall not, therefore, trouble the Council any further with regard to the provisions made in the Budget so far as the head Forests is concerned, for I am sure everyone realises that provisions are made with the main object of bringing in more revenue to the Government.

I shall now have to speak at some length on a subject which has received a certain amount of criticism from some of the members of this Council, and particularly from Kumar Shib Shekhareswar Ray, regarding the provisions that have been made in the Land Revenue Budget in connection with survey and settlement operations in Bengal. The Kumar Sahib has not only suggested a considerable reduction, but has gone the length of criticising the very utility of the record-of-rights which are prepared so laboriously by the Settlement staff, and to quote his own words, he considers the expenditure on this work as so much waste of money. The sheet anchor of his criticism is that there is an absence of an agency to maintain the records, on the preparation of which so much labour and money are expended. Well, I do not propose to go into this question at very great length. On the other hand, it is a matter of considerable importance, and with an eye on the clock, I shall try to convince the members of this Council of the necessity of the provisions which we have made in the Budget this year.

A maintenance scheme, particularly in a province, where owing to the permanent settlement a complicated system of land tenure exists, is bound to be expensive, and anything which requires the levy of any cost, however justifiable it may be on principle, is bound to evoke a certain amount of criticism. Government had to face this experience in Bakarganj, where the landlords strongly opposed the concrete scheme formulated by Sir Nicholas Beatson Bell. I may say that the District Administration Committee had examined the pros and cons of the subject by comparing conditions in Bengal with those obtaining in the United Provinces and the Central Provinces, where the land records system also exists. It was recognised that in Bengal the system would be considered to be exotic both by landlords and tenants; in Bengal a civil court would not attach to the record-of-rights the same degree of validity which the revenue officers would give to the same documents in the United Provinces and the Central Provinces in spite of some of their imperfections. The verdict of the committee was that the continuous maintenance of a record-of-rights in Bengal of the nature which the Kumar has advocated, would not only involve an expense out of all proportion to what suffices for the Land Records Department in the other provinces, but the total cost, in itself, would be quite disproportionate to the small land revenue paid in Bengal. Therefore, the Kumar will see for himself, if Government did seriously consider having machinery of a permanent nature for maintaining the record-of-rights, and keeping that record up to date, whether those for whom he has advocated it, would themselves welcome it.

Of course, the Kumar has made a certain suggestion; at least, he has expressed a hope that the circle system, which is now being introduced and developed as an integral part of the village organization, may in time afford the basis of an effective staff for the maintenance of records. I quite admit the value and importance of the maintenance of records, and do not belittle it, because the map records are of enormous advantage to the administration, and greatly facilitate the working of the civil courts. The tenants themselves receive inestimable advantages in their lands and rents being authoritatively certified, and the stability of the rent which has been assured to them. The landlords also receive substantial advantages from such official records of fields and rents, which are not only of service to them where they are strong, but are also an insurance for the future, when the cultivators may become more conscious of their strength. The records enable the landlords to obtain increased rent for excess areas held by tenants and to identify lands held rent-free. I may say that the idea of the record-of-rights being maintained is not at all new; it is a well-known fact that it was recommended so long ago as 1789 in the famous minute of Sir John Shore, which has since become a historic document. The provisions of that minute were not accepted, and the revenue was fixed for ever, without any precise record having been made of the reciprocal relations of the zamindars and tenants. I do not propose to go into the history of what happened at a later stage regarding this question.

I shall now turn to some of the points of the Kumar with regard to what he said, that the estimates went up by leaps and bounds at the time of Sir Nicholas Beatson Bell, and were very much reduced in two years during the time of Sir John Cummung, and he has also expressed a disappointment that since I came in, being a big zamindar myself, by a magical wand, I could not at once reduce the settlement operations to nothing. I shall explain to him why that was not possible. In the first place, let us look at the programme. Let us first of all consider what has been the programme in pursuance of this policy which necessitated survey and settlement operations being taken up in some of the Bihar districts, and in Bakarganj in Lower Bengal, because it started from 1903. A regular programme was drawn up in 1903 for the whole of Bengal, Bihar and Chota Nagpur, and according to this, the work in the province, as then constituted, was to have been completed in 1927-28. After the readjustment of territories in 1912 a fresh programme had to be drawn up in 1915, according to which survey and settlement operations were to be completed in the whole of Bengal in 1931-32. This contemplated the employment of four traverse parties, followed by four cadastral survey and settlement parties, but owing to financial stringency during the war, it was not possible to keep pace with the programme. The four-party basis had to be reduced to a three-party basis, with the result that the operations were delayed in several districts by three years. The programme covers an area of nearly 66,000 square miles, in 33,000 and odd square miles of which the work has now been completed: The record-of-rights is in preparation in 5,440 square miles, and 26,000 and odd square miles still remain to be taken up. The work has been completed in Chittagong, Tippera and Noakhali, Dacca, Bakarganj, Faridpur and Mymensingh, Jalpaiguri, Rajshahi and Midnapore. It is going on in Jessore, Nadia, Bankura, Pabna and Bogra. It is proposed to take up the work of preparation of record-of-rights in Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum, where traverse survey work has already commenced on a four-party basis. The Kumar has suggested a reduction of the allotment for survey and settlement to something like Rs. 16,00,000. I wish it were possible to do so without causing a serious dislocation of arrangements previously made. At the outset what would be our difficulty? It would mean the disbandment of a large staff of officers whom it has taken a number of years to train for the work they are now doing. Such an action would be subversive of all business methods; for once they are discharged, it would be difficult to collect them again. It would be very bad economy from a business point of view. Although the party may be discharged, the retention of other things cannot be dispensed with. Houses, steamers and tents will have to be retained, and the cost incidental to them will necessarily rise during the period of reduced or no work. A suspension of operations would also lead to the record already in preparation getting out of date. Disputes taken up, but left undecided, would lead to serious rioting. The work of traverse survey, if once discontinued in areas, where it has already started, would have to be re-done next time, and this cannot but considerably raise the ultimate cost.

The Kumar seems to be under an impression that the Settlement Budget can be manipulated by the Member in charge according to his own sweet will and pleasure, for he has said that in Sir Nicholas Beatson Bell's time the Budget figures rose to Rs. 27,00,000 and in Sir John Cumming's time it again fell to Rs. 10,00,000 or Rs. 15,00,000. Accordingly he expected me to reduce it to Rs. 16,00,000. Apart from the fact that his statements about the past estimates are not accurate, his impression that these are arbitrarily evolved, is also wrong. In 1912-13 the estimates amounted to Rs. 20,00,000, and in 1913-14 to over Rs. 23,00,000. In 1917-18 (during the time of Sir John Cumming) the estimates were Rs. 21,00,000, and for 1918-19, Rs. 22,00,000.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: What are the actual expenses please?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I have not got the figures here. These estimates have always been based on actual requirements. It has also already been made clear that no curtailment of the programme, for which provision has been made in the Budget, is possible, without causing serious inconvenience; as a matter of fact, when we framed the Budget we had to sacrifice Rs. 2,00,000 for general retrenchment, and the provision that we have made is, to our mind, the minimum we could go on with.

Then, again, as I have already observed, delay is also bad from the point of view of landlords and tenants, for it will cause the work to be spread over a number of years, which will ultimately raise the cost to be borne by the interested parties. Moreover, even in case of the work being carried on on a two-party basis, the control charges in the shape of the pay of superior officers, like the Director of Surveys and the Director of Land Records, and of their office establishments, will only become very heavy. There is another point of view of no mean importance, from which it is very necessary that the settlement of the rovince should not be further delayed, and that is this—the Kumar and other members in this Council who are interested, would do well to remember the non-zamindar element in this House, who are interested in the question of the early amendment of some of the sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act, particularly those relating to occupancy rights. Only a few days ago, a member of this Council wanted to bring in a bill with regard to this, and when I gave him a personal assurance that his matter was under the consideration of Government and would not be taken up until we had received the Settlement Report from at least one district in each Division, he decided to wait. In this connection it must also be remembered that the Government will have eventually, when the operations are completed, to consider carefully as to whether or not the time has now arrived for another rent law commission. For all these reasons I do not think it would be advisable at all in any way to curtail survey operations; only, as I have said, we have had to provide, owing to the paucity of funds, less than we really wanted in next year's Budget, and Government cannot possibly take up the general question of the amendment of the Tenancy Act until the reports from at least one district in every Division have been received, so that the different aspects of the question can be examined from a broader point of view.

All these circumstances would, I hope convince the Council of the unwisdom of exercising any economy so far as the Settlement Budget is concerned.

I do not think, Sir, that it would do any good my going further into this point. While I sympathise with the Kumar about the increased cost, which the landlords have to pay, I may say I am a big zamindar myself, and have had to bear a very heavy cost this year, and therefore that, in a matter of this kind, we have to sink our personal inconveniences, and I hope the members of this Council will realise that it is a question of general importance, and that Government rely on the good results of these survey and settlement operations. In these circumstances it would be unwise to hamper the work by curtailing the expenditure on it, when there are important matters relating to the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act already long overdue.

It is now time for the magreb prayer. I shall continue my remarks after the adjournment.

The Council here adjourned for 15 minutes.

The Council reassembled after adjournment.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The other matters relating to my department, which have come in for criticism, are few, and the main subject which has been largely criticised is the Grand Trunk Canal project. Before I go into the Grand Trunk Canal project, I shall answer very briefly to the other gentlemen who discussed matters relating to my department. The two gentlemen from Dacca suggested the improvement of the Dolai Khal. To them my reply is that an answer was given to a question put by Rai Pyari Lal Doss Bahadur on the 7th February last and I have got nothing further to add to it. The scheme is certainly under the consideration of the Government but owing to the lack of funds as also of officers in the Irrigation Department, we cannot guarantee that the scheme will mature at an early date, and in consequence we cannot advocate any funds being allocated for it.

Babu Nalini Nath Roy made some remarks with regard to the Madaripur Bil route work and I think that his main objection was not so much as to whether the Madaripur Bil route work was a good one or not, but he objected to the Bil route work as well as to the Grand Trunk Canal, because he thought that projects with regard to anti-malarial operations should be given preference to these.

Then, regarding the Madaripur Bil work, Babu Bhishmadev Das has criticised that the Bil project is unable to afford protection to the crops on the right bank and also wants the silt-clearing of a channel from Faridpur to Sripur and wishes that the whole length from Sripur to Tentulia be silt-cleared for navigation. This scheme, I should like to point out, should be investigated by his own district board and it is a matter which the Irrigation Department cannot take up until the local self-government are convinced of its necessity as an anti-malarial project or otherwise.

Then, Maharaja Kshaunish Chandra Roy Bahadur of Nadia, wanted to know what we had done with regard to the Anjana scheme. This scheme has been submitted by the local officers and is now under the consideration of Government. The fact, however, is that owing to dearth of officers no headway is possible, at the present moment. The Sanitary Drainage Division Engineer has got enough to do with the works in progress in his hands; but if the situation improves, it may be possible to make a beginning after the rains of 1921, when the preliminaries could be started and, by the end of 1921-22, money could perhaps be found from unforeseen savings from other items. But, at present, on behalf, of Government, I am unable to provide any money for it or to give a definite promise that it will be taken up during the year to come.

Then, Raja Maniloll Singh Roy of Chakdighi, has raised the question of the Rankinidaha. Here, again, the scheme is being investigated. Surveys were made last year of the Gheanadi, a proposed junction cut between the Kananadi and the Gheanadi, and surveys of the areas north and south of the Rankinidaha appear to be necessary; and these have also been taken in hand. The scheme will be prepared after the present surveys are completed; and, if it is then found feasible to work out a proper scheme, there will be ample time to consider whether any provision should be made in the Budget for 1922-23. For the present, the scheme is not ripe, and as such the Raja could not expect us to provide for the project.

Then, a gentleman from Noakhali, Munshi Makramah—I am sorry that he is not here—suggested the closing of the Muntergum Khal, which joins on with the Noakhali river, and the silt cleared of a certain length of this channel. Government have no information in the Irrigation Department on this question; and in any case this question appears to be one of local importance, which Government cannot take up at present but will no doubt have the question looked into.

Two other gentlemen criticised matters relating to my department. One was, I think, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, who criticised the provision made for the resumption of lands at Kalimpong. Regarding that, I may point out that the matter has been thoroughly gone into, and it is proposed that the development of Kalimpong might be gone ahead with. I have already had a discussion on the subject with Mr. Lees, the Member of the Board of Revenue, who will have to go into the whole question again this year; but that does not in any way lessen the responsibility of Government or in any way make it possible for Government to cut out this provision for the resumption of lands, because already we have given notice to a large number of tenants there, who are just cutting their crops and who will have to vacate their lands which have been settled with other parties before the next cold weather comes in.

Then, we had a criticism by Babu Jogesh Chandra Sarkar, with regard to the Government allowing some arable lands in the western Duars being converted into tea. He also complained of the restrictions with regard to the present method of settlement which causes a certain amount of heartburning. This, again, is a matter which the Board of Revenue will have look into; and all that I can promise Babu Jogesh Chandra Sarkar is that Government will look into the matter in due course.

Having finished these replies to the criticisms made, I shall now come to the other big project, viz., the Grand Trunk Canal, which relates to the Irrigation Department, which is under me.

Regarding this project, the outlay on waterways, which consists of the expenditure on the Grand Trunk Canal work and purchase of dredgers, has been criticised by a good number of the members. Mr. Eifan Ali, Babu Amulya Dhone Addy, Mr. Nasim Ali, and several others advocate omitting the provision of Rs. 70,00,000 during 1921-22. Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur and Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta also want that this work should not be taken up before the question of the work being reproductive is fully investigated, particularly in view of the fact that fresh loans may have to be floated at a higher rate of interest. The Grand Trunk Canal project, as is well known to many of the members of the Council, is intended to afford a navigable connection between the river Hooghly and the series of tidal rivers which will connect Calcutta with the eastern districts of Bengal. The present canal connection, namely, the Circular and Krishtopur Canals, can be used only by the small country boat traffic; and the Grand Trunk Canal is intended to allow inland steam-vessels to use this shorter route. It is perhaps not known to many members that the system of cross-channels between the Hooghly river and the Multa is dying, and the channel next to the Hooghly, known as the Doagra channel, is in such a condition that it has been kept open by periodical dredging, over the length that is in the worst condition. The longer length is now threatened to be in the same condition, and the alternative system of channels between the Hooghly and the Suptamukhi creek is also deteriorating fast. In view of this, it is necessary that we should have the Grand Trunk Canal connection as early as possible so as to avoid a complete dislocation of the steamer traffic between Calcutta and the Eastern districts eventually. This Grand Canal project was worked out in 1914 by Mr. Lees on a different alignment. Since then, the project has been very carefully scrutinised and alternatives examined by several Chief Engineers and Inspectors-General of Irrigation the outcome of which is the project in its present shape which is estimated to cost Rs. 3,09,00,000, inclusive of indirect charges. It has been asked why this work has been termed as a productive work. The conditions relating to a productive public work are given in paragraph 393 of the Public Works Code, 10th Edition, and runs as follows:—

(a) There must be good reason to believe that the revenue derived from it will, within 10 years after the probable date of its completion, repay annual interest on the capital invested, calculated at 5 per cent, but in preparing the project for sanction no deduction is to be made from the total capital outlay on account of anticipated excess of revenue over simple interest.

(b) It must be susceptible of having clear capital and revenue accounts of it kept.

(c) Its classification as a productive public work must be authorised by competent authority.

In the estimate of the work, as revised by the Inspector-General of Irrigation and subsequently sanctioned by the Secretary of State, it is shown that the net revenue expected from the project, 10 years after the opening of the canal, is Rs. 22,74,000, which represents a return of 7.4 per cent. on capital outlay of Rs. 3,09,00,000. The work has accordingly been admitted as a productive work by the Secretary of State. The above anticipated revenue is based on a toll receipt of Rs. 2 per hundred maunds, which was accepted by the Chamber of Commerce in 1916; and it is not unreasonable to assume that at the present value of money Rs. 2.8 can now be levied.

It has been suggested by some members that the estimate will require revision.

This is more than likely as the land value has gone up since the estimate was prepared, and that the labourers' wages and cost of material have also undergone a change, cannot be denied, but the figures for revised estimates cannot be arrived at without an investigation of the details. The information given above, that the receipts calculated on the basis of Rs. 2 per hundred maunds can be raised to Rs. 2.8 indicates that the present estimate will be exceeded by 30 per cent, yielding the same rate of interest, if the toll charges are raised as above.

The question, however, is one of the utmost importance in view of the fact that the cross-channel connection from the Hooghly is dying, threatening to cut out the link between Calcutta and the channels to the eastern districts, and that an alternative connection should be provided with Calcutta in good time.

The work received the sanction of the Secretary of State on the 19th May last, Rs. 21,00,000 has been allotted for expenditure during the current year; out of which Rs. 13.3 lakhs has been paid for a part of the cost of dredgers during the current year and the balance of Rs. 7.7 lakhs, is for land and works. The value of land required for starting the work is a little over Rs. 16,00,000; part of this expenditure, namely, about Rs. 6,50,000, will be paid this year, and the balance of nearly Rs. 10,00,000 is therefore an obligatory charge next year. The manufacture of bricks also will take up about Rs. 5,00,000 this year; for next year the outlay on work will depend on further funds that may be made available later on.

As regards the grant of Rs. 70,00,000 for next year, this includes the cost of dredgers already on order and under construction in England. The total cost of the dredgers is £7,85,000. This figure was originally calculated at Rs. 10 to the £; unfortunately the exchange has since then undergone a very unfavourable turn, and for the next year I do not think we will be justified in working out the figures in Indian currency on a more favourable rate than 1s. 6d. to the rupee, that is Rs. 106. Part of this payment can possibly be deferred to 1922-23, but it is anticipated that at least Rs. 62,00,000 will be required next year for meeting the cost of the dredgers which are already under construction. This leaves only Rs. 8,00,000 for meeting the cost of land, works and establishment. As I have said above, the balance of the land, for which immediate provision is wanted, will go up to over Rs. 8,00,000 for the next year, so that Rs. 70,00,000, as provided, will be insufficient for the most urgent charges; and as at least one of the dredgers is expected to come out in the next cold weather and, under the terms of the contract, six months' trial of the work in India is guaranteed by the manufacturers, it would be necessary that provision should remain for working this dredger for four months during 1921-22. It will, therefore, be seen that the amount provided cannot be reduced, and we should attempt later on to find further funds by fresh loan either floated by the local Government or advances made from the Imperial Government.

I hope I have convinced the Council as to the need of this Grand Trunk Canal project, not only because it is going to be a productive work eventually, but also that we have already started the work and we have committed ourselves to a very large amount owing to the purchase of dredgers.

Well, Sir, before I conclude, I should like to make a few general observations with regard to certain criticisms that have been made and among which some will, I am sure, be met by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, which relate to certain European schools in the excluded areas. I would like to point out that, having been in charge of the Education portfolio for 2½ years, I am convinced that the amounts that have been provided in the Budget for European education, regarding which certain objections and strong criticisms have been made by some members of this Council, are not only absolutely justifiable, but that was the least amount we could provide. As regards Kalimpong, I would like to request some members of this Council to visit the place, to visit the Colonial Homes, for then they would have an opportunity of seeing with their own eyes the great spirit of Christian charity that alone has built up such a work of philanthropy and social reform, and, after visiting the place, I am sure that they would realise what the bands of workers for the Kalimpong Homes have up to now done for themselves and that they deserve every encouragement at the hands of this Government.

Now, as regards some of the other criticisms made, I should like as one of the oldest members of the Bengal Council—for I think I have a right to claim that as I have been for 14 years in the Bengal Council—that just now in this new Council there should be more than ever a spirit of catholicity among the Indian members of the Council, and for the simple reason that the Indian members of the Council rightly and justly predominate here. The Indian members of the Council can do what they like with the fate of individual grants, that have been provided for in the Budget, and it is absolutely essential therefore to consider their motions as dispassionately as is possible, especially so when we realise that Indians have got a predominating voice in this Council, and that we can so exercise the powers that have been given to us under this constitution that we can inconvenience others if we take to the spirit of obstruction. It is, therefore, all the more necessary for us to use our discretion and judgment as carefully and with as much catholicity as is possible in us to do. Moreover I would like to point out that it is in the hands of us—Indian Members—to preserve the dignity of the new Council, and whilst as we do here speaking in what is certainly not our mother-tongue we may indulge in the eloquence of a Burke or Macaulay or the words of a Mill or Fawcett which may enable us to speak in flowery language and in impressive phrases, we should know that we have been given powers which can either make or mar. We have been given certain powers, which we had not possessed before, and in our deliberations therefore we should not overlook some of the qualities which are inborn in us and which are our birthright, and I cannot better explain them than by quoting the famous Vartuhari. His quatrain refers to sanyasi, it is true, but it can be equally applied to all, and especially to Hindus, and more particularly to us here, when we are going to build up in our own way the thoughts of the nation in these Councils in which we have a predominating voice. Vartuhari says:

A yogi's father is his patience, mother forbearance, his wife peace, his son truth, his sister mercy and his brother restraint of the mind. The earth is his bed, the quarters are his raiment and knowledge is his food! With these as his kindred, tell me, friend, need a yogi fear anybody?

Only I would substitute the phrase "an Indian" for "a yogi."

As Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea has stated, it is essential that in these discussions we should not only purge every feeling of a kind which might be misconstrued into a racial feeling, but we should consider that the power we have in us should be utilised for our mutual benefit. So far as my department is concerned, I have mentioned to you what are the requirements.

Well, Sir, so much for the general considerations connected with those departments. I am sure the Ministers have spoken to the best of their abilities upon the points connected with their departments. But what do I want, as an Indian, and as having been in the Council with the Government for some years now is to strongly appeal to the members that in these matters they should realise the importance of the powers that they have got and use them prudently and wisely.

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): At this late hour of night I propose to confine my remarks as closely as possible to the departments with which I am connected. But as having been largely responsible for the Budget of the province for the preceding three years, and indeed for this one also up to the 3rd January last, it may perhaps be permitted to me to preface my remarks with some comments of a general character which, I promise, will be brief.

The whole procedure connected with this Budget and this Budget discussion has, of course, been one of novelty—as is evidenced by the recurrence in the papers of such new words as "reserved" and "transferred," "voted" and "non-voted" and the subject has been a complicated one, not only to the officials of the Finance Department and to the older members of the Council, but still more so to those who have quite recently joined it. It is, therefore, not surprising that misunderstandings and misconceptions may have arisen in connection with the Budget. But one of the most curious misconceptions, which is doubtless entirely unintentional, though one which may have regrettable results, is that which underlies the arguments of which we have heard so much during the last three days, namely that, because on an arithmetical calculation it works out that the reserved subjects account for 65 per cent. and the transferred subjects 35 per cent., of the total expenditure, therefore the whole object of the Reforms has been intentionally frustrated and turned to nothing. That Sir, as I have said, is a misconception. The Reforms were never framed upon a financial basis. Those who were responsible for the Reforms did not begin by saying: "We will divide the expenditure of each province into half-and-half, or two-thirds and one-third, or any arbitrary proportion." On the contrary they made a division, which has since been known as "dyarchy," on the basis of functions, and when that division is criticised by an arithmetical standard, the whole scheme of Reforms is being criticised by a criterion which is non-existent. Not only is it non-existent, but the comparison is singularly misleading because, whatever words we may invent to designate subjects—we may call them reserved subjects or transferred subjects or what not—the fact remains that the reserved subjects are those, upon which, very largely, the whole structure of Government rests, and that they are of as equal importance to those in charge of the transferred subjects, as to the members of the Executive Council and, indeed, to all members of the Legislative Council, who presumably have come here to view the Government of the province as a whole, and to assist in the task of improving the administration as a whole. I would therefore deprecate, Sir, the tendency to view the question of finance as one of distinct sides. The administration is one, and, as one, it is of equal interest and importance to us all. It is therefore, incumbent upon us all to see how best the funds at the disposal of the province can be devoted to the maintenance and improvement of the administration in all its branches.

Now, Sir, I turn to my particular departments, and I will commence with that of the Police. The Police, as usual, have come in for a certain amount of denunciation—denunciation, that came so glibly from the lips of so many members, that one is almost tempted to believe that Mr. Hornell prescribes the subject of the iniquities of the police as an essay-subject for every school and college throughout the province. It would be easy to answer these generalities with generalities on the other side, but it is perhaps preferable that we should try and view them in the light of the facts. It is, of course, true that the expenditure on the Police has increased, and it is not unreasonable or unexpected that the Council should desire to know the reasons.

But before passing on to the expenditure side, I would invite attention to a small point, and that is, that the revenue under "Police" as also grown. The Police is not, of course, a revenue-producing department, but the point is relevant as bearing on the administration of the Motor Vehicles Department, the Arms Act Department and the Hackney Carriage Department, etc., in Calcutta, which account for certain additions to the expenditure side, although those additions are in effect made against the fees which those departments bring in. Those departments are self-supporting, and they bring in revenue as against the expenditure with which they are concerned. The revenue side of the Police Budget has risen from Rs. 1,87,000 in 1917-18, to Rs. 3,80,000 this year. The sum is a small one, but it is worth remembering.

Turning now to the expenditure side, as I have admitted, there has been a considerable increase during recent years. Since it is the experience of all other countries of the civilised world that a police force is a necessity, I take it that I am not required to justify the existence of the police, as such. Human nature being such as it is, then employment is an unfortunate necessity. But the Council is entitled to be satisfied that for the purposes for which the police force is maintained, it is not maintained in excessive strength and that it is not being paid at excessive rates. On these two points, the Council is fully entitled to all the information that we can give.

The total strength of the police force in Bengal is some 23,000 in the districts, and some 5,300 in Calcutta—a total of about 28,000 and odd in all, and not 99,000 as given by Mr. Janah, who seems to have got his figure by adding in the number of chaukidars. The strength of the police force proper, as shown in the last annual administration report, is as I have stated. That number is surely not excessive in a province of 76,000 square miles, with a population of some 45 millions. The adequacy or excessiveness of the force can also be judged by other tests, as for instance, by comparison with other provinces. The comparison is necessarily rough, but, so far as it goes, it is worth noticing, as it is not to be supposed that, whatever may have been the unfortunate case in Bengal, all other provinces throughout India for so many years have been seized with an inexplicable mania for squandering money on this service. If we look to the proportion of our police force to the population, as compared with other provinces—the figures were worked out in 1918—we find that in Bengal there is one superior officer to 373,000 people—a larger number than any other province in India, except Bihar and Orissa, where the police system is based more or less on our own. In Bombay the proportion goes down to 167,000 people. Taking the subordinate staff, we find that in Bengal we have one subordinate officer to 2,109 people, while in Bombay it goes down to 672 people and in the Punjab to 974. By that general test, I submit, that, prima facie, the police force in Bengal is not excessive. But apart from generalities, we have the test of experience, and those who are responsible for the administration of the department, or are connected with it, know well that there is no gross excess in the strength of the police.

It is not without significance that Mr. Stephenson and myself were only the other day approached in the lobby of this Council Chamber by the Traffic Manager of one of our most important railways to provide more police for its protection in the light of the events of the last two or three days. And we could only get that extra force by bringing in men from adjoining districts. That fact is not without its moral. I will mention another. Six months ago when goondaism was rampant in Calcutta we received various deputations from Marwaris. And what was their request? "Give us more police; the number that you have given us is not adequate." And what was Mr. Clarke's reply? He said: "I am giving you all the men I can afford, and I find it almost impossible to spare more." Far from it being the case that we are wantonly adding to the strength of the police force, much of the time of Mr. Stephenson and myself is taken up in curtailing and cutting down demands, and the reasons why a certain amount of expansion is unavoidable in the Police Department, are, I think, fairly clear. The country is developing. Conditions are not what they were even five or ten years ago, and every change in the complication of modern life increases the complications with which the police force has to deal. They introduce new forms of crime; they give new facilities to criminals and render necessary more active forces in order to cope with them. There is another change. We have heard a great deal about the industrialism that is going on in India. It will go on more rapidly in future. And what is the result? In the place, a few years ago, of a string of peaceful riparian villages, we have now a line of smoking chimneys, surrounded by a dense population of some 500,000 people, along either bank of the Hooghly. It is evident that we cannot control a multitude of troublesome coolies with a police force which was thought sufficient for simple villagers. Take, again, the case of Asansol. When I first came to India, Asansol was an arid and sparsely populated tract; it is now dotted with flourishing collieries each employing a large labour force. I will not tire the Council with details, but I will say this, that in some respects, particularly in industrial areas, we are working with a dangerously small margin of police—the more so as industrial unrest, combined to a certain extent with political unrest, nowadays renders the task of controlling large masses of ignorant men most difficult.

So much about the numerical strength of the force, and the factors which have inevitably led to an increase in its number.

As for the cost of the Police, the predominating factor in recent years has been the enhancement of pay which we have found it necessary to give to the Police in consequence of the economic conditions, which are so well known to us, and which have necessitated additions to pay practically in all provinces and in all services. At the risk of boring the Council I would give them a few details of what we have done. It must be remembered that what looks like a small sum to the individual amounts to a very large one in the aggregate. In connection with the Police, we have had to increase the rates from the top to the bottom. The increased pay of the Imperial Service was sanctioned after a detailed inquiry, but it has not satisfied the officers in that service. Only a few months ago the Government had to decline to support a memorial for a further increase from the members of the service, although it was supported by various responsible public bodies. After the Imperial Service we come to the Deputy Superintendents. Formerly they used to be appointed on Rs. 250, rising to Rs. 500, thus we have had to raise to Rs. 200, rising to 600 on a time-scale, with a selection grade on Rs. 700. Here, again, a few months ago we had to deal with a memorial from the Deputy Superintendents, who were discontented and protested against our action. As in the case of the Imperial Service we had to turn down their memorial, but the fact remains that the improved prospects have not satisfied the servants of Government in that branch.

Take, again, the case of the lower ranks—the constables. In 1913 we could get constables in the unarmed branch (the armed branch gets Re. 1 more) at Rs. 8, rising to Rs. 11. In that year we had to raise it to Rs. 10—13, after that to Rs. 14—17, and in November 1920 to Rs. 16—20. Will anybody say that Rs. 16—20 at the present moment is an excessive rate? On the contrary, we are daily attacked in the press for starving our police. As regards head constables, we used to pay them Rs. 15 in 1913. In 1920 we had to raise the pay to Rs. 25—35, some of them being paid at the rate of Rs. 20—30. Finally, sub-inspectors, who used to get Rs. 50, rising to Rs. 100, now receive Rs. 80—130. Individually, all these are very small increases, but they work out to large sums, as the total of some of these revisions show. The total of one is Rs. 4,93,000; of another Rs. 8,81,000, of another Rs. 5,99,000, and so on. Similar details could be cited for Calcutta.

Well, Sir, so much for the general considerations connected with the Police, and at this hour of night I will only mention one detail which has attracted a certain amount of criticism. There are other details and, if anybody wants information about them, I will try to supply them if he comes to my office, but it is impossible to prolong this discussion much longer, and I will only deal with the matter of quarters for married sergeants. The European element in the subordinate Calcutta police is a most important element, and a necessary element, in a huge city constituted such as this. It is the endeavour of the Department to attract a better class of Europeans to the force, but under the terms now offered it is increasingly difficult to get suitable men, and it should be remembered that out of a total sanctioned strength of 154 there are at present 23 vacancies—not a very satisfactory state of affairs. Now one means of attracting and keeping men of this type is obviously to give them facilities for marrying and living as married men. Another point is the necessity of having a certain proportion of these sergeants where they are readily available near the police head-quarters.

at Lall Bazar, which is admirably suited for the control of the life of the city. If it is a reasonable thing that we should have a married element in this force, and that we must have our men near Lall Bazar, it is inevitable that the provision of quarters will be somewhat costly. What we do at present is to try to get unsuitable quarters in rather unhealthy neighbourhoods at Rs. 50 a month. In place of that a scheme was initiated for building quarters at Lall Bazar, which, in the aggregate, would accommodate three assistant commissioners, 18 inspectors and 12 sergeants. For these officers hired quarters are at present being taken at a cost of Rs. 2,250 a month, and so there will be a recurring saving of Rs. 27,000 by putting these men into this new barrack, for which in 1919 we have already acquired part of the land. We shall then be able to complete a scheme which will make greatly for the efficiency and contentment of the force. The whole question of the housing of the Calcutta police is of the utmost difficulty. It has never been tackled in the past, and we have gone on a kind of makeshift policy of hired quarters. The rent bill in 1918 was a lakh of rupees; in 1919 it was Rs. 3,10,000. That is what we are paying as rent for unsuitable quarters, because in the past enterprise was not shown in acquiring land and building houses. We are trying year by year to take up one or two schemes and, if our funds permit, to gradually put an end to this exceedingly unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Sir, at this late hour, I must now leave the question of Police. I am of course concerned with various other branches of the administration, such as the Civil Service and the Provincial and Subordinate Services, but the only other point on which I will touch is that of European Education.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: The time is up.

The PRESIDENT: I propose that the meeting should last a little longer to-day.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I come to the matter, Sir, of European education. About that we have heard a good deal in the course of this debate, the criticisms falling under two main categories—the one, of a general character, deprecating the expense of the education of domiciled European and Anglo-Indian children; the other directed against individual institutions. Now, Sir, the education of the domiciled European and Anglo-Indian community was described by the University Commission as a matter of great social and political importance, and it has been so regarded ever since the beginning of the last century. That it answers that description is surely obvious. The domiciled European and Anglo-Indian children and their parents are an important element in the life of the community. They constitute an element that can fill a most useful and beneficial place in the prosperity of the community. Is it not to the interest of the community as a whole to see that the younger generation grows up as educated and useful citizens instead of ne'er-do-weels? Surely the public advantage lies in the direction of education, and that it is so has never been contested since the beginning of the last century when the matter first assumed importance. Now if it is so, the next question the Council may ask is whether the amount expended is excessive. It is obvious that education for this section of the community must be on its own distinctive line—a distinct kind of education. The total amount which the State spends by recent figures on this matter is some Rs. 10½ lakhs, as against which we have to remember that the rest of the annual bill of Rs. 32 lakhs is contributed by the community itself, either in the shape of fees, subscriptions or endowments. If this community shows that extent of self-effort, it seems to me that it is not unreasonable that the total assistance given by the State should amount to a sum of a little over Rs. 10 lakhs, and as to the adequacy of that expenditure, let the recent report on the affairs of the domiciled community be the judge. Any one reading that report will find that those who investigated the question found that in many respects the education now given was both inadequate and unsatisfactory. Therefore, on general grounds, I submit that we are right in trying to effect improvements in this most important matter, and the expenditure on the institutions, to which reference has been made by name, can be fully and completely justified. Take first the institution of the Kalimpong Homes. This is a vast institution, a monument of what can be done by the zeal and enthusiasm almost of one man—Dr. Graham. It dates back to 1890, and it now contains about 600 children, about half of whom can be fairly classed as destitute. The capital cost of that institution was some Rs. 7,14,000, out of which Government merely contributed some 20 per cent. Looking at it merely as a business transaction, surely we have gained by the generosity of those who gave the balance and by the enterprise of the founder of these Homes, at whose instigation this money was forthcoming. Similarly, against the annual cost of Rs. 3,95,000, the Government grant amounts to only 15 per cent., the rest again coming from subscriptions and endowments, the share of the State being a fraction of the total. Now, this institution has always worked on a system of capitation grants. If they had worked under the ordinary rules, they could have claimed twice the sum they drew, but they have always relied largely on themselves. But with the growth in the number of children and the prevailing high prices, they have found it impossible to carry on, and have come to Government for assistance, which we propose to give them to the extent of Rs. 1½ lakhs in all. The provision in the Budget is Rs. 80,000, the rest coming in as grants under the ordinary code. A similar institution, the Loreto Convent at Entally, which previously worked under the ordinary rules, has come to us for help, and that institution, I am told, takes in some of the poorest children in Calcutta. Now a piece of legislation, which has long been contemplated, and which will doubtless be shortly brought before this Council, is a Children's Bill, and one necessary part of a Children's Bill will be the provision of homes for the orphaned and the destitute. If private generosity does not come forward to supply these institutions, the State will have to do so. And again I say it is a sound business transaction to encourage private liberality. The two Kurseong schools have particular claims upon assistance from Government, as the children who attend them are practically the children of Government servants. The condition of these schools has long been admitted, even in the old Council, to be thoroughly unsatisfactory, and, so long as we are responsible for their efficient management, we could not refuse the small improvements which can be effected by the very modest sum which appears in the Budget.

Owing to the shortness of the time available I have had to deal most briefly with these two subjects, but with these brief answers to the criticisms that have been offered I must for the time being be content.

The PRESIDENT: I propose to ask His Excellency's permission that this debate should continue till to-morrow in order to enable the remaining official members to give their reply.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to Friday, the 4th March, at 3 P.M.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on the 4th March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members of Government, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 90 nominated and elected members.

The Budget, 1921-22.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! I call on Mr. Marr.

SECRETARY to GOVERNMENT, FINANCE DEPARTMENT (Mr. A. Marr):

I propose to answer briefly some of the detailed criticisms and comments which have been made in the course of the debate, leaving the more important questions to be dealt with by the Finance Member. The first point I shall deal with was raised by Babu Surendra Nath Ray. He has called attention to the provision of Rs. 45,500 for the Under-Secretary in the Judicial and Political Departments, which appears on page 49 of the Civil Estimates; and he has very naturally asked for an explanation of this item, which is apparently large with reference to the estimates of the two previous years. The reason is that the item provides not only the pay of the Under-Secretary, but also the pay of a Deputy Secretary in the Political Department and also of an Assistant Secretary in the Judicial Department. As regards the latter, a mistake has, however, been made, and it should not have been treated as "non-voted." It will be transferred to the "voted" head in the next edition of the Civil Estimates, which will be in the hands of Members before the detailed discussion begins on the 14th of March. The Deputy Secretary and Under-Secretary, being members of the Indian Civil Service, however, their pay has been correctly debited to the "non-voted" head. The fact that the heading here is "Under-Secretary" is an illustration of one of the difficulties we have experienced in dealing with the estimates in their new form. The headings are prescribed by the Comptroller-General and we have to fill them up as best as we can. We will call the attention of the Comptroller-General to the fact that this head or some similar head ought to provide for the new post of Deputy Secretary. Whether he will be willing to alter the heading or not, I cannot say, but if he does not, we shall in future years explain items of this kind by means of a footnote.

Mr. Tarit Bhusan Roy has asked us for an explanation of the contingent charges on page 144 of the Civil Estimates. It will be seen that this provision of Rs. 3 lakhs is due to the fact that the grant for contingent charges made to district officers and others has been found during recent years to be quite inadequate. It is from this head of account that local officers make their ordinary every-day purchases of small things like country stationery, petty items of furniture and the like; also telegram and postal charges. The latter item, we hear, is about to be increased. The prices of these things have gone up so much within recent years that it is quite impossible to keep the local officers going on the grants which sufficed before the war. We are, therefore, undertaking a revision of the contract contingent grants of all mufassal officers, and this lump provision of Rs. 3 lakhs under the Miscellaneous head is what we estimate roughly at present likely to be necessary for the purpose. When the revision has been completed, this item will be distributed under the proper heads; but, for the present, it is a lump sum which we show under Miscellaneous.

There has been a certain amount of criticism of the increase recently granted under the orders of the Government of India to pensioners drawing less than Rs. 50; and it has been urged that while the case of these men is deserving of sympathy, we should first provide for the lower paid servants of Government. Well, the Budget, as you are aware, contains a large sum of over Rs. 45 lakhs for the increase of the pay of ministerial and menial establishments, and also other items for the increase of the pay of the special services, like the Subordinate Education Services. In any case, this relief to pensioners is an all-India question. It has been settled under the orders of the Government of India, and we can hardly refuse to give those pensioners who live in Bengal the relief which has been extended to other pensioners in a similar position in the rest of India.

Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta has told us of the great shock which he experienced on finding that the pay of Ministers is to be "non-voted." Well, this is purely a legal question. We are advised by our legal advisers that, the Council having the other day rejected various proposals which were put before it in relation to the salary of Ministers, the order passed by His Excellency the Governor, when the new Government was formed, stands good. The pay of Ministers must, therefore, be regarded as fixed by law, and under section 72 D (3) of the Government of India Act, it cannot be submitted to the vote of the Council. Apart from this legal position, I think that the Council will agree that it is not a sound thing that we should have discussions every few months about the pay of Ministers.

Some members have complained of the cost of the revision of the establishments, and have suggested that this matter ought to have been left pending until the new Council came into existence, when it could exercise its powers to veto. As to this, I should like to remind the Council that the question of the pay of the superior services generally was inquired into by the Public Services Commission so far back as 1912. The Commission found, on grounds which are fully stated in their report, that it was necessary to level up the pay of these superior services generally, both Indian and European, in order to attract the same class of recruits as had been aimed at when the pay was originally fixed a generation before. Then the war broke out and the Commission's recommendations were held in abeyance for several years. Effect was given to them, in the case of most of the superior services, more than a year ago, after these services had been kept waiting for six or seven years. I do not think that, when this long-deferred revision of salaries was finally settled in December, 1919, the Bengal Government, or the Government of India, could reasonably have asked their officers to wait for a further period until the Reforms Scheme came into existence. In this connection, it may be interesting if I give the Council the following figures, showing approximately what this increase of pay for the various services has amounted to:—

Imperial Services.

	Rs.
Indian Civil Service	2,78,000
Imperial Forest Service	50,000
Imperial Police Service	1,28,000
Indian Educational Service	60,000
Indian Medical Service	80,000
Indian Agricultural Service	19,000
Imperial Engineering Service	40,000
Total	6,55,000

Provincial Services.

	Rs.
Bengal Civil Service	4,98,000
Provincial Judicial Service	7,20,000
Provincial Educational Service	1,60,000
Provincial Medical Service, Military and Civil	3,00,000
Provincial Agricultural Service	7,000
Provincial Veterinary Service	7,000
Bengal Engineering Service	1,11,000
Total	18,03,000

Colonel Pugh has challenged us to furnish an explanation of the excess expenditure of the year 1921-22 over that for the year now coming to a close. The Finance Member dealt with this matter pretty fully in his speech on the introduction of the Budget; and I am very reluctant to take up the time of the Council by going into it in detail now. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr showed that of the excess of Rs. 2,65,00,000 no less than Rs. 1,29,00,000 or nearly half was due to two items, namely:—

- (1) the Rs. 63 lakhs due as our contribution to the Government of India under the Reforms Scheme; and
- (2) the item of Rs. 66 lakhs under the Miscellaneous head, most of which is accounted for by the contemplated increase of the pay of ministerial officers.

Then he took the Council through the expenditure statements on page 10 of his Budget Review and showed exactly how all the departmental increases exceeding Rs. 5 lakhs have been accounted for. This left a balance of Rs. 40 lakhs, made up of individual items of less than Rs. 5 lakhs in each case, and for an explanation of these he referred the Council to the details given in my review. His speech and the two reviews, I think, furnish a full explanation of this excess, and I do not propose to go into the matter further at present.

Babu Sailaja Nath Ray Chaudhuri complained, I understand, that no provision had been made in the Budget for famine relief or scarcity, and he inquired how we should meet the cost of any famine or scarcity, if such relief be unfortunately found necessary in the course of the year. I would refer him to page 50 of my review, where it will be seen that we have made a provision of Rs. 2 lakhs under the head "43. Famine Relief and Insurance." The details will be found on page 134 of the Civil Estimates. This has been done in accordance with the provisions of the Devolution Rules and it is therefore not "voted." Under Rule 29 and Schedule 4 of the Devolution Rules we are bound to make a provision of Rs. 2 lakhs a year for the Famine Insurance Fund, until that fund reaches a total of Rs. 12 lakhs. Any famine relief, that we may have to incur during the years we are building up the fund, will be debited to the fund, and we should have to make that good in later years; but, once we have reached a total of Rs. 12 lakhs, we shall not have to make any further contribution to the fund, except to the extent of making good any amount, which we may take from the fund either for the actual relief of famine, or for the prevention of famine by the construction of protective irrigation works or similar works.

We have not asked the Council to vote any expenditure from this fund in the coming year, as we hope and trust that the need will not arise. If it does arise, however, a supplementary estimate will be submitted in the course of the year to the Council, and the Council will be asked to vote the necessary expenditure.

Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri has inquired as to why the pensions of Judges are shown as non-voted in the Civil Estimates. He appeared to argue that only the salaries of Judges should be non-voted. This, I think, is due to a misunderstanding of section 72 D (3) of the Government of India Act. It is true that sub-clause (r) mentions only the salaries of the Judges of the High Court and of the Advocate-General, but just above this provision will be found another, stating that the salaries and pensions of officers appointed by or with the approval of His Majesty or by the Secretary of State in Council are also excluded from the voted head. This covers all permanent Judges, since they are appointed with the approval of His Majesty. I do not quite know why the salaries of High Court Judges are specially mentioned lower down; but probably because it is intended to cover the case of temporary Judges of the High Court or acting Judges, whose appointments, I believe, do not require the approval of His Majesty. Such temporary or acting Judges are not entitled to pension until they have served their full time as permanent Judges; and therefore, presumably, it is only the salaries of Judges which are mentioned in the separate head relating to Judges.

Babu Jatindra Nath Basu inquired why a provision of Rs. 2 lakhs has been made for expenditure under Salt, and also who pays for the construction and up-keep of the Salt Golas at Sulkea and Khandepore. Salt is wholly Imperial; the Government of India pay all charges, and the Government of Bengal simply work as then Agents in running the department. If members will turn to page 33 of the Civil Estimates, they will find that the item of Rs. 2 lakhs referred to by Babu Jatindra Nath Basu is a deduction from our total expenditure and not an addition. This is the sum handed over to us by the Government of India for administering the work of the Salt Department. The same member also asked what the arrangement is between us and the Government of India as to unified postal and revenue stamps. When the system of allowing postal stamps to be used for revenue purposes was introduced, the Government of India calculated what the loss to each provincial Government would be, and made a corresponding assignment to that Government. We got credit for this in our financial settlement, and in the detailed account No. VII A on page 11 of the Civil Estimates members will find the entry relating to this item.

We have heard much in the last few days of the grants given by the Government of India for special purposes, which now form part of our accumulated balances, and perhaps the members of this Council may be interested in the details of these unspent balances so far as we have been able to work them out. I would point out to the Council, however, that the figures which I am about to give are only approximate and that we shall not be able to know the actual figures, until we get the detailed audited accounts of the year 1920-21 later on in the year.

According to the revised estimate, as framed in the second edition, the unspent balances of these grants at the end of this year, as roughly estimated, will amount to:—

	Rs.
Education	1,17,57,000
Technical Education	20,000
Agricultural Education	1,45,000
Sanitation	65,86,000
Total	1,85,08,000

The Budget under consideration is, of course, subject to the vote of this Council; but, on the assumption that it will be passed as it stands, the following items would be debitable to these grants:—

	Rs.
Grant to Dacca University	9,00,000
Provision for works in progress in connection with the Dacca University buildings	2,00,000
Provision for Dacca Intermediate Board	40,000
Construction of bungalows for Civil Officers, Dacca, taken over by the Dacca University	1,44,000
Provision for new buildings for the Education Department in Public Works Department Budget	3,11,000
Provision for works in progress of the Education buildings in the Public Works Department Budget	6,84,000
The present recurring Imperial grant is Rs. 41,81,000, and the whole of this sum has been provided in the next year's Budget, and therefore this is debitable to the unspent balances of Imperial grants	41,81,000
	64,60,000

Technical Education.

We have provided much more than the balance of Rs. 20,000. 20,000

Agricultural Education.

A provision of Rs. 20,000 has been made in the Public Works Department Budget for Chinsura Agricultural schools 20,000
 Dacca Agricultural School 2,000

Then, as regards Sanitation, after excluding all provision for establishment, practically the whole of the expenditure in the Sanitation Budget is for sanitation schemes, and it can all be debited to the unspent balances. We have calculated roughly that in the next year's Budget Rs. 14,46,000 will be debitable to the unspent balances, besides Rs. 1,42,000 provided in the Irrigation Budget for drainage and anti-malarial schemes. The total of the items I have mentioned is Rs. 80,90,000. In addition to these, the Intermediate Colleges at Dacca are estimated to cost at least Rs. 16½ lakhs altogether. The expenditure will also be debited to the grants for Education. After allowing for this, we shall have an unspent balance of Rs. 87,68,000 at the credit of these grants at the end of the year 1921-22.

As against this balance of about Rs. 87½ lakhs, we shall have an estimated closing balance of Rs. 52 lakhs and the Provincial Loan Account of about Rs. 86 lakhs. Funds will, therefore, be available, when schemes to be financed from these grants are ready.

There is apparently some misunderstanding in the Council as to what the non-voted charges consist of; and I regret that this was one of the points which we omitted to make clear in our Budget Review. The "non-voted" items are of two kinds: first, there are the appointments mentioned in section 72 D (3) of the Government of India Act, and second, there are the charges on account of the excluded areas which are dealt with in section 52 A of the Act. In regard to these excluded areas, which in this province consist of the Darjeeling district and the Chittagong Hill Tracts, the Government of India issued on the 3rd January last a notification declaring that the provisions of the Government of India Act about the submission of expenditure proposals to the Legislative Council shall not apply to the proposals for expenditure. All these items had therefore to be shown as "non-voted."

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): My colleagues, the Members of the Executive Council and Ministers have dealt with the matters affecting their departments, which have been raised in the course of this debate, and Mr. Mair has explained certain financial details, towards which criticism has been directed. It remains for me to deal with the broader questions of principle, which are involved in the Budget and in the financial policy of the Bengal Government. Many epithets have been hurled at my unfortunate head during the last three days, but I think the most usual has been "optimistic." I have no objection to being called optimistic, whether in the good or in the bad sense, but I was never sufficiently optimistic to believe that this Budget would be received with any marked enthusiasm by the Council. I fully share the disappointment that has been generally expressed, that the new constitution should have to start work with straitened means and insufficient resources; and moreover that we cannot hold out any definite hopes at the present moment that the position will be improved in the immediate future. As I have already told the Council on several occasions, we are in correspondence with the Government of India on the subject; but no definite decision has been arrived at; and we cannot, therefore, make any definite plans for the future at present. It would, of course, have been very much pleasanter for me and for all of us, if we could have put a fine fat surplus before the Council, and asked for their advice as to how it should be spent. But unfortunately, through no fault of our own, that is not the situation which we have to face. I say, and I ask the Council to endorse my saying, that the present situation is no fault of the present Government. But I fully realise that that does little to mitigate the natural sense of disappointment felt by the Council; and that disappointment naturally shows itself in a certain amount of resentment against the Finance Department, who are responsible for presenting this Budget to the Council. I do not, therefore, complain in any way of resentment against the Finance Department; but I must say that I am surprised at the unfair, and I might almost say ungenerous, criticism, which has been levelled at the Ministers in regard to their responsibility for the Budget. Ministers are very well able to look after themselves, but, having been closely associated with them for the past two months, I cannot forbear from saying something on the subject. I have listened to most of the speeches, which have been made in this Council during this week, and I think that I am right in saying that Mr. Stark is almost the only member who has shown any appreciation of the position of Ministers in regard to this matter. I alluded to this subject in my speech, when I introduced the Budget, but, in view of the remarks which have been made, I may be allowed to recapitulate the position briefly.

The present Government came into office on the 3rd January last. It found in existence the Departmental Budgets prepared on the ordinary lines, which Mr. Surendra Nath Mullick described as the traditional lines, and I will give reasons presently to show why they were traditional. Well, the Government had to deal with this Budget in less than a week, for the main Budget figures had to reach the Government of India by the 15th of January, and we had to start writing our Budget letter a few days before that. In these circumstances, I am surely right in describing some of the criticisms which have been levelled at the Ministers as ungenerous. Colonel Pugh asked: where is the evidence in the Budget of signs that Ministers have any policy? Well, I ask the Council if it is reasonable to require Ministers to produce a policy within a week. The Ministers as sensible men had to accept the situation; they could not raid the reserved departments and grab money for schemes on the transferred side. Even if schemes had been ready, Ministers could not have come to a final conclusion about their adoption within a week. I may say that this particular difficulty was foreseen, when the date for the introduction of the reformed constitution was under discussion. It was then suggested—and I do not think it was a bad suggestion—that it would be best if the Reformed Government and the Reformed Council came into being on the 1st April next. They would then have had a Budget cut and dried for the year on which they would have worked during the course of next financial year; but for which they would have had no responsibility. They would have had six or eight months from April next, in which to settle down to their work and to study the administrative problems of the departments in their charge, and would have been in a position next October or November to put up a reasoned Budget for the following year. This, however, was not the course that was followed. Under the orders of higher authority the Reformed Government and the Reformed Council came into existence on the 3rd January last. It is, therefore, necessary for them to discuss and settle the Budget, which will come into force the next financial year. I do not grumble in the least at the Council complaining of the financial situation; but I do say that it is unfair to hold Ministers in the circumstances, which I have explained, responsible for the Budget proposals, in the same manner as it will be possible to hold them responsible in future years, when they will have a hand in framing the Budget from its inception.

These considerations are applicable to much that has been said regarding the allocation of funds between reserved and transferred departments. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has dealt with some aspects of this question, and I will only take up the technical side in order to clear up the misunderstanding which seems to exist. There are two of the Devolution Rules bearing on this matter—31 and 32.

Rule 31 lays down that the allocation of the expenditure estimate between the reserved and transferred subjects is a matter for agreement between the two sides of the Government. Well, that is the rule under which we worked this year; there was agreement and there was no necessity to go on and apply rule 32. That rule enables the Governor, if he is satisfied that there is no hope of agreement between Members or Ministers as to the apportionment of funds, to allocate the revenues and balances by specifying fractional proportions, but this is only a last resort, and I imagine it might be a very unsatisfactory resort. At any rate, there was no necessity to resort to this expedient this year. We had no fractional proportions in our minds, when we sat down to consider the Budget in the first week of January. We took the departmental demands as we found them. We saw that the total was more than we could afford, and we cut down the demands of the different departments on their merits. As a matter of general interest, we subsequently worked out the proportions between the reserved and transferred sides, but we did not allocate on the basis of the proportions, and our judgment was swayed solely by the needs of different departments and not at all by any theoretical proportions.

Of course, as the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has said, these proportions are very misleading, unless their limitations are clearly understood. Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri gave an instance yesterday in his question about the Public Works Department. That Department is on the transferred side, but it puts up and maintains buildings for all Departments, and this fact has to be borne in mind in considering the allocation of its expenditure to the transferred side. I can give an instance on the other side. The Finance Department serves all the Departments, but the whole of the cost of the Finance Department is debited to the reserved head, though the financial administration of the province is a matter of concern to Ministers just as much as to Members. Unless these considerations are borne in mind, the percentages which have been quoted in this debate give an entirely misleading impression. All that can be said for them is that, if you follow the same system of calculation for different years, you do get a rough basis for comparing the allocation of one year with that of another.

Now, I should like to say a few words regarding some of the criticisms, which have been made during the last few days on the form of the Budget and the nature of the information supplied in connection with the Budget. I frankly admit that many of these criticisms are well deserved, though I should like to say that the many acute comments which have been made in the course of this debate on the financial position show that some members at least have been able to probe the Budget thoroughly. However, I have no doubt that the task of these members has been rendered more difficult than it might have been, and for this I apologise to the Council. I can only plead in extenuation that we had to frame the Budget and the Budget Review on the old lines, simply because we had no time to invent new lines. Now that we know what sort of information the Council want in connection with the Budget, we will do our best to supply it in future years. We have already done so in connection with the Civil Works Budget by supplying the detailed statement of works in progress, which was given to members the day before yesterday. One factor, for which we did not make sufficient allowance, is the change in the procedure this year. Under the old system, the detailed Budget discussion preceded the general discussion. From what I gather, I suspect that in former years a good many members did not take the trouble to study the Budget papers very carefully. They attended the detailed discussions and picked up sufficient information to enable them to take a useful part in the general discussion. Now, however, we have adopted the House of Commons procedure, under which the general discussion precedes the detailed discussions, and we will bear this in mind in drawing up the Budget in future years. Several members have made suggestions to me, or have promised to give me suggestions after the Budget discussion is over; and I shall be very grateful to receive any suggestions of this kind, and will undertake to do our best to give effect to them. I cannot promise to satisfy everybody, for one reason that the Budget heads are prescribed not by us but by the Comptroller and Auditor-General; and we have no power to alter them. We can, however,—and I quite agree that we should—supply fuller information by means of footnotes and otherwise, in cases where the entries under the prescribed Budget heads are not altogether clear without some explanation; and this we will endeavour to do in future. There is another matter, in which we shall have difficulty in satisfying everybody. One member told me the other day that he wanted much fuller explanation about the various Budget provisions, but, he added that the main fault that he had to find was that the Budget statements were far too bulky. Well, I am afraid it will be difficult to supply fuller detailed information without making the Budget statements even more bulky than they are at present. But, as I have said, we will do our best to improve matters in this respect next year.

Another matter regarding which there has been some criticism, and I think some misunderstanding, is the question of the repayment of our provincial loan account with the Government of India. The criticism has been made that we should have taken advantage of the provision in the Devolution Rules and paid off this sum of Rs. 86 lakhs by instalments, spread over 12 years. Well, this is not a new question; it was first started in 1919 when the discussion on the financial arrangements to be made in connection with the Reforms first began. It was then generally agreed that it would be a sound thing for us to pay off our loan account with the Government of India as early as possible and enjoy the whole of the interest, which we draw on this account from local bodies and agriculturists. The Meston Committee referred, with approval, to the decision of the Government of Bengal and some other local Governments to pay off their provincial loan at the starting of the Reforms, but the Governments of Bombay and the United Provinces suggested the instalment system, and this was put in the Devolution Rules to meet their views. So far as Bengal is concerned, however, the repayment of the present loan account must be regarded as part of the general bargain made in connection with the Financial Settlement under the Reforms Scheme. It was some time before the present Budget came under consideration, and neither the present Government of Bengal nor the present Legislative Council had, of course, any responsibility for the decision. It may be said that we should go up to the Government of India and ask for a reconsideration of this portion of the Financial Settlement, but I am by no means certain that it would be to our advantage to do so. Under the Devolution Rules we have to pay interest on the provincial loan account at a rate calculated on the average rate carried by the total amount owed to the Governor-General in Council on this account on the 31st March, 1921. A portion of our loan account was borrowed some years ago at the low rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., but since 1916 the rates levied by the Government of India have been $4\frac{1}{2}$ and $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The actual rate of interest calculated on the principle laid down in the Devolution Rules is about 4 per cent., and if we paid this loan in 12 annual instalments, the annual instalment would be Rs. 9,16,000 and the total cost in 12 years would be nearly Rs. 110 lakhs that is to say, Rs. 24 lakhs more than what we should have to pay if we paid off our loan immediately. It may be said that we should lose more by paying off the Rs. 86 lakhs at once and then borrowing at the current rate of interest for new schemes, but there are two reasons why it is impracticable to make any comparison of this kind. In the first place we should not borrow till we actually want the money, and, as I told the Council the other day, we cannot borrow any considerable sum of money or any sum at all for non-productive purposes, until we have established equilibrium between our revenue and expenditure. Till we settle for what object we propose to borrow, we cannot fix the life of the loan or the sinking fund or calculate the total cost of the loan. We cannot, therefore, estimate what it will cost us to borrow money for some undetermined object at some undetermined date in the future. In the second place, I think some members of the Council entertain exaggerated ideas as to what we could do with this sum of Rs. 86 lakhs, if the Government of India allowed it to remain in our balances and allowed us to pay it off by instalments. Colonel Pugh, I think, said that we should hand over the Rs. 86 lakhs to the Sanitary Commissioner and let him do what he likes with it. Well, I am sure that the Sanitary Commissioner would not be prepared to spend Rs. 86 lakhs at a moment's notice, and I am quite certain we should not be prepared to entrust him with money in this way. A Budget is an annual estimate. We cannot budget for schemes which are not yet born. This procedure is definitely barred by the rules and is obviously unsound finance. Moreover, I am quite certain that the Government of India would not let us draw on our balances for any purpose of this kind. They would say: "Oh, no. You owe us Rs. 86 lakhs and, having regard to your financial position, we must insist on your keeping a sum actually in the balances sufficient to ensure our being repaid before the expiry of the time mentioned in the Devolution Rules."

We could not, therefore, use this money as we please, even if we asked the Government of India to let us keep it in our balances. I think, therefore, that the payment of the loan account is the best course that we can pursue, and it would be unsound to defer the repayment when we can see clearly that that course would entail a very definite financial disadvantage in a total loss of Rs. 24 lakhs, while, if the Government of India refused to let us use this money for provincial schemes, as they certainly would, there would be no advantages at all.

Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri took the other point of view. He argued that we ought to have paid off this loan long ago; but this was not a course open to the late Government of Bengal, nor is it open to the present Government of Bengal to pay off the loan before the 1st April next, as that is the date on which this particular portion of the Devolution Rules will come into force.

Some other members have argued or suggested that the repayment of the provincial loan account should appear in the "voted" portion of our Budget estimates. But this, again, is a matter which is not open to us to do under the law. The repayment of this provincial loan account, whether by instalments or in a lump sum, falls within section 72 D (3) of the Government of India Act, and is consequently non-voted. It is for this reason that in order to make our financial position perfectly clear, we have put the repayment of the loan account at the foot of the expenditure statement on page 2 of the Budget Review as an item of expenditure which we have to make after the 1st April next, but which will not be submitted to the vote of the Council.

Now I come to the main question of the deficit and of the measures proposed for meeting it. The deficit is the difference between our recurring income under the heads of revenue allotted to us and the expenditure, which we consider it necessary to meet during the coming year. This difference amounts, as the Council know, to something over 2 crores of rupees. Now, in order to establish equilibrium between our income and our expenditure, there were three courses open to us. The first course was to impose fresh taxation; the second course was to reduce expenditure, and the third course was that which we have adopted—that of drawing on our balances. There are objections to each one of these three courses; and the question which was before the Government in January last, and is before the Council now, is which of these three courses is open to the least objection. Now as to taxation, Mr. Travers seemed to blame the Government for not coming up to the Council with proposals for fresh taxation. But taxation schemes require careful consideration. Provincial taxation is an entirely new thing and we could not, even if we had thought it proper, lay proposals for taxation before this Council within a few weeks of our coming into existence. Moreover, I may say, the inclusion of taxation proposals in the Budget would not tend to make it popular and it is surely premature to impose taxation before we are quite sure that we cannot get the money in any way.

As to reduction of expenditure, Mr. S. R. Das has made an earnest appeal to us to cut off Rs. 80 or Rs. 90 lakhs from the expenditure side of the Budget and keep that sum in reserve for purposes not yet specified but to be decided on in the course of the year after schemes have been drawn up. Well, we have given much thought to this matter since Mr. Das's proposal was first made, but I am afraid it is impracticable. We have already pruned the Budget bare; the original demands of the Departments totalled to a sum much larger than that which we have actually included in the Budget. We could not reduce further without starving essential public services and producing administrative chaos. There are still a few schemes left in the Budget as to the urgency of which legitimate difference of opinion may exist, and the Council will have an opportunity of considering these schemes and of coming to a decision about them, when the detailed discussion begins on the 14th March. But at most we could not expect to save more than a comparatively small amount in this way. The fact is that we can fairly claim that our administration is economical. I make this assertion deliberately, in full knowledge of the fact that the Council will within the next few weeks have an opportunity, which it never had before, of scrutinising the expenditure proposals of the various departments of Government in detail. I think I can safely say that after that examination it will not be possible to call our administration extravagant. For years we have been restricted to an income which has been barely sufficient to enable us to carry on the ordinary administration of the province in the most economical, and I might say, in the most parsimonious fashion. Occasionally we have had, under the unsound system in force, doles from the Government of India which have enabled us to embark on objects which are regarded with more popular favour than the ordinary administrative duties of a local Government. But these administrative duties must be carried on, and I must warn the Council that, however carefully the Budget may be pruned, there is little hope of effecting any great saving under the ordinary administrative heads. Moreover, if the Council decide to spend a large amount of money on new schemes outside the scope of the provincial administration as it has hitherto been understood, we shall have to ask the Government to impose taxation to find the money. I think there is no doubt about that fact, and there is no use burking it. This consequence was clearly foreseen by the authors of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, who said in paragraph 265, while dealing with this question of the expansion of administrative activities under the Reforms Scheme: "We are bound to recognise that in time new taxation will be necessary, for no conceivable economies can finance the developments that are to be anticipated."

Turning to another point in connection with my claim that our administration is economical, Babu Sarat Chandra Janah gave us a mass of figures the other day showing the expenditure on various objects in different countries, but he failed to supply us with any information as to the income of the Governments of the countries which he mentioned. Members of the Council, who are interested in such questions, will find a heap of information about them in the ordinary works of reference, such as the Statesman's Year Book and similar books of reference, but the figures require to be studied as a whole. I will give only one illustration.

Members will find that the Budget of Great Britain last year, apart from all war debts and loan accounts, amounted to over one thousand million pounds or 15 hundred crores of rupees. I do not say that the circumstances of Bengal are in any way comparable to those of Great Britain, except that the population is about the same. But I do claim that the figures in the British Budget, which I have quoted, justify me in saying that we are not erring on the side of extravagance, when we carry on the administration of Bengal for a sum of 12 crores of rupees a year. I would ask the Council to consider the matter calmly from this point of view. It does not help matters in the very least to denounce the Budget as an insult to the nation or to threaten to reject the Budget if large cuts are not made from the reserved side for the benefit of the transferred side. The Budget is made up of a large number of separate items, and it is the duty, I submit, of the Council to examine each item, and to see whether the provision for it is justified or not. I ask the Council, therefore, to suspend judgment on the Budget as a whole, until it has had an opportunity of considering the detailed grants.

Thus, I think, is all I need say about the possibility of reducing expenditure. As to the expedient of drawing on the balances, to meet the deficit, I admit that there is the objection that we greatly diminish our ability to finance capital schemes in future years, but Mr. Man has shown that we shall still be in a position to meet our moral obligations in regard to the grants which were made for specific purposes. I fear that in the circumstances of the present year there is no other course open to us but to draw on our balances to meet the deficit. I do not wish to take up the position of a shallow optimist, but there is no use in meeting trouble half-way. We are not justified at the present time in assuming that our deficit will be permanent. The Joint Committee have said that special consideration should be given to our financial difficulties, and the Secretary of State has told us that the matter is under his consideration. We are justified, therefore, in entertaining hopes that something will be done to produce equilibrium between our income and our expenditure. When we get the final decision of the Secretary of State on this subject, we shall have to take stock of our position, and if that decision is unfavourable, or does not meet our requirements in full, we shall have to decide what steps we are going to take either to increase our revenue or to reduce expenditure. I am very glad to find that in the course of the debate several practical suggestions have been made as to the methods by which we could increase our annual resources. We have already taken up one matter which was mentioned by Babā Jatindra Nath Basu, namely, the levy of stamp duty on share transfer certificates, and the other suggestions we shall proceed to consider in due course. But the time for taking general stock of our position is not yet come. When it does come, we shall, of course, take the Council into our confidence.

I do not think Babu Surendra Nath Ray was justified in complaining of our lack of confidence in the Council. It is true that we cannot at the present moment publish our current correspondence with the Government of India about the deficit, but we have kept, and will keep the Government of India fully informed of the views of the Council with regard to this matter, and we will give the Council all the information it needs to enable it to form correct views on the situation. I was not here at the time of the Meston Committee's inquiries; but I have studied the papers carefully, and I find ample evidence that Mr. Ray and other gentlemen received the fullest assistance from the Finance Department in formulating their views for presentation to the Committee. That policy the Finance Department will continue to pursue, and I do not think we shall give the Council any cause for complaint in this respect.

Well, Sir, that is our position. We are entitled to regard our present financial position as temporary. It clearly cannot continue. We must effect equilibrium between our revenue and expenditure or we shall come to grief, and we are not going to come to grief. But this year we have resources in our balances, and I think the Council will agree that, as a temporary expedient, our best course was to adopt the line of least resistance, as Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta called it, and to draw on our balances, instead of imposing taxation or reducing the administration to a state of inefficiency by hasty and ill-conceived measures of retrenchment. Let us wait and see what our financial prospects finally are before we commit ourselves to any irrevocable action.

We have been told that the Budget in its present form is a menace to the success of the Reforms. I cannot understand arguments of this kind. Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee has dealt with this matter much more eloquently than I can, but I may say a few words on it from the point of view of a practical administrator. There is no financial principle involved in the Reforms, and I would urge that we ought not to confuse the issues by mixing up a temporary financial stringency with the success of the Reforms. Our financial position is unsatisfactory, most unsatisfactory, but in every-day administration we are always running up against something unsatisfactory. We cannot have everything our own way all the time, and it would be very bad for us if we did. The art of administration consists largely in making the best of a bad business while doing all that is possible to improve things for the future. I ask the Council to take a practical view of the Budget as a series of business proposals set forth under a series of major heads. We commend these proposals to the Council as the best proposals that can in our judgment be put before the Council at the present time, and we ask the Council to consider them calmly and carefully on their merits. If the Council will look at the Budget from this point of view, I have little doubt of the result.

Resolutions

(under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest).

The PRESIDENT: The discussion of the Budget is now finished and I now turn to the next item in the list of business, namely, the resolutions on matters of general public interest. I call upon Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur to move the first resolution.

I am informed that Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur is absent owing to illness, but he has asked that the resolution be postponed. I accordingly postpone the first resolution.

As regards the second resolution, it covers a part of the ground covered by the first resolution, and Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta is willing that this also should be postponed. I think it will be convenient if both be discussed together. I accordingly postpone this resolution also.

As regards the third, it is only an amendment to the second resolution, so that will also be postponed.

The next resolution stands in the name of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur. He is absent and has not made any request to postpone this resolution. The resolution will, therefore, be deemed to have been withdrawn.

The motions were as follows:—

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: This Council recommends to the Government that a Technological and Agricultural College on the standard of the great Technological Colleges affiliated to the Universities of Great Britain and America granting B.Sc., M.Sc. and D.Sc. degrees affiliated to the Calcutta University and closely related to the University as in other countries, should be established at Calcutta without delay.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: This Council recommends to the Government that a Technological Institute be established in Calcutta, and that due provision be made in the next year's budget for this purpose.

Dr. HASSAN SUHRAWARDY to move, by way of amendment to motion No. 2, that the question of the establishment of a Technological Institute in Calcutta be referred to the Director of Industries and his advisory board for an early report on the general question and for a definite scheme for consideration, before financial allotments are made.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: This Council recommends to the Government that three standing committees be appointed by the Government, consisting of elected members of the Council, to advise the three Ministers in the matter of the administration of the subjects under their charge.

Cart-drivers.

Dr. HASSAN SUHRAWARDY: I beg leave to withdraw my resolution with permission to reintroduce it with such additions and alterations as I may deem necessary.

The resolution was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn. It was as follows:—This Council recommends to the Government to consider the expediency of legislating against cart-drivers carrying whips and lathis when driving their carts."

Strikes among workmen.

Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: "This Council recommends to the Government that a committee be formed consisting of two elected members, representing Industries and Commerce, two ordinary elected members, two nominated members, and one official member of the Council to inquire into the causes of recent strikes of workmen and advise what measures should be adopted by the Government to conciliate disputes between the employers and the employees in future."

I beg to move this resolution for the formation of a committee to inquire into the causes of recent strikes, etc. Strikes and concerted refusal to work seem to be the order of the day and have lately, as in the case of the Tramways and Lillooah Carriage Workshop men, culminated in terrorism and violence unprecedented in the history of Bengal. It is therefore high time, Sir, that a serious and impartial inquiry into the root-cause of this new Industrial Insurrection be made promptly and vigorously to allay panic and reassure public opinion and devise remedies. According to official statistics and my own inquiries there were 139 strikes between 1st July, 1920 and 28th February, 1921—in eight months and the number of men involved exceeds 270,000. With few exceptions, the demand for higher wages was the cause of these strikes. This demand was met in full in 12 per cent. of the cases, 66 per cent. were settled by meeting the strikers' demands partially, and the rest viz., 22 per cent. returned to work without any gain. The number of working days lost by these strikes, including the Tramways and Lillooah Carriage Works' stoppage, exceed 1·8 million days, viz., 18 lakhs of days, which number is arrived at by the number of idle days multiplied by the number of different strikers, c.g., nearly 70,000 working days were lost by 2,500 Tramway men, who struck for 28 days. These figures tell pathetic tales of bitterness, ill-feeling, misery, and in many cases of semi-starvation on the part of the strikers. The industries and trades most affected by these strikers are—Jute Mills, 150,000 men struck; Building Trades Engineering Works, 35,000 men struck; Transport (Taxi and Tramway men), 6,000 struck; Collieries, 2,000 men struck; Paper Mills, Railway Workshops, 16,000 men struck, and other small industries. Sir, I find by taking the average earning of our industrial workers, men, women and children, at 8 annas per day, that the wages lost by 270,000 hands amount to 9 lakhs of rupees, and the employers' estimated loss, immediate and prospective, is at least three times that. I have taken the average loss of four factories supplied to me confidentially. Bengal was thus poorer by 36 lakhs of rupees in less than eight months, not to speak of serious public inconvenience and hardship, personal injuries—as in the case of the Tramway and the East Indian Railway carriage builders' strikes—great dislocation of traffic and consequent loss to other industries.

The question before us is—Could these strikes have been avoided, or even, if the strikes were inevitable, could they have been settled more promptly and on more mutually advantageous terms to both parties? The question before us is—Can the Government set up a machinery to deal with strikes in future, or help in the removal of the causes of these strikes? Is the State justified in interfering in disputes between Labour and Capital? Sir, it is necessary to give a very concise account of the growth of Bengal industries and economic conditions, under which labour thrives in this part of the world—labour which contributed largely to our material prosperity. The paid-up capital of joint stock companies in Bengal controlling most of the leading industries and the economic destiny of several lakhs of our workers, men, women and children has gone up from 26 crores of rupees in 1912 to nearly 43 crores of rupees in 1918. The authorised capital of Companies registered in Calcutta in 1919 and 1920, when the boom was on, exceeds 114 crores of rupees and, assuming that 25 per cent is paid up, the total paid-up capital invested in Bengal exceeds 70 crores of rupees to-day. I have chosen the period beginning with 1912, as Bihar and Orissa ceased to be parts of Bengal from that year. The industrial labour force increased in our province from 500,000 to 750,000 hands during the short period of eight years. These figures are compiled from official and non-official reports, and are only approximate. Of these 750,000 hands—a great portion of whom are immigrants to Bengal—Jute Mills, with a paid-up capital of nearly 12 crores of rupees employ by far the largest number, viz., 264,000 and more. If we take recent figures more than 50 per cent. of them struck work. The next largest number of hands, viz., 134,000, are employed in the Tea industry which has a paid-up capital of nearly 7 crores of rupees. Mercantile offices, gudacs and semi-official institutions, such as Corporations, Port Trusts, Banks, Insurance Companies, Posts and Telegraphs, come third, with over 120,000 clerks and assistants, who are more or less responsible for the administration of our great industries and public service and are quasi-workmen. Collieries employ nearly 49,000 hands; Railway Workshops, 30,000; Jute Presses, 25,000; Gun, Shell, Rifle and Munition Factories owned by Government, 21,000; Engineering Trades 45,000 of whom nearly 35,000 struck work, and the rest are employed in Printing Presses, Dock-Yards, Building Trades, Electrical Supply and Workshops, Brickfields, Rice Mills, Tramways, Gas Works, Taxis and Transport Trades, Chemical Industries and River and Ocean Navigation. These 750,000 hands employed from one end of this province, viz., the tea gardens in the north-east border to the Collieries in the south-west, and in the Factories in Calcutta and its suburbs receive something like a crore of rupees as wages per month. Individual wages range from Rs. 9 a month, as drawn by a Tea Garden coolie, to an average of Rs. 35 a month, paid to carpenters, electricians and other skilled workers. Sir, Western industrialism and Western machinery, as introduced in India, has lured this vast body of men to industrial centres. They are mostly immigrants from the more or less distant country sides, who found agricultural occupation or even small handicrafts unprofitable. In no distant future they will have to undergo the miseries and misfortunes that will follow from Western methods of industrialism and capitalism. Before long the State will have to tackle problems of the un-employed, the tramp and the un-employable—of Workshops and Asylums. Sir, I maintain that this large body of workers needs full protection of the State, just as the system of landlordism created by British administration necessitated protection of tenants and raiyats by a whole series of tenancy legislations in the past, and so as the peasants are helped by the Co-operative Credit Societies Act. The protection of Indian labour is all the more necessary, as it is inarticulate and its economic position is miserably weak, whereas capital is strongly organised and fortified with monopoly and power, and is more than a match for the feeble strength of our unorganised labour as we find it to-day. The only protective Acts in force are the Indian Factories Act, 1911, and the old and incomplete Indian Mining Act, 1901, both half-hearted measures. It is essential that the State must intervene whole-heartedly, as every civilised State has done, including Japan in the Far East, to lend directly, or indirectly, a helping hand to labour, in encouraging the formation of and protection of unions and combination of workmen. Every civilised State has supervised to strengthen the hands of Labour Unions and to make their collective bargaining more and more effective. Notwithstanding Sir Thomas Holland's speech in the Legislative Assembly two days ago against State intervention in favour of labour, I maintain that the statutes of every civilised country go to show that Legislation such as Trade Union Acts, Employers' Liability Acts, the Minimum Wages Act, the 48 Hours Bill, the Industrial Housing Act and the Conciliation and Arbitration Act were found absolutely necessary.

Sir, the charter of British labour dates from the passing of the Trade Union Act, 1876, making combination of labour for all non-violent purposes lawful, followed by a series of measures, as I have just mentioned, affecting not merely wages, but hours of labour, sanitary conditions, precautions against accidents, compensation for injuries and a host of other things which all civilised countries have adopted and which I call the mile posts in the road of labour emancipation. A number of legal assaults were made on Trade Unionism, e.g., the Taff Vale case in 1901, which decided that Trade Unions were liable for damage suffered by employers due to strikes by members of such unions. This, however, was reversed by the Trade Disputes Act, 1908, known as the Magna Charta of British labour, which declared that no civil action could lie against Trade Union officials. The second assault on Trade Unionism, known as the Osborne Judgment, delivered in the House of Lords by three great Law Lords, contested the right of Trade Unions to spend money for political propaganda or payment of salaries to Labour members of Parliament. The Trade Union Act of 1913 nullified the effect of the Osborne Judgment, legalised picketing during strikes on an extensive scale, and the levy of fees for political purposes. The Whitley Councils were inaugurated in 1917 to discuss wages, technical education and legislation affecting industry, and their later developments are full of significance. The Unemployment Insurance Acts have also come into force. The National Industrial Council summoned by Mr. Lloyd George in 1919 decided in favour of a legal maximum of 8 hours a day work and the statutory Minimum Wages Commission. Latest development, viz., international labour-protection has been discussed in the League of Nations which repudiates the inhuman idea of labour to be treated as merchandise, and affirms its humanitarian principles, and directs legislation to that effect all over the civilised world. Its immediate effect was the Washington Conference which will be followed by the coming Conference at Geneva. I urge that a Committee be formed, of the composition suggested by Mr. Kerr, and accepted by me, to enquire into the causes of strikes within the last seven or eight months, and to get evidence from representatives of employers and employees affected by those strikes and also from experts.

The primary cause of these strikes, as we all know, is economic, viz., demand for increased wages. Some employers still persist in maintaining that wages must be regulated by demand and supply of labour or, in other words, that labour must be treated as merchandise, like so many head of cattle. They are not moved by convincing facts, as clear as daylight, that the increased cost of living as we are facing to-day must be met by grant of increased wages. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, in reply to my question, told us the other day, that the cost of feeding, clothing, etc., even a jail prisoner has gone up 60 per cent. since 1914, and the Director of Statistics has given figures to indicate that the increased cost of living is 70 per cent. since 1914. My own inquiry through the Employees' Association, with a membership of 5,000 clerks, shows that the cost has actually gone up 110 per cent., including new necessities of life, which have raised our workers' standard of comfort and activities. Sir, the official figures, given in "Prices and Wages in India," published by the Department of Statistics, leave no doubt in our minds that the great bulk of our labouring population was not paid fair wages, and was consequently discontented. On page 180 of the Official Statistics of "Prices and Wages," table No. 22 shows that Tittagarh Paper Mills paid Rs. 7 to a woman worker, Rs. 17 to a bricklayer and Rs. 29 to a blacksmith per month in 1914. In 1918, when the cost of living was up by 50 per cent. a Tittagarh woman-worker got the same wages as in 1914, a bricklayer got Rs. 16, i.e., Re. 1 less and a blacksmith got Rs. 28, i.e., Re. 1 less. On page 182 of the same report we find that the British Navigation Company paid to a Calcutta Lascar (seaman) Rs. 17 a month in 1914 and has not increased a pice in 1918. The East Indian Railway Company paid Rs. 15 a month to carpenters in 1914, and raised it to Rs. 17.5 in 1918, viz., an increase of not even 15 per cent. The Department of Statistics has not published 1919 and 1920 figures of wages, but I will give you some figures and facts relating to coal mining as a result of my personal inquiry.

Official figures show (page 183 of "Prices and Wages") that a Miner in a Raniganj colliery received on an average Rs. 11.2 per month in 1914, and it was increased to Rs. 13.5 in 1918. He draws now according to the new scale of wages, that has come in force about two months ago, about Rs. 15 a month, based on 10 annas per tub of coal raised or about Re. 1 per ton of coal. In other words the Miners' wages increased from Rs. 11 to Rs. 15 since 1914 not even 50 per cent. I have purposely chosen the Coal industry, as the details of that industry are easily understood by many, and specially because coal is a vital and essential industry on which depend all other industries and the very fabric of our social comfort. The coal miners of Bengal, known as "malkata," work under almost brutal conditions. Underground work under the insufferable Indian heat and the general insanitation above ground, as well as excessive drinking and debauchery as a reaction against the fatigue and overstrain, almost make a beast of a miner. It is often contended that Indian labour is not efficient. I find, however, that an Indian miner is in no way inferior to his fellow-worker in Europe, and decidedly superior to a Japanese miner. An Indian miner, according to official statistics, raises on an average 118.8 tons of coal per year in Bengal, whereas a Jap raises only 96.0 tons per year, and a Belgian miner, noted for his mining skill, mines 130 tons a year. A British miner is credited with 226 tons per year. He has not only hereditary skill in mining, but has also the full advantage of the use of the best mining tools and implements known to the trade. As for wages, a Belgian gets 10 times, a Japanese five times, and a British miner gets nearly 15 times the wages of an Indian miner per ton of coal raised. The poor Indian miner, with his rupee a ton as wages, gets looted first by the raising contractors; secondly, by the foodstuffs and cloth-dealers; and what is left goes to drink and debauchery, the only sedatives and palliatives he can think of under the present mining conditions. As regards sanitation official figures show that there were 3,511 cases of cholera and 1,863 deaths and 2,024 deaths from influenza in 1919 in Bengal Coal districts. Fatal accidents in Bengal Coal mines numbered 260 in 1919 the highest on record since 1910. The mine-owners are now getting Rs. 8 to Rs. 10 a ton and more for coal at pit's mouth, for which they pay only Re. 1 per ton to the poor miner. Why not improve his environment, remove his temptation, raise his standard of living, provide healthy amusements, start co-operative stores, friendly and provident societies to encourage and invest the savings out of increased wages which should be granted? Why not adopt as a permanent solution of mining wages problem the sliding scale system; pay him according to the selling price of coal, say one-third according to the quality of coal raised. There are other causes besides economic at the bottom of a few of these strikes. The employers' personal supervision of labour in the good old days, when loyalty and sympathy were the key-notes of the mutual relation of employers and employees, is gone, and impersonal management by paid managers without human sympathy is being substituted. Two or three very recent strikes were due to this factor. In some cases refusal to reinstate a particular employee, dismissed by the management, has brought about strikes. I know of cases also when strikes were declared, as holidays for festivals and religious ceremonies were refused. Strikes have been declared to my knowledge because of the refusal on the part of the management to recognise newly-formed unions. Sir, I appeal to the hon'ble members here, who represent our great industries, not to discourage such unions, however defective they may be at their infancy. The late Sir William Mather, M.P., one of the leading manufacturers, said: "We, employers, owe more than we are inclined to admit to the improvements in our methods of manufacture, due to the firmness and independence of Trade Unions. The energy and pertinacity of Trade Unions have caused Acts of Parliament to be passed, which would not otherwise have been promoted by employers or politicians, all of which have tended to improve British Commerce." In fact these new unions and their spokesmen will help in future to avert strikes, which come about as quick as lightning. There is a good deal of talk about outside influence and pressure being brought into these strikes. They are, Sir, in my opinion, inevitable, as the vast majority of our workers are inarticulate and incompetent to bargain with employers. These outside men, some of whom are prompted by the best of motives and are men of great self-sacrifice, have given money and advice ungrudgingly during critical stages of strikes, as for example, during the Taxi, Gas and Tramway strikes. These men should be invited to make their suggestions to the proposed Committee. It is true that there are very exceptional cases, as in the collieries, where political motives prompted outside men to interfere, and the lightning strikes thus engineered failed miserably, and the strikers had to pay the penalty of being subdued by starvation. A piece of warning must be issued to Labour leaders and to those who are coquetting with labour, that there is a strong movement on foot for a union of employers, not only to combat strikes, but also to resort to lockouts, which will mean starvation to thousands. Anyway the question before us is—what are the likely methods to be adopted to avoid such strikes or expedite their termination when they do come about? Sir, so far settlement of strikes are concerned, I advocate some such legislation as for example the Conciliation and Arbitration

Act of British Columbia, which prohibits a combined stoppage of work in many industrial and agricultural undertakings, until conciliation has been attempted in the following manner:—

- (1) Settlement by direct negotiation between the employer and a delegation of three workmen.
- (2) If the attempt fails, recourse must be had to conciliation by a third person nominated by both parties and, when no agreement is arrived at, recourse must be had to arbitration, which is compulsory in undertakings such as transport (land and water), viz., tramways, railways, steam boats, etc; public lighting, water-supply, urban hygiene and sanitation.

In this no stoppage of works takes place, when the arbitration award is pending. Nevertheless, if the stoppage does take place, the Government is empowered to take over the management. The Act provides penalties for infringement of its provisions and for obstruction of conciliation and arbitration proceedings.

Sir, what will happen in Calcutta if one fine morning in summer you find your water-tap ceases to flow, or that the whole city is in darkness, as happened not long ago, or, as is threatened now, that our railways ceased to work because of this new spasm of industrial insurrection. It is no longer a question of what will happen any more. It has happened in Howrah and its neighbourhood. Terrorism of the worst kind has paralysed train services; thousands of daily passengers were at their wits' ends; confusion and disorder ruled supreme; ignorant, unprotected, unguided and unorganised Indian labour ran amok, assisted by bud-mashes, and gave rather an uneasy time to Gurkhas and the minions of the law.

I maintain, Sir, if we had a machinery to deal with these people to induce them to come to conciliation and arbitration, these chaotic conditions, such as we find to-day, would not have appeared at all. Conciliation and arbitration may be distasteful to Capitalists in Bengal, but our labour, as has been amply demonstrated in the case of the taxi and tramways strikes, will make full use of it before downing their tools or creating lightning strikes. If these legislations may take a long time to materialise in the Imperial Assembly, let us have in the meantime district Wages and Conciliation Councils as, and if, the proposed committee decide. These are my observations which I commend to you and I thank you for giving me a patient hearing.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): In the present state of industrial unrest in Bengal, this resolution is probably one of the most important that has been brought before the Council so far. I have been in communication with the mover of the resolution, and also with Mr. Watson-Smyth, because it seemed to me that it would be useless to have a committee of inquiry of this kind unless both employers and employees could be induced to join. Mr. Watson-Smyth has consulted the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, of which he is now the President, and he tells me that the Committee of the Chamber are in favour of an inquiry by a committee, so constituted as to include representatives of both employers and employees. His Excellency the Governor has welcomed this co-operation on the part of the Chamber of Commerce, and is prepared to appoint a committee to deal with this question, provided this resolution is passed in a slightly modified form. The form we suggest is: "This Council recommends to the Government that a committee be formed to inquire into the causes of the recent strikes of workmen in Bengal, and advise what remedial measures should be adopted."

It will be observed that we suggest cutting out of the resolution the detailed proposal regarding its constitution, because we do not consider it altogether suitable, and we may, and very probably shall, find that it will be advisable to ask one or two gentlemen who are not members of this Council, to join the committee.

In the second place, we have put in the words "in Bengal," because of course, we are only authorised to inquire into the Bengal position, and we have cut out the last few words, because experience in other countries suggests that the best way of allaying industrial unrest, is not for Government to intervene directly. The best work of Government in this matter has probably been to bring employers and employees, both parties, together, and to enable them to discuss their differences in a calm and friendly atmosphere.

Well, in view of the contemplated appointment of this committee, I do not propose to go into any details at present, or to discuss any controversial questions; I will only say that, as to the causes of recent strikes in Bengal, there has just been published in the first number of the Journal of Indian Labour, a very interesting article by Mr. Meek, the Director of Industries, on the strikes that have unfortunately occurred in this province during the last eight months. That information we shall, of course, be prepared to place before the committee in its fullest details as a basis for working.

As to the exact constitution of the committee, I shall have to take the orders of His Excellency the Governor, who has not yet returned from Dacca, but I may say that the sort of committee that is contemplated is a committee consisting of two members of this Council representing labour, two representatives of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and perhaps one or two other Indian gentlemen, together with an impartial Government officer as Chairman,

I hope that this committee may be able to unite in putting forward practical proposals for allaying the present state of industrial unrest, but, even if their conclusions are not unanimous, I have no doubt that the discussions will be extremely useful as bringing out the different points of view, and enabling differences of opinion to be clearly stated and understood by both parties. Government, as I have said, are prepared to accept the resolution in the form which I have read out.

Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: I accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT: The mover of the resolution asks for permission to amend his resolution. This permission may be given.

The discussion will now proceed on the motion as amended.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I welcome this resolution. It is advisable first, to undertake inquiries, and secondly, to decide upon measures to be taken by the committee of inquiry.

Two years ago this suggestion was made to the Bengal Legislative Council, but nothing was done. Of the several laws which prevail in Bengal, there is only one, section 492 of the Indian Penal Code, which may deal with such matters, but it has a limited scope, and it deals only with contract of service. The author of that Act did not anticipate strikes that have recently occurred. Then there is another Indian Act XIII of 1859, passed before the Indian Penal Code came into operation. It has also a limited scope. As the law stands, it is very difficult to meet the situation which arises almost every day. In 1870 the question arose in England, and we find several Acts were passed. I may mention the Act of 1875, which dealt with the prevention and protection of property. Now that Act was interpreted in a very curious way. Subsequently Lord Coleridge gave a wider interpretation of the several sections, but he legalised the strikes to some extent under the provisions of that Act. Whatever it may be, my view is that the committee will have to consider whether there should be a law protecting the workmen and their employers. Such a law is necessary for the good of the country. Anyone who was in a railway compartment two days ago will agree with me that action ought to be taken by Government at once. I was one of the passengers in that train, and I made up my mind to come to the Government and plead for some action in this direction, but it does not look well that at every stage Government interference should be asked. When there was the tramway strike questions were put in Council, and applications were made to Government to intervene. When there is a railway strike Government is asked to intervene. It is not necessary that at every strike Government interference should be asked: there should be one procedure, be it is a procedure of arbitration or a procedure to be laid down by a Magistrate, or summary legislation. Let there be one definite procedure. We find that in this country there is no central authority; therefore, I consider that it is necessary that some such authority should be constituted.

There are associations which are recognised. There are also associations which are not recognised. Any body in the name of the public comes forward and says that he is a representative by mandate. But had there been a Trade Union here, as in England, the whole difficulty could be solved. But, Sir, these are matters which are to be considered hereafter. If this resolution is passed, great relief will be given to workmen. It will partially solve the bread problem. It is a problem concerning the wages of men who work in mills and in mines in the coal districts. There ought to be a conciliatory policy in this matter, and the problem can only be solved by taking vigorous steps in this connection. Leaving aside that question, if you, gentlemen of this Council, could stand in the position of the miners of the coal districts, I am sure you will welcome this resolution. They have no houses, and, when I put a question to the Council regarding the housing of the miners, that question was not satisfactorily answered. The Behar Government has taken up the matter and we find that they have arranged a good deal for the housing of the miners there. All these questions will come up for discussion before the Committee and the Committee, I am sure, will be in a position to advise what further steps are to be taken in this matter. I do, very gladly and whole-heartedly support the resolution, and I say once more, that there ought not to be any dissentient voice and the resolution be passed.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: As there has been no opposition to this resolution, I do not think much need be said about it. I will just say a word or two. There have, unfortunately, been many strikes lately, and one thing seems to strike me as rather peculiar that neither the employers nor the employees, in their natural anxiety to look after their own interests, have considered the case of the public at large. In a matter like this, I think the public have also something to say. During the recent taxi strike, we know what difficulty the public had to put up with—so much so that the Automobile Association had to hold a public meeting in the Town Hall to devise means to get rid of the strike. During the recent tramway strike, we also know, for more than four weeks, what great trouble the poor classes, the middle classes and others using the trams had to undergo, and nobody came to intervene. During the recent Lillooah strike, we know that the innocent passengers were put to great trouble and were molested in many cases. We know that at Kalighat, blood has been shed. It is a matter still under judicial enquiry, so I cannot say what I want to say about this business. But these strikes are proving a source of great trouble and annoyance to the public, and I shall only suggest that in forming this committee, the Government will be good enough to see that gentlemen, having the confidence of the public, should also find place in this committee. With these few words, I beg to support this resolution.

Mr. HUSEYN SHAHEED SUHRAWARDY: After the acceptance of the resolution by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr and the pathetic speech of Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur, there is very little for anybody to speak on the subject. I only wish to congratulate the hon'ble member who has moved this resolution and to congratulate Government upon having accepted it so gracefully, because the time is ripe. I do not wish to act as the unseemly seer, but things are not well with us, and Government will do well, and we should do well, as soon as possible to try our best and pay more regard to the condition of the labourer, not from the point of view of the inconvenience, which these strikes cause to the public, but from the point of view of the labourers themselves and the disaster and misery they and theirs have to suffer in the assertion even of their just claims.

Mr. W. L. CAREY: I am very glad to support the amended resolution, and I am sure most large employers of labour would do the same, that a committee be appointed to see if means can be found to deal with labour unrest of all kinds. I think there is no large employer of labour, who has not given much thought to the subject. We would welcome any really workable measure, which would give us the assurance that the just demands of labour will be met, and that such strikes as are without cause will be shown to be so. As one who knows the conditions in the coal districts, I beg to say that these conditions are not such as have been represented. They might have been so at one time, but most, in fact all, large collieries have, on their own initiative, and working hand in hand with the various bodies and boards appointed by Government, spent large sums of money in housing, sanitation, in starting shops and making food arrangements, controlling drink, free water-supply, hospitals and medicines, and so on. These have made the conditions of labour generally far better. I do not say of course that they are yet absolutely all that they should be. These kinds of measures take a little time to work out. Public companies have to spend out of their reserve and other funds available, as they find they can year by year, without damaging the future prospects of their companies. But everything, that I think is humanly possible up to the present, has been done. I beg to support the amended resolution.

Raja MANIROLL SINGH ROY: The condition of the workers, as proclaimed by Mr. Chaudhuri and Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur, is not so bad, as I know from my own personal experience. As one connected intimately with the district of Burdwan, I had occasion to visit the place several times, and I have seen that the managers do take real interest in their labourers. There is a body called the Mines Board of Health, and since its inauguration the sanitary condition of the place has changed immensely for the better.

Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: Since the resolution has been accepted, I have got very little to say in reply, except that I would refer Mr. Carey to certain books—perhaps he has got them in his own office—the “Report on the production and consumption of Coal,” as well as “Prices and Wages,” issued by the Director of Statistics office. From these books it will be seen that the coal-miners are the worst paid among the industrial workers in Bengal. Mr. Carey says that the sanitary condition has been improved in the coal districts. It is true that the Mining Board of Health are doing their share of the work, but the miners are not represented in those Boards. I do not mean to say that the illiterate miners should be members of the Board, but what I mean is that persons, who take an interest in the miners, should represent them there, and it is high time that they are so represented. There is, for example, a Swami in Rangaj who used to belong to the Ramkrishna Mission and who has founded a Workmen's Association. He may be taken into confidence by colliery owners, especially as he has got no political motive. Mr. Carey has said that drink has been brought under control in the coal districts, but evidence does not prove it. As a matter of fact anybody, who can pay, can get drink. There is no question of restriction of any kind. Mr. Carey said that, as far as is humanly possible, all has been done. I am very doubtful about this. Of course something has been done, and the capitalists have done that because healthier labour means better income for them. But Sir, there is such a thing as the human factor in the labour question. I do not see why labourers should not be treated as human beings and not merely as so many head of cattle, because there is apparently a plentiful supply of them. I would ask the owners of collieries to fix their wages according to a definite standard. The sliding scale system has been accepted in iron and other trades in England. If the coal prices go up, then the labourer ought to be given something more. They may be paid in proportion to the prices of coal, but I cannot pass an opinion as to what scale should be adopted. When the prices of coal go up, you do not raise the labourers' wages, and you do not pay any attention to their condition, unless there is a strike, and it is only then that you realise that the wages have got to be raised. Sir, I am very glad that my resolution has been accepted.
